VOL. XXII. ST. JOE, DEKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, WEDNESDAY, JAN. 1, 1908. NO. 1

City Fathers Meet.

Monday evening was the time for the regular meeting of the town dads and at seven o'clock the meeting was called to order by the president and after the general preliminaries the general order of business was taken up and disposed of as follows:—A bill of $60.00 was allowed Marshal Bleeks for services from June 1st. to Jan. 1st and a bill of $90 was allowed Harry Kees for gravel. S. W. Tustison tendered his resignation as town treasurer and the same was accepted and Harry Milliman was appointed to fill the unexpired term. W. C. Pattersons term of office as a member of the school board expires with the old year, and S. W. Tustison was elected as his successor to the exalted position. Adjournment was then taken for two weeks.

A Cure for Misery.

"I have found a cure for the misery malaria poison produces," says R. M. James, of Louellen, S. C. "It's called Electric Bitters, and comes in 50 cent bottles. It breaks up a case of chills or a bilious attack in almost no time; and it puts yellow jaundice clean out of commission." This great tonic medicine and blood purifier gives quick relief in all stomach, liver and kidney complaints and the misery of lame back. Sold under guarantee at H. Milliman's drug store.

From Rev. Myers.

Following we reproduce a portion of a letter from Rev. Myers, a former minister of the Christian church at this place, now located at Los Angeles Cal., to J. C. Hull.

"We are having fine summer weather, in fact that is about all the kind we have in this country. I am now on my fourth year with this church and it looks as if I would be here indefinitely. The church made me a very fine birthday present the 10th of last month, in the shape of a fine horse and surrey. Of course, I appreciated it very much indeed. There have been added to the church in just 38 months 475 new members. So you see that I have not been idle. We had a revival meeting about two months ago that resulted in 195 additions, it was the greatest meeting ever held in California. We have almost 400 in our Sunday School. Our resident membership now is about 550 of course there are many more but are not living in the city. I intended to make a trip back east this summer, but found it impossible to do so on account of my work. I trust that if I live I shall be able to do so next year."

Why Suffer From Rheumatism?

Do you know that rheumatic pains can be relieved? If you doubt this just try one application of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It will make rest and sleep possible and that means a great deal to any one afflicted with rheumatism. For sale by H. Milliman, St. Joe; F. R. Bowman, Spencerville.

Christmas Gathering.

One of the pleasant events of Christmas time was the annual Christmas dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Chris Curie, which was enjoyed by the children and grandchildren of the family. After dinner was served, every one was invited to the parlor where music, games and recitations were indulged in, about this time Santa Claus made his appearance with his treat of two huge baskets of popcorn, candy and nuts. A beautiful tree graced the center of the room ladened with presents for young and old. A very enjoyable time was had until late in the day, when all returned to their home wishing the advent of Christmas time might come more than once a year. Mr. Curie favored THE NEWS force with a large sack of candy for which we return many thanks.

All kind of post cards at MILLIMAN'S Barber shop.

Mr. and Mrs. Guy Dill of Pierston, spent Christmas with C. R. Price and wife. Mr. Dill is a brother of Mrs. Price.

Jacob Curie of Orville, Ohio. stopped here for a short visit with his brother, Chris Curie and wife, last week, on his way home from Michigan.

Wedding Bells.

Moudy-Koch.

A pretty country wedding occured at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Koch near St. Joe, Xmas evening at eight o'clock. The contracting parties being their daughter, Edna and Mr. W. E. Moudy of Butler.

Both parties are well known. The bride is a graduate of the St. Joe High School, and has been a teacher for two years in the public schools of Wilmington Twp. The groom has also been a teacher for several years in the same township, and is at present, Co. Supt., of Bible Instruction in the Normal Department. The guests numbered about fifty. At promptly eight o'clock, Miss Blanche Lautzenhiser took her place at the piano and played the beautiful wedding march to which the bride and groom with their attendants, Mr. Walter Moudy, brother of the groom acting as best man, and Miss Nellie Scholes of St. Joe, as bride's maid, all beautifully attired, marched to the place in the parlor, where the impressive ceremony was performed by Elder Fred Thomas of Newville. During the ceremony Miss Lautzenhiser played very softly, "Nearer My God To The." Mr. and Mrs. Elder Fred Thomas then sang two very appropriate selections, after which they repaired to the dining room, where a sumptuous three course supper was served.

Those present were: Messrs. and Mesdames Dr. Sheffer, Joseph Koch, John Koch, Chas. Koch and daughter Opal, Robert Ulm and Miss Nellie Scholes of St. Joe. The groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Moudy, David Moudy, Blanche Lautzenhiser, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Rose of Butler, D. R. Mathews, wife and grandson, and Miss Mary Hoffman of Auburn. A. L. Moudy and wife of Waterloo, J. F. Moudy wife and three daughters of Hartford City, William Hathaway wife and son and Velva Oberlin of Toledo, Walter Moudy of Englewood, Chicago, Chas. Moudy and wife of Ft. Wayne, Mr. and Mrs. James Coleman, Mr. and Mrs Frank Johnson, Frank Sebert, wife and daughter Mildred, H. S. Platner, wife and daughters Joy and Jessie.

During the evening, little Bernice Moudy of Hartford City, gave three choice recitations which were greatly appreciated.

The day following, the groom's parents gave an infair dinner, which was attended by the parents and grandparents of the bride, the brothers and sisters of the groom, Messrs. and Mesdames, Jacob Paulen, Perry Carnahan Frank Johnson, A. V. Smith, Thomas McNamara, Miss Lautzenhiser and Miss Oberlin. The couple were the recepients of many beautiful and useful presents.

They will soon be in their new home near Moore's Station, where Mr. Moudy is engaged in school work.

Aches AND Pains.

fall to the lot of each of us. But while some of us "grin and bear" them, others try simple but effective means of easing or curing them. The humble hot water has relieved more cases of neuralgia, toothache, colic and kindred pains that we ever dreamed of. Our hot water bottles are odorless, cleanly, convenient and will last for years. There is absolutely no one remedy that will render better service—save more pains and doctor bills—than a first-class hot water bottle. The first cost is all there is to it—no prescriptions to have refilled, etc. Once bought it is always there ready for use. Don't you think you need a good one right now?

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Telegraphic Information Gathered by the Few for the Enlightenment of the Many.

Died of Disease He Studied.

Dr. Joseph F. Piesen, of Chicago, died of lockjaw, resulting from a fracture of the nose. Dr. Piesen recently fell down a stairway and the skin over the nose was broken, the wound becoming infected with tetanus germs. On Christmas eve, the physician was suddenly stricken with lockjaw. He diagnosed his own case and directed his family to send him to a hospital He then sent for a lawyer and made his will. During his illness he constantly joined with the hospital physicians in their consultations and gave it as his opinion several days ago that he could not recover. The immediate cause of death was said to be heart failure, following a convulsion.

Big Blaze in San Francisco.

Fire destroyed nearly the entire block bounded by Mission, Jessie, First and Second streets in San Francisco, Cal. Several factories and stores were burned out and the loss will amount to more than $200,000. Most of the buildings destroyed were only temporary affairs, so that the loss was principally in stocks carried by the firms involved. The Revere Rubber Company suffered heavily, and it is believed will prove a total loss. The factory of Mangum & Otter, dealers in tiles and mantles, was destroyed, with the stock.

Bankrupt Man a Suicide.

Ernest G. Stedman, vice president and a director of the J. C. Lyons Building and Operating Company, against which a petition in bankruptcy was filed last week, committed suicide in New York City by jumping in front of a subway train at the Fourteenth street station. The fatality occurred during the rush hours, precipitating a panic among the hundreds of waiting passengers. Women became hysterical and it was with difficulty that the crowd was controlled by the subway police.

Wreck on Lake Shore.

Passenger train No. 228 on the Jefferson and Franklin branch of the Lake Shore road, collided with a light freight engine two miles north of Franklin, Pa. The passenger train was derailed and both engines demolished. Passenger Fireman Wm. J. Daly, of Ashtabula, was killed. Conductor Wm. Miles, of Oil City, and Engineers H. C. Tombes and T. E. Evans, of Ashtabula, were injured. Many passengers were slightly hurt.

Admiral Dewey Seventy Years Old.

A dispatch from Washington, D. C., says: Admiral George Dewey was 70 years old Thursday. He is in splendid health and robust in physique. As is his custom he spent the morning at his office with the exception of an hour, which he spent at a meeting of the Naval Relief Association, of which he is president.

Wreck on the B. & O.

There was a bad wreck in the B. & O. yards at Chicago Junction, Ohio. While the passenger train, No. 46, was about to depart for New Castle, a cut-off car came down upon it, completely demolishing the engine, No. 1451. Geo. Reifsnider, the fireman, of New Castle, was caught under his engine and scalded to death.

$150,000 Fire in Chicago.

Fire badly damaged the five-story building at 72-80 Lake street, Chicago, Ill., causing a loss of about $150,000 on the structure and a number of small manufacturing concerns that occupied it. The fire spread so rapidly that some of the occupants had narrow escapes.

346 Victims of Monongah Mine.

Four more bodies have been recovered from the Monongah mines at Fairmount, W. Va., making the total up to date 346. Besides one man died from injuries received outside the mines and a rescuer died from gas inhaled in the mine.

WORK OF CONGRESS

Resolutions were introduced in the Senate Wednesday by Senator Tillman asking the interstate commerce commission to report whether any corporation engaged in interstate commerce was the owner of the stock of any other corporation transporting passengers and freight and calling upon the interstate commerce commission to define the authority of the federal government and of the States in respect to the control of the liquor traffic through the operation of the interstate commerce law. Senator Culberson spoke on his resolution calling on the committee on finance to investigate and report upon the cause of the present financial stringency. The resolution was referred to the committee on finance. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

The Senate was not in session Thursday. Prime interest in the session of the House centered in the announcement by Speaker Cannon of the appointment of the various committees. Many bills of importance were introduced. An unsuccessful effort was made to block the erection of the statue to Gen. Grant at the expense of a number of historic trees. Adjournment was taken until Saturday.

The Senate, at the instance of Mr. Teller, passed a bill Saturday, suspending for the year 1907 the requirement that $100 worth of labor shall be done on all mining claims in course of perfection. Senator Cullom introduced a joint resolution providing that the presidential term shall be six years, and that the President shall be ineligible for re-election. It was referred to the Committee on Judiciary. Senator Scott introduced a joint resolution providing for a commission to investigate recent mine disasters. Senator Warner introduced a bill creating the rank of vice admiral in the navy. Adjournment was taken to Jan. 6. The House was in session but twenty minutes, most of the time being occupied by a protest of Representative Gaines against adjournment over the holidays. Adjournment, however, was taken until Jan. 6.

NATIONAL CAPITAL NOTES.

The President sent to the Senate the nomination of Frederick H. Magdeburg to be pension agent at Milwaukee.

Representative Ansberry of Ohio introduced a bill providing for the survey of a ship canal to connect Toledo and Chicago.

A bill making it a felony for a national bank or any of its officers to speculate with the funds of the bank was introduced by Representative De Armond of Missouri.

The commissioner of Indian affairs, in his annual report, urged that laws be passed giving the more progressive Indians greater freedom in the management of their affairs.

Secretary Metcalf sent a letter of reproof to Justice Delacy of the Juvenile Court, who recently discharged a boy accused of theft on condition that he enlist in the navy.

The Ohlson-Mahoney Lumber Company of San Francisco was the lowest bidder on 6,000,000 feet of lumber for the Isthmian canal commission, offering to deliver it for $124,372.

Representative Perkins of New York reintroduced his inheritance tax bill so amended that one-half of the tax collected should go to the State and the other to the government.

Word was received from Pensacola, Fla., that Senator Mallory, who is seriously ill there, would not be a candidate for re-election, and planned to retire from public life on account of his health.

Robert L. Owen and Thomas P. Gore, the two new Senators from Oklahoma, were sworn in the other day. Senator Owen, by lot, secured the six-year term, and Senator Gore the two-year term.

Oct. 12 will be a national holiday, known as "Discovery day," in honor of the discovery of America Oct. 12, 1492, if a bill introduced in the House of Representative Goulden of New York becomes a law.

Representative Burgess of Texas introduced a resolution calling for the appointment by the President of a banking and currency commission to hold public hearings in New York, Chicago and other large cities.

Representative McKinley of Illinois introduced a bill appropriating $30,000 a year for each of the land grant colleges maintaining schools of engineering, in addition to the $55,000 annually now given to the agricultural experiment stations.

A resolution charging the Secretary of Agriculture with inaccuracy in estimating this year's cotton crop, and calling on him to furnish to Congress "the figures and the information upon which he based his estimate," was introduced in the House.

A bill creating in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau of transportation to take off the shoulders of the interstate commerce commission all save the larger matters requiring the exercise of the judicial function was introduced by Representative Stevens of Minnesota.

Representative John Sharp Williams of Mississippi introduced the old Blaine bill to admit into all ports of the United States free of duty all products of the American hemisphere upon which no export duties are imposed, whenever such nation shall admit to its ports free certain United States products.

GRAIN CROPS SHORT, BUT WORTH FAR MORE

Government Final Estimate Shows Great Decline in Cereal Production.

PRICES MAKE FARMERS HAPPY.

They Will Get Half a Billion of Dollars More This Year than Last.

The government report shows a shortage of 783,387,000 bushels in total crops as compared with the crops of 1906, which were the largest ever raised in this country, and a shortage of 377,287,000 bushels as compared with the yields of 1905, which were also very large.

The chief shortage is in the corn crop, with 335,000,000 bushels, oats with 211,000,000 bushels and wheat with 101,000,000 bushels.

There is something of an offset to the big losses in the feeding grains in the increase of 6,431,000 tons of hay as compared to that of 1906, and of 3,045,388 tons as compared to the crop of 1905.

Prominent features of the final revision of its crop estimates for the year by the Department of Agriculture were the increases made in the reports of area seeded to spring wheat, corn and oats. In each of these particulars as well as in the estimated weight of spring wheat and oats the official reports ran more or less counter to the general impressions of speculators. In a few instances, such as the weight of oats, the figures given were at variance with all the experiences of the trade for the year to date.

Figures of the Report.

The report gave final estimates of acreage, production and value of farm crops, showing winter wheat acreage to be 28,132,000, production 409,442,000 bushels and value per bushel 88.2 cents.

Spring wheat acreage was 17,079,000, production 224,645,000 bushels and value 86 cents.

Corn acreage was 99,931,000, production 2,592,320,000 bushels and value 51.7 cents.

Oats acreage was 31,837,000, production 754,443,000 bushels and value 44.3 cents.

It was announced that the total value of the farm crops for 1907 was $3,404,000,000, an increase of $428,000,000 for 1906.

The farm value on Dec. 1 of the four crops already mentioned follows: Corn, $1,340,446,000; winter wheat, $361,217,000; spring wheat, $193,220,000; oats, $334,508,000.

The comparative prices for the grain crops for the past three years follow:

Wheat	81.7	66.7	74.8	92.4
Corn	51.7	39.9	41.2	44.1

FARMING IN A DESERT.

There Are Colonizing Possibilities Even in Death Valley.

The craze of "homestaking" which is seems to have reached its limit in the choice of Death Valley as a colonizing possibility. With the idea of transforming the most arid and most desolate portion of the great American desert into farm land, a number of tracts have been homestaked, irrigation systems have been planned, and other preparations are now in progress for beginning the reclamation of Death Valley. A railroad is already built from Greenwater, at the southern end of the valley, to the borax works owned by the celebrated "Borax" Smith of 20-mule team fame, and there is an automobile stage line through the valley.

Even enthusiasts do not claim that piping water from Telescope Peak across the Funeral range into the valley is also under consideration.

JEFF DAVIS' DEBUT.

Arkansas Senator Delivers Maiden Speech.

SENATOR DAVIS.

Breaking all traditions and precedents, United States Senator Jefferson Davis, of Arkansas, addressed his colleagues on "trust control of business," after nine days' service. Up to a few years ago it was an unwritten law that no Senator should address his fellows in a set speech unless he had served at least one term. Then Senator Beveridge reduced the time limit of senatorial apprenticeship by speaking after three months' occupation of a Senate seat. Davis' purpose to establish a new record had been widely advertised and there was a large crowd to hear him.

In 1898 Davis was Attorney General of Arkansas and, while in this position, secured the Democratic nomination for Governor. Although bitterly opposed by practically every newspaper in the State he was elected by one of the largest majorities ever given in Arkansas. Three times he was elected Governor. He is of a restless, nervous temperament, devoted to his family, an enthusiastic lover of books and a keen student of men. He is of fine appearance, being over six feet tall. His daughter is his constant companion and stenographer. Senator Davis is a nephew of the illustrious Southerner whose name he bears.

TWO NEW BATTLESHIPS.

Government New Building Largest in the World.

Coincident with the departure of the Atlantic fleet for the Pacific, there was laid down in the Fore River shipyard, at Quincy, Mass., the keel plates of the battleship North Dakota, which is expected to be far more powerful than the most effective ship now under the command of Rear Admiral Evans. The biggest vessel in the Pacific bound fleet is of 16,000 tonnage, but the North Dakota will be of 20,000 tons displacement; nearly 2,000 tons heavier than the famous Dreadnought, of the British navy, and 25 per cent more effective in gun-fire than the latter. The North Dakota will be 510 feet long.

It is already figured out that the launching will take place next October, or in ten months from the time of the laying of the keel. Although the keel was laid only recently the North Dakota is regarded as nearly 8 per cent finished. Long before the keel blocks were placed in position the ship was completely laid down in the mold-loft and over 50 per cent of all the plans in the construction of the ship were developed and approved.

The Comic Side of The News

Money is suffering from bad circulation.

Pennsylvania miser who spent only 3 cents last year is dead. He just couldn't bear the increase in living expenses.

An Aurora (Ill.) physician has discovered that peanuts are a beauty diet. This ought to be a circus for some people.

An Eastern banker says, "We want more common sense." We want also more dollars, which are not so common now.

If prices of bread and meat keep on coming down, pretty soon the average man can afford to eat three meals a day.

Chief Sprybuck, the Indian who drank a quart of blue paint, is carrying the "decorative interior" fad to an extreme.

With 1,300,000 divorce suits in ten years, the United States is plainly in need of a national "Stay-Married Association."

Secretary Cortelyou is trying to impress us with the fact that stockings were made to be worn and not to hoard money in.

James J. Hill says the railroads need millions of dollars. From present prospects, it will be some time before they get 'em.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

An improving tone appears in business circles, although actual recovery in activity is not looked for before a return to normal banking conditions is effected. Seasonable weather brought a heavier movement in the leading retail lines, and the absorption of necessaries and Christmas goods advanced to gratifying proportions, dealings generally reflecting a better disposition among buyers.

Wholesale branches mainly enter upon the usual quiet attending the close of the year, but there was a fair aggregate of demands for immediate delivery and satisfactory mail orders were received for spring merchandise. Mercantile collections show more promptness at western points, although extensions are not infrequently asked, particularly where the shortage of currency yet remains severe.

Defaults in this district again include none of special significance, and the number this month thus far is less than a year ago. Requests for accommodation in January increases and current settlements at the banks involve some renewals, but the financial exhibit required of borrowers discloses little disturbing weakness among manufacturers and distributers, and this creates a more confident feeling as a basis for future financing.

Money remains quoted at 7 per cent minimum on local loans required for forwarding of foodstuffs, but higher rates are made for commercial paper bought by outside banks. Augmentation of gold reserves and note circulation strengthens the situation and permits an expanding shipment of currency to the interior.

There is no decline in outputs of rails, wire and footwear, and there is better inquiry for pig iron, although some consumers hold for lower cost.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 23, against 18 last week and 25 a year ago. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 5, against 7 last week and 3 in 1906.—Dun's Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Holiday buying has had the center of the stage, and retail business has felt very perceptibly the influence of the spirit of the season. While much more marked than some time ago, however, the volume of retail buying as a whole is not up to expectations, and is certainly well below a year ago at this date. Sentiment as to the outlook for trade next year is very mixed.

Conditions in financial circles are still slowly but quite surely approaching normal. From the country at large there is reported a continued easing up of the situation as regards cash payments, and several cities are practically on a cash basis.

A very favorable feature in the present period of repression is the tendency toward enlargement of our export trade. This is most notable in the grain trade. Business failures for the week ending Dec. 19 number 298, against 284 last week, 227 in the like week of 1906, 235 in 1905, 249 in 1904 and 243 in 1903. Canadian failures for the week number 40, as against 50 last week and 26 in this week a year ago.—Bradstreet's Commercial Report.

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

A. CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER I.

The approach to the offices of Girdlestone & Co. was not a very dignified one. A narrow doorway opens into a long white-washed passage. On one side of this is a brass plate with the inscription, "Girdlestone & Co., African Merchants," and above it a curious hieroglyphic supposed to represent a human hand in the act of pointing. Following the guidance of this emblem, the wayfarer finds himself in a small square yard surrounded by doors, upon one of which the name of the firm reappears in large white letters, with the word "push" printed beneath it. If he follows this laconic invitation he will make his way into a long, low apartment, which is the counting house of the African traders.

On the afternoon of which we speak things were quiet at the offices. Misty London light shone hazily through the glazed windows and cast dark shadows in the corners. On a high perch in the background a weary-faced, elderly man, with muttering lips and tapping fingers, cast up endless lines of figures. Beneath him, in front of two long shining mahogany desks, half a score of young men appeared to be riding furiously, neck and neck, in the race of life. Any habitue of a London office might have deduced from their relentless energy and incorruptible diligence that they were under the eyes of some member of the firm.

The member in question leaned against the marble mantelpiece, turning over the pages of an almanac, and taking from time to time a stealthy peep over the top of it at the toilers around him. Command was imprinted in every line of his strong, square-set face and erect, powerful frame. There was something classical in the regular olive-tinted features and black, crisp, curling hair fitting tightly to the well-rounded head. Yet, though classical, there was an absence of spirituality. It was rather the profile of one of those Roman emperors, splendid in its animal strength, but lacking those subtle softnesses of eye and mouth which speak of an inner life. Such was Ezra, the only child of John Girdlestone, and the heir to the whole of his vast business.

The junior partner was silent, and the clerks were working uneasily. Their fears were terminated by the sharp sound of a table-gong and the appearance of a boy with the announcement that Mr. Girdlestone would like a moment's conversation with Mr. Ezra.

The sanctum of Mr. John Girdlestone was approached by two doors, one of oak with groundless panels, and the other covered with green baize. The room itself was small, but lofty, and the walls were ornamented by numerous sections of ships stuck upon long flat boards, very much as the remains of fossil fish are exhibited in museums. There were also several photographs of the various vessels belonging to the firm, together with maps, charts and lists of sailings innumerable. Above the fireplace was a large water-color painting of the barque Belinda as she appeared when on a reef to the north of Cape Palmas. An inscription beneath this work of art announced that it had been painted by the second officer and presented by him to the head of the firm. It was generally rumored that the merchants had lost heavily over this disaster, and there were some who quoted it as an instance of Girdlestone's habitual strength of mind that he should decorate his wall with so melancholy a souvenir.

John Girdlestone, as he sat at his square office table waiting for his son, was undeniably a remarkable looking man. For good or for evil no weak character lay beneath that hard angular face, with the strongly marked features and deep-set eyes.

He was known to be a fanatic in religion, a purist in morals, and a man of the strictest commercial integrity. Yet there were some few who looked askance at him, and none, save one, who could apply the word friend to him.

He rose and stood with his back to the fire as his son entered. He was so tall that he towered above the younger man, but the latter's square and compact frame made him, apart from the difference of age, the stronger man.

"There's news of the Black Eagle," he said. "She is reported from Madeira."

"Ah!" cried the junior partner eagerly. "What luck?"

"She is full, or nearly so, according to Captain Hamilton Miggs' report.

"I wonder Migga was able to send a report at all, and I wonder still more that you should put any faith in it," his son said impatiently. "The fellow is never sober."

"Miggs is a good seaman, and popular on the coast. He may indulge at times, but we all have our failings. Here is the list vouched for by our agent. 'Six hundred barrels of palm oil'——"

"Oil is down to-day," the other interrupted.

"It will rise before the Black Eagle arrives," the merchant rejoined confidently. "Then he has palm nuts in bulk, gum, ebony, skins, cochineal, and ivory. Ivory is a fancy figure. We are sorely in [illegible] a few good voyages, for things have been very slack of late. It is not upon this matter that I wanted to speak to you," Girdlestone continued. "It has, however, always been my practice to prefer matters of business to private affairs, however pressing. John Harston is said to be dying, and he has sent a message to me saying that he wishes to see me. It is inconvenient for me to leave the office just now, but I feel that it is my Christian duty to obey such a summons. I wish you, therefore, to look after things until I return."

"I can hardly believe that the news is true," Ezra said, in astonishment. "There must be some mistake. Why, I spoke to him on 'Change last Monday."

"It is very sudden," his father answered, taking his broad-brimmed hat from a peg. "There is no doubt about the fact, however. The doctor says that there is very little hope that he will survive until evening. It is a case of malignant typhoid fever."

"You are very old friends?" Ezra remarked, looking thoughtfully at his father.

"I have known him since we were boys together," the other replied. "Your mother, Ezra, died upon the very day that Harston's wife gave birth to this daughter of his seventeen years ago. Mrs. Harston only survived a few days."

"How will the money go if the doctors are right?" Ezra asked keenly.

"Every penny to the girl," the merchant answered. "She will be an heiress. There are no other relatives that I know of, except the Dimsdales, and they have a fair fortune of their own. But I must go."

The African merchant hailed a hansom and drove out to his friend's house at Fulham. He and Harston had been charity school boys together, had roughed it together, risen together, and prospered together. Harston, by incessant attention to business and extreme parsimony, had succeeded in founding an export trading concern. In this he had followed the example of his friend. There was no fear of their interests ever coming into collision, as his operations were confined to the Mediterranean. The firm grew and prospered, until Harston began to be looked upon as a warm man in the City circles. His only child was Kate, a girl of seventeen. There were no other near relatives, save Dr. Dimsdale, a prosperous West End physician.

Girdlestone pushed open the iron gate and strode down the gravel walk which led to his friend's house. A bright summer sun shining out of a cloudless heaven bathed the green lawn and the many-colored flower beds in its golden light. The air, the leaves, the birds, all spoke of life. It was hard to think that death was closing its grip upon him who owned them all. A plump little gentleman in black was just descending the steps.

"Well, doctor," the merchant asked, "how is your patient?"

"You've not come with the intention of seeing him, have you?" the doctor asked, glancing up with some curiosity at the grey face and overhanging eyebrows of the merchant. "It is a most virulent case of typhoid. He may die in an hour or he may live until nightfall, but nothing can save him. He will hardly recognize you, I fear, and you can do him no good. It is most infectious, and you are incurring a needless danger. I should strongly recommend you not to go."

"Why, you've only just come down from him yourself, doctor," John Girdlestone remarked.

"Ah, I'm there in the way of duty."

"So am I," said the visitor decisively, and passing up the stone steps of the entrance strode into the hall. There was a large sitting room upon the ground floor, through the open door of which the visitor saw a sight which arrested him for a moment. A young girl was sitting in a recess near the window, with her little, supple figure bent forward, and her hands clasped at the back of her head, while the elbows rested upon a small table in front of her. Her superb brown hair fell in a thick wave on either side over her white round arms. The doctor had just broken his sad tidings to her, and she was still in the first paroxysm of her grief—a grief too acute, as was evident even to the unsentimental mind of the merchant, to allow of any attempt at consolation. The merchant paused irresolutely for a moment, and then ascending the broad staircase he pushed open the door of Harston's room and entered.

The blinds were drawn down and the chamber was very dark. A pungent whiff of disinfectants issued from it, mingled with the dank, heavy smell of disease. The bed was in a far corner. Without seeing him, Girdlestone could hear the fast labored breathing of the invalid. A trimly dressed nurse who had been sitting by the bedside rose, and, recognizing the visitor, whispered a few words to him and left the room. He pulled the cord of the Venetian blind so as to admit a few rays of daylight. The great chamber looked dreary and bare, as carpets and hangings had been removed to lessen the chance of future infection. John Girdlestone stepped softly across to the bedside, and sat down by his dying friend. The latter turned his restless head round, and a gleam of recognition and gratitude came into his eyes.

"I knew you would come," he said.

"Yes, I came the moment I got your message."

"I am glad that you are here," the sufferer continued with a sign of relief. "I wish to speak to you. I am very weak. I have been making my will, John. Stoop your head and you will hear me better. I have less than fifty thousand. I should have done better had I retired years ago."

"I told you so," the other broke in gruffly.

"You did—you did. But I acted for the best. Forty thousand I leave to my daughter Kate."

A look of interest came over Girdlestone's face. "How about the balance?" he asked.

"I leave that to be equally divided among the various London institutions for educating the poor. We were both poor boys ourselves, John, and we know the value of such schools."

Girdlestone looked perhaps a trifle disappointed. The sick man went on very slowly and painfully:

"My daughter will have forty thousand pounds. But it is so tied up that she can neither touch it herself nor enable anyone else to do so until she is of age. She has no friends, John, and no relations, save only my cousin, Dr. George Dimsdale. Never was a girl left more lonely and unprotected. Take her, I beg of you, and bring her up under your own eye. Treat her as though she were your child. Guard her above all from those who would wreck her young life in order to share her fortune. Do this, old friend, and make me happy on my death-bed."

The merchant made no answer. His heavy eyebrows were drawn down, and his forehead all puckered with thought.

"You are the one man," continued the sufferer, "whom I know to be just and upright. Give me the water, for my mouth is dry. Should my dear girl perish before she marries, then, old friend, her fortune reverts to you, for there is none who will use it so well. Those are the terms of the will. But you will guard her and care for her, as I would myself. She is a tender plant, John, too weak to grow alone. Promise me that you will do right by her—promise it?"

"I do promise it," John Girdlestone answered in a deep voice. He was standing up now, and leaning over to catch the words of the dying man.

The sick man's head fell back exhausted upon his pillow. "Thank heaven," he muttered, "now I can die in peace."

"Turn your mind away from the vanities and dross of this world," John Girdlestone said sternly, "and fix it upon that which is eternal, and can never die."

"Are you going?" the invalid asked sadly, for he had taken up his and stick.

"Yes, I must go! I have an appointment in the city at six, which I must not miss. I shall send up the nurse as I go down," Girdlestone said. "Good-bye!"

"Good-by! Heaven bless you, John."

The firm, strong hand of the hale man enclosed for a moment the feeble burning one of the sufferer. Then John Girdlestone plodded heavily down the stair, and these friends of forty years' standing had said their last adieu.

The African merchant kept his appointment in the city, but long before he reached it John Harston had gone also to keep that last terrible appointment of which the messenger is death.

CHAPTER II.

"Come in," said Mr. Girdlestone. "Why, captain, I am glad to see you back safe and well."

"Glad to see ye, sir—glad to see ye."

The voice was thick and husky, and there was an indecision about his gait as though he had been drinking heavily. "I came in sort o' cautious," the owner continued, "'cause I didn't know who might be about. When you and me speaks together we likes to speak alone, you bet."

The merchant raised his bushy eyebrows a little, as though he did not relish the idea of mutual confidences suggested by his companion's remark. "Hadn't you better take a seat?" he said. "I must congratulate you on your cargo, and wish you the same luck for your next voyage," the merchant continued.

"Ivory, an' gold dust, an' skins, an' resin, an' cochineal, an' gums, an' ebony, an' rice, an' tobacco, an' fruits, an' nuts in bulk. If there's a better cargo about I'd like to see it," the sailor said defiantly. "Say, now, weren't you surprised to see us come back—eh? Straight now, between man and man?"

"The old ship hangs together well, and has lots of work in her yet," the merchant answered.

"Lots of work! I thought she was gone in the bay! We'd a dirty night with a gale from the west-sou'west, an' had been goin' by dead reckonin' for three days, so we weren't over and above sure o' ourselves. She wasn't much of a sea-going craft when we left England, but the sun had fried all the pitch out o' her seams, and you might ha' put your finger through some of them. Two days an' a night we were at the pumps, for she leaked like a sieve. We lost the fore topsail, blown clean out o' the ringbolts. I never thought to see Lunnon again."

"If she could weather a gale like that she could make another voyage."

"She could start on another," the sailor said gloomily, "but as like as not she'd never see the end o't."

"Come, come, you're not quite yourself this morning, Miggs. We value you as a dashing, fearless fellow—let me fill your glass again—who doesn't fear a little risk where there's something to be gained. You'll lose your good name if you go on like that."

"She's in a terrible bad way," the captain insisted. "You'll have to do something before she can go."

"What shall we have to do?"

"Dry dock her and give her a thorough overhaul. She might sink before she got out o' the Channel if she went as she is just now."

Holds Nothing.

"A spendthrift," remarked the home-grown philosopher, "is a good deal like a tub with the bottom knocked out."

"What's the answer?" queried the very young man.

"He takes all that comes, but is able to hold nothing," explained the philosophy dispenser.

He Took the Blame.

Muggins—Behold in me a self-made man.

Diggins—I congratulate you because of your charitableness.

Muggins—I beg pardon?

Diggins—You are certainly charitable in taking the blame on yourself.

The Popular Pulpit

KNOW ONE THING WELL.

By Rev. George Clarke Peck.

Knowing one thing—not a very long curriculum, surely, even for a man born blind. Yet that single piece of knowledge was worth a ton of the things ordinarily known. Moreover, he did not say that "one thing" was all he knew. He merely seized upon the one thing which meant most to him just then, the thing which he supremely knew, and thrust it in the faces of his tormentors—"One thing I know."

For men who can say that same thing the age is always waiting. Men who know one thing and who know that one thing supremely well are always in demand. Many a brilliant fellow has been spoiled by his versatility. Of such a one, prominent in professional circles, his friend said recently: "He failed by knowing too many things and not knowing any one of them profoundly."

Not our versatility but our grip on one particular thing is what really counts. Most of us begin life as Eileen in Chambers' recent novel said she began; expecting to know "everything about everything." Soon, however, we reach the stage at which we are content to know "everything about something." And we probably end as she did by confessing that the most we can hope is to know "something about something." But to know that something supremely well and to subordinate every other knowledge to it, is one part of greatness.

There were many things, doubtless, which Gen. Grant did not know. As a wood seller he was worsted by all his neighbors in the business. He was so little fitted for commercial life that all the world knew of his failure. In a certain clerkship he was accounted a dreaming nobody. But he knew "one thing"—knew it so thoroughly that he left his whole country in debt to him; knew it so splendidly that his name has gone down in history as one of its greatest military strategists.

It was said of a certain professor that he "knew nothing but Greek." Socially he was hopeless; so absent-minded that if his head had been detached he would have left it in the hall. He lived Greek, dreamed Greek and if one might judge from his cadaverous cheeks he might have subsisted on Greek roots. But he knew a thing which his pitying students had yet to learn—that all the world asks of any man is that he know one thing well, and dying he will leave the whole world in his debt.

Darwin once sadly confessed that he had lost his early love for poetry and music. But that confession registers also the value of such a man to the world. He had to live his own life on the principle of natural selection. To turn in at one gate meant the shutting of other gates behind him. And who shall say but that the cultivation of an early taste for music and Shakspeare might have lessened the peerless contribution he made to human knowledge?

To know one thing and to know it thoroughly; to dig into a subject rather than to make the leaves fly over it, is the surest way to a large place in life.

But let it be remembered what this former blind man said he knew. It was very simple. It was not something which he had done. Something had been done for him. He had been recipient, not actor. God had opened his eyes. His was that fundamental, irrefragible, final knowledge on which the pillars of all knowledge rest—experience.

"Whereas, I was blind, now I see." He was not so much beloved as beloved. He had learned his greatest lesson by letting another do something for him. To know what that blind man knew, and to know it in the way he knew it, is the greatest thing in the world.

STRENGTH FOR THE DAILY TASK.

By Henry F. Cope.

But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength.—Is. xli., 31.

It is the dull grind and monotony of life that makes it so hard to bear for the 99 per cent of us. Sometimes it seems as though we spend all our days toiling, wearing strength, and hope, and heart away for no other end than to gain just bread and shelter so as to keep the machine in condition for further toil.

How hopeless is the outlook of many a life! The mother with the weary round of home duties day after day, the father who goes to the same task year after year, seeing the same people, doing the same things, and coming home at the day's end with the same weariness, only augmented as age makes itself felt—all who toil feel at times these depressing limitations.

Little wonder that lives snatch at every fleeting, alluring promise of relief, through amusement, through anything that offers change and excitement. Little wonder that, robbed of opportunity for vision, they foment blind discontent, so that we all feel there is a mighty substratum of wretchedness and of menace lying under our social order.

Yet there are few lives, perhaps no worthy ones, without tasks that often seem monotonous and become matters of dull grinding that bring weariness and longing for relief. All worth while work involves much tediousness, painstaking exertion. All great things stand for so much life poured out; and life is never poured out without pain and loss.

The stern Puritan was doubtless wrong when he saw nothing in life but repression and harsh duty, but he was nearer right than he who looks only for frivolity and amusement. Life is too large a business to be always light and trivial. Yet we must not allow its high purposes to be thwarted by robbing ourselves and our fellows of all joy and brightness and converting life into dull, mechanical servitude.

How may we find that proportion of toil and relief, that happy mixture of duty and delight that shall make life not only endurable but also useful, fruitful and enjoyable? For it is man's duty to be happy; otherwise he can never be useful in any high or valuable sense.

It would be easy to try to give comfort by the philosophy which sees the fine fruitage that is coming from today's stern discipline. That fair fruitage is coming, but the trouble is it is too far off to give us much comfort now; we want something nearer and more easily apprehended. Then, too, the truth is no high fruitage will ever issue from a life crushed by slavish subjection.

After all, what life is to every one of us depends not on the demands of outer circumstances, but on the development of the life within. The heart determines the worth and beauty of life. It makes all the difference whether the physical determines its circumference or whether you have an intellect that is reaching out to the things unmeasurable and a soul that grows into glory indescribable.

You can tie a great soul down hand and brain to a loom or a machine and he will still see his visions and dream his deep, refreshing dreams; you can set the brutish being down in a gallery of the world's treasures of art and beauty and he will think of nothing and see nothing but bread and beer.

We must do our dull and heavy tasks, but we can do them and not be crushed by them so long as within there are fragrant memories, high aspirations, great thoughts; so long as the task does not set the boundary of the life. And it is the cherishing of these eternal riches within that lifts any life and makes it worthy of higher tasks.

We need to seek out the springs of noble thoughts, to find in the riches of the world's literature, in music, and in beauty of art the food for that inner life in the strength of which, drawing often on its secret resources, we can go many ways through the desert of toil.

The wise life uses every opportunity of refreshing; it drinks of every spring of the upwelling waters of life; it seeks communion with every great soul. Holidays and rest days are to it times of replenishing when the eyes that ache from bending over the machine or desk lift themselves to the eternal hills and the heart turns to the things that are infinite.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't plead unpreparedness. He who says "I'm ready" when duty calls, carries off the prize.

Don't profess what your life does not teach, because the tongue cannot prevent your acts from speaking louder than your words.

Don't preach toleration when you are tolerant only of those who believe as you do. Toleration comprehends him who disagrees with you.

HYMNS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

The Shepherd Psalm.

The Lord's my shepherd, I'll not want;
He makes me down to lie
In pastures green; he leadeth me
The quiet waters by.

My soul he doth restore again;
And me to walk doth make
Within the paths of righteousness,
E'en for his own name's sake.

Yea, though I walk in death's dark vale,
Yet will I fear no ill;
For thou art with me, and thy rod
And staff me comfort still.

My table thou hast furnished
In presence of my foes;
My head thou dost with oil anoint,
And my cup overflows.

Goodness and mercy, all my life,
Shall surely follow me;
And in God's house forevermore
My dwelling place shall be.

Prohibition Column.

"I don't think my religion will be any obstacle to our union," he urged. "I am a spiritualist." "I am afraid it will," she replied. "Papa is a teetotalar, you know."

The enforcement of law is a good thing. Some times officials are found who believe in enforcing the law, even when it affects the saloon. The Judge has discovered one of these and tells the story in this way:

"What are you moving the church for?"

"Stranger, I am mayor of these diggins, and I'm going to see that the law is enforced. The law says there shall be no saloon within 300 feet of a church. I just gave them three days to move the church."

I have long had the conviction that there is no greater cause of evil, morally and physically, in this country than the use of alcoholic beverages.—Sir Henry Thompson, Surgeon to the King of the Belgians.

Mrs. Stevens, president of the W. C. T. U. very truthfully says that "more false statements are made in the endeavor to show that prohibition in Maine is a failure than are made in connection with any other subject in any locality of the globe."

A man is not a good citizen who takes no interest in politics.

Cure the itch by scratching and then you may talk about curing the liquor traffic by high license, regulation and local option.

Anyone that prohibition laws can not be enforced should read Attorney General Trickets address given at Indianapolis. He proved clearly that it could and is enforced in Kansas at present.

Let Christian men and temperance men learn to recognize the high license scheme as a scheme of the evil one, intended only to delude them into aiding him in his ruinous work, and we will hear no more of it: and when it goes the curse of the drink traffic will go with it—for high license is the last ditch in which it has taken its stand.

A wonderful army indeed is the army of high license! It holds aloft the banner of temperance; it proclaims in trumpet tones its devotion to the principles of sobriety and order yet it marches under the orders of King Alcohol, is led in the field by Marshal Gambrinus, fights with the weapons forged in his furnace, and is to-day the only force that delays the victorious progress of the armies of prohibition.

This editor has no quarrel with others working for the overthrow of the saloon. They are doing what they believe to be the best thing. God speed them. But after all is said and done; after the whole matter is carefully weighed and considered, whether you take the position of license, abstinence, temperance, local option, county option, or any other method advocated or being advocated by reformers, and carefully study it, the fact remains, and is indisputable that the stand taken by the "poor old long haired senseless, impractical Prohibitionists" is the only logical and correct stand on the question. The manufacture must be stopped. The sale sale must cease. Not here nor there, nor in Minnesota nor in Cuba, but all the time everywhere in this nation. And mark you, the brewers have never endorsed that platform, and they never will.—Phalanx.

Verily the skill and power of the devil of the saloon are wonderful. He makes his enemies to serve him, and induces those who hate him to stand as guards around his citadel.

The stronghold of King Alcohol would have been stormed by the pests of prohibition long ago, but it has been guarded by an army of temperance men. Christians, who with the guns of high license have been protecting the fortress.

We find then that high license is simply a fraud—a saloon measure masquerading in a temperance cloak—a compromise proposed by the saloon power for its own protection and which depends for its success (as a protection to the saloon) on the support of men who are in opposition to the saloon.

Rank Foolishness.

"When attacked by a cough or cold, or when your throat is sore, it is rank foolishness to take any other medicine than Dr. King's New Discovery," says C. O. Eldridge of Empiry, Ga. "I have used New Discovery seven years, and I know it is the best remedy on earth for coughs and colds, croup, and all throat and lung troubles. My children are subject to croup, but New Discovery quickly cures every attack." Known the world over as King of throat and lung remedies. Sold under guarantee at H. Timber Supply.

Spruce, the wood from which in 1899 three-fourths of the pulp was manufactured, is still the leading wood, but it now produces a little less than 60 per cent of the total. How well spruce is suited to the manufacture of pulp is shown by the fact that during a period in which the total quantity of wood used has doubled and many new woods have have been introduced, the proportion, the proportion of spruce forests for other purposes During this time three different woods, from widely separated regions, have in turn held the rank of leader in the lumber supply.

Since 1899 poplar, which for years was used in connection with spruce to the exclusion of all other paper woods has increased in total quantity less than 100,000 cords, and is now outranked by hemlock. Pine, balsam, and cottonwood are used in much smaller amounts.

New York alone consumes each over a million and a quarter cords of wood in the manufacture of pulp, or more than trice as much as Maine which ranks next. Wisconsin, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania and Michigan followin the order given. Sixty per cent of the wood used in New York was imported from elsewhere, and even so the supply seems to be waning, since the total consumption for the state shows a small decrease since 1905, whereas the other states named have all increased their consumption. Other States important in the production of pulp are: Massachusetts, Minnesota, Ohio, Oregon, Vermont, Virginia and West Virginia.

The average cost of pulp delivered at the mill was $7.21. The total value of the wood consumed in 1906 was $26,400,000. The chief item determining the price of paper is the cost of pulp. An example of the increased price of paper is found in the case of a publisher of a daily in the Middle West, who recently paid $1.200 for a carload of paper. The same quantity and grade of paper cost a year ago but $800.

The chemical processes of paper making, which better preserve the wood fiber, are gaining over the mechanical process. In 1899, 65 per cent of the wood was reduced by the mechanical peocess; in 1906, less than 50 per cent.

All importations of wood for pulp are from Canada, and comprised, in 1906, 739,000 cords, nearly all of which was spruce. Four and a half million dollars' worth of pulp was imparted in 1906, a slight falling off from 1905.

Circular 120 of the Forest Service contains a discussion of the consumption of pulpwood in 1906, based on statistics gathered by the Bureau of the Census and the Forest Service. The pamphlet can be had on application to the Forester, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Convulsions, or Spasms and St. Vitus' Dance are Nervous Diseases. Most cases can be cured by strengthening and building up the nervous system. To do this a nerve medicine is needed. Dr. Miles' Nervine will be found efficacious and satisfactory. It has cured many cases of these diseases and we believe it will cure you. We can give you names of many who have been cured through its use. Write for advice.

"My son John had epilepsy for years, and after having him treated by specialists for over 2 years he still continued to have spells. I had almost given up in despair, but knowing the virtue of Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills for sick headache, I concluded to try the Nervine. During June, 1906, I gave him a teaspoonful three times a day, then in July I gave it as directed, and I could see that he was improving, and he has not had a spell since August 23, 1906, and has taken no medicine since Jan.-07. I am writing the case just as it is hoping it will induce others to try it."

Weak Kidneys

Weak Kidneys, surely point to weak kidney Nerves. The Kidneys, like the Heart, and the Stomach, find their weakness, not in the organ itself, but in the nerves that control and guide and strengthen them. Dr. Shoop's Restorative is a medicine specifically prepared to reach these controlling nerves. To doctor the Kidneys alone, is futile. It is a waste of time, and of money as well.

If your back aches or is weak, if the urine scalds, or is dark and strong, if you have symptoms of Bright's or other distressing or dangerous kidney disease, try Dr. Shoop's Restorative a month. Tablets or Liquid—and see what it can and will do for you. Druggist recommend and sell

If there be one better way than another to ruin a town, it is for those who live in it to go about apologizing for its existence. There are some who are always ready to say, by their actions at least, that this place don't amount to much. They will tell you that the town is dead; that no one would think of stopping here; that some town adjacent is more respectable, more enterprising, has better people, better enjoyments, is ahead of us in everything. This is all wrong. Even if it be true, no one should ever admit it, when it comes to making a comparison. Every good citizen of this town, should take a special local pride in all that pertains to home. The schools, the churches, the amusements, the business, pleasures, the picnics, the celebrations, in fact, everything should be looked upon by our own people as just as good as can be gotten up elsewhere. The town that says "we can," will always succeed. The town that says, "Oh, I don't know, I don't think it will amount to much," is never of much force. If you have no local pride, grow some.

Teaching.

At St. Joe fifteen entirely new students have asked for time 1908.

Possibly some students of 1907, who have not made postive re-engagement are expecting me as teacher again and if they notify me in time; but I cannot promise to hold time long as several desire an early answer.

I expect to cover less territory, treat all alike by not soliciting any, old or new, as more than enough new students have applied to fill all available time not now engaged by old students.

Chastine Johnston.

Peculiar Situation.

Franklin township's trustee is having troubles of his own. The advisory board has handed in its resignation, the members all being dissatisfied with the salary of only $5.00 per year and the amount of work the legislature heaped upon them and resigned all at once. This raises the question as to whether or not all can resign at once or not. In case this is done there is no one left to fill vacancies but as there is no bond given given by them it is very doubtful if they can be made to serve.

The law states "If a vacancy occurs in said board it shall be filled by the remaining members of the board for the unexpired term" but says nothing about such an emergency as suddenly exists in Franklin. It is a peculiar situation and surrounding trustees are looking on with a keen eye.

The duties imposed on the advisory board by the last legislature makes them the servants of the people with the smallest pay of anyone holding office in the state. Their duties as financial board are arduous and no one except those who have a great love for their township affairs and are willing to make a personal sacrifice, a philanthropist, for example, will consent to serve.—Dispatch.

YEAR 1907 LEAVES A RECORD OF DISASTER

Natural Phenomena and Direful Accident Furnish Long Lists of Dead.

EPITOME OF IMPORTANT EVENTS

Recent Financial Disturbance—Oklahoma a State—Fine and Gift of Millions.

The chronicler who scans the record of 1907 that he may write of it finds himself confronted by an exhibit of destruction and disaster that he had not fully appreciated before. Since the opening day of the year the great catastrophes that have been accompanied by large loss of life have numbered 26, an average of slightly more than two for each month. Several of these have been great convulsions of nature. There was the earthquake that destroyed Kingston, Jamaica, out of which came the disagreeable Swettenham incident; subsequently occurred other earthquakes and volcanic eruptions in Mexico, Chile and China. An earthquake and mountain slide that destroyed the town of Karatagh, Russian Turkestan, snuffed out 15,000 lives, and a frightful typhoon at Hongkong, China, killed unknown hundreds of the inhabitants. A hurricane in the Caroline Islands wiped out 200 lives; a great flood in Japan caused 600 deaths. Among the catastrophes originating in the operations and enterprises of humanity there have been explosions—several of them in mines, others in blast furnaces and on shipboard—collisions of ships and of railway trains, the collapse of the great uncompleted bridge over the St. Lawrence river near Quebec, and the blowing up of the Du Pont powder works in Fontanet, Ind. All these produced long casualty lists.

The roll of eminent dead is also an extensive one. Sweden has lately been called upon to mourn the decease of its beloved king, Oscar II., and his son and successor has assumed the reins of government. In Persia, also, the old Shah has died and a new one rules, but abdi[cated]

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Editor G. N. Murray, of the Nappanee News, will begin the publication of a daily newspaper there January 1.

Samuel Meyer, well known Goshen merchant, is dead. He was president of the Jewish congregation in that city.

Fred Sage, student in the Wabash High School, ate canned pineapple and came near dying from ptomaine poisoning.

James Ray, a teamster, 35 years old and married, was kicked on the head by a mule at Evansville a few days ago. His skull was fractured and he will die.

A defective flue caused a fire that destroyed the fourteen-room farm residence of William Mallott, of near Noblesville. The loss is $2,200, with only $600 insurance.

A contract for a $70,000 addition to St. Anthony's Hospital at Terre Haute has been let to John A. Shumaker, of Indianapolis. It will be 46x118 feet, four stories in height.

William Ingle, of Princeton, was seriously hurt and two or three other workmen were slightly injured by the giving way of a scaffold at the artificial gas plant there.

The Kerlin elevator, which was destroyed by fire in Delphi a few weeks ago, is again open for business in their new quarters, temporarily erected for the handling of corn.

Capt. John Hahn, aged 83 years, is dead of paralysis at New Albany. He served two terms as sheriff of Floyd County, and two terms as trustee of New Albany Township. He was a veteran of the Civil War.

Frank Guzzo, an Italian of Elkhart, 29 years old, took an overdose of tablets containing a mercurial element and died. He thought a big dose necessary to remedy his ailment. He had been dissipating.

While husking corn in a field near Petersburg, James Miley killed a cowsnake which measured over five feet in length and was two inches thick. The reptile was chilled by the cold and could make little resistance.

While Bert Jones, a young blacksmith of Muncie, was endeavoring to shoe a vicious pony, the animal let fly with its heels and struck him squarely in the head. It was feared at first that his injuries would prove fatal, but it is now believed he has a chance of recovery.

Stephen Snyder, 86 years of age, and once the wealthiest man in Grant County, died in utter poverty at the County Infirmary at Marion. Years ago Snyder owned 2,100 acres of land and was the heaviest buyer of live stock in the county, but he lost his fortune in buying hogs.

The hardware store of George Gilbert, of Millersburg, was blown up by a mysterious explosion. There was a small quantity of powder and a little gasoline in the building, but nobody is able to say how the stuff exploded, as the store was closed an hour before and there was no indication of trouble at that time.

A horse, while attempting to kick a mule, landed on Daniel Doddridge, Jr., of Milton, and severely hurt him.

Mr. and Mrs. Abram Myers, of Columbia City, have just celebrated their fifty-third wedding anniversary.

George Kuhn, a well-known citizen and former Councilman, died of apoplexy at Elkhart, aged 53 years. He is survived by a widow and two children.

The little son of Frank Gowdy, of South Milford, has just had removed from his wrist a thorn which had been imbedded in the flesh for more than a year.

Because, he says, his father is cruel and has never done anything for him, Leonard Lemuel Sheatsley has had the court at Elkhart change his name to Leonard Rinehard.

It has been announced that Seth A. Low, aged 80, a millionaire and one of the best known residents of Elkhart, and Mrs. Jessie Wagner, of the same city, were married recently at Kalamazoo, Mich.

Despondent because her mother would not allow her to keep company with a young man, whom she avows she loves, Miss Ida Roysdon, of Hamlet, swallowed a quantity of arsenic. She will die.

William Smith, aged 68 years, is dead at the home of Charles Cobb near Brazil. He had been blind for forty years. In the early days of mining in California, he was a prosperous mine owner, but a premature explosion destroyed the sight of both eyes.

S. J. Payne, one of the wealthy business men of Wabash, has the distinction of serving continuously for thirty-eight years as chorister of the First Methodist church, and he is now entering upon his thirty-ninth year. He never misses a service, and is still in good voice.

Rounding a turn while on a rush in answer to a fire alarm, Chris Hipp, driver, and Grant Burns Worth, policeman, were hurled from the heavy hose cart of the Wabash fire department and both men were injured. Mr. Hipp held to the reins and kept the horses from running away.

Thomas Brewer, 14 years old, after being subjected to a "sweating process," confessed to the recent burning of two school buildings [near] Columbus, causing a loss of several thousand dollars. He also implicated two colored boys, all of whom have been remanded for grand jury action.

Rachael Rogers Allison, of Columbus, aged 75 years, has fallen heir to $75,000, which is one-half of the estate left her by her half brother, Lafayette Higgins, of Streator, Ill. Her brother left no will, and she will receive one-half or more of the estate. She was the nearest kin.

Although 71 years old, Matthew Stevens walked ten miles to Boonville and obtained a license to marry Catherine Hodge, aged 66. It was his first time to marry and his first time to walk from his home to that city, but he did it as, he said, just to show that he was a young man yet. He walked home and was married the same day.

Daniel Berry, one of the respected pioneers of Jefferson Township, Whitley County, celebrated his ninety-first birthday anniversary recently. He has the distinction of having been born in India[na] Dec. 5, 1816. [He] State was [the] Mr. Ber[ry] H[e]

Exercising His Undoubted Right.

The poet Gray had written the lines:

"Along the cool sequestered vale of life
He kept the noiseless tenor of his way."

"I know, of course," he said, "as a matter of fact, that the idea of a 'noiseless tenor' is utterly preposterous, but I've got to have something to satisfy the requirements of rhythm, and there is a smooth, flowing quality about that phrase that seems to give it the right jingle. I think I'll let it stand."

Reflecting, besides, that the case was fully covered by his poetic license, he cheerfully tackled the next stanza.

Too Much Opposition.

Miss Bowry—I have no doubt it was a clever "Soliloquy of a Traveler" you recited at the church social last evening, but do you know I couldn't hear a word of it?

Miss Broadway—Nobody is supposed to hear a word of it. It was a soliloquy uttered by a traveler in a subway train.

Mrs. Austin's famous pancakes make a hearty, wholesome breakfast. Fresh supply now at your grocers.

Little Ambiguous.

Very commendable is the zeal displayed in recent years in the effort to put an end to the obnoxious habit of expectorating in places frequented by the public. Still, the offense would probably be classed under the head of "venial"—and it might be well to adjust the punishment to the crime.

A crossing on one of the ferry boats that convey passengers over the North River to New Jersey points, and carefully considering the possible logical connection between the two parts of the "Notice to Passengers" hanging in a conspicuous place, one wonders if perhaps the reforming zeal of the ferry company may not have carried it too far.

The signs read: "Spitting on the floor is prohibited. Life preservers are provided for all passengers."

FLASHES OF FUN

"Did you have a fine auto trip?" "Very much so—all fines."—Baltimore American.

"Edgar is a splendid talker, isn't he?" "One of the finest I ever escaped from."—Life.

"How many people work in your office?" "Work? Perhaps two-thirds of them."—Fliegende Blatter.

Stella—So she divorced him for desertion? Bella—Yes, he positively refused to live in the auto.—Evening Sun.

"I haven't a pull with any one," said the unsuccessful man. "Oh, yes, you have, dear," said his wife, encouragingly, "with the fool-killer."—Life.

Senator A—And do most of your constituents think as you do on this question? Senator X—Well, most of them think as they think I do.—Somerville Journal.

"In a few years," said the inventor, 'we will be traveling by airship.'" "I hope so," answered the automobilist. "It will be a joke on the country sheriffs."—Washington Post.

Tommy Figg—Sister's beau kicked my dog yesterday, but I got even with him, you bet. Johnny Briggs—How? Tommy Figg—I mixed quinine with her face powder.—Indianapolis Journal.

"Do you really like me, Charley?" "Sure. Don't I come to see you regularly?" "But men often call on a girl for whom they care little or nothing." "Not with Christmas looming up."—Houston Post.

"Never marry a man to reform him, dear." "I won't, auntie. And I'll promise you another thing." "What is that, my child?" "I'll never reform a man for some other girl to marry."—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Gladys—Papa will be so pleased to know that you are a poet. Algernon—Ah! Then, like you, he adores poetry. Gladys—No, not that, but the last one of my lovers he tried to lick was a football player.—Life.

"I know something you don't know," said the facetious youth to the fair debutante. "What's that?" inquired the maiden. "Your waist is unbuttoned down the back," replied the youth.—Detroit Free Press.

"Please, mum," began the aged hero in appealing tones, as he stood at the kitchen door on washday, "I've lost my leg——" "Well, I ain't got it," snapped the woman, slamming the door.—Everybody's Magazine.

"I wish you would mention this to Jinks. It is highly important." "I'll mention it to him to-day." "But how do you know you will see him to-day?" "I'm bound to bump into him. I owe him money."—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Policeman (holding down tramp on sidewalk)—No damage, ma'am; he's merely having a fit. Kind Lady—Gracious! Shall I get some water and throw it in his face? Policeman—Do you want to kill him?—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

"Ah," said the press humorist, "I see you have cut out one of my jokes." "Ha, ha!" "Found it funny, did you?" "Excuse me for laughing, old man. What I cut out was an 'ad' on the other side of the page."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

"Are you going to settle up with your daughter?" asked the cigarette and "Well, it rather looks if you that she is going thing on me," replied Yonkers Statesman.

ELEVEN YEARS OF ECZEMA.

Hands Cracked and Bleeding—Nail Came Off of Finger—Cuticura Remedies Brought Prompt Relief.

"I had eczema on my hands for about eleven years. The hands cracked open in many places and bled. One of my fingers was so bad that the nail came off. I had tried so many remedies, and they all had failed to cure me. I had seen three doctors, but got no relief. Finally I got a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment and two bottles of Cuticura Resolvent Pills. Of course I keep Cuticura Soap all the time for my hands, but the one cake of Soap and half a box of Cuticura Ointment cured them. I recommend the Cuticura Remedies to all suffering with eczema. Mrs. Eliza A. Wiley, R. F. D. No. 2, Liscomb, Ia., Oct. 18, 1906."

A Bargain.

Mr. Mason rubbed the edges of the umbrella with discriminating fingers while his wife listened to the saleswoman's enumeration of its good points.

"This is $10, isn't it?" he asked.

"Oh, no," replied the saleswoman reproachfully, "it is $9.89."

"She seems to regard the 11 cents as particularly invidious. I wonder why?" whispered Mr. Mason to his wife.

"Not at all," said Mrs. Mason, with mild heat; "nothing 'invidious' about it. Only very naturally it touched the girl not to have you perceive that you were getting a bargain."—Youth's Companion.

FIVE MONTHS IN HOSPITAL.

Discharged Because Doctors Could Not Cure.

Levi P. Brockway, S. Second avenue, Anoka, Minn., says: "After lying for five months in a hospital, I was discharged as incurable, and given only six months to live. My heart was affected, I had smothering spells and sometimes fell unconscious. I got so I couldn't use my arms, my eyesight was impaired and the kidney secretions were badly disordered. I was completely worn out and discouraged when I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, but they went right to the cause of the trouble and did their work well. I have been feeling well ever since."

When you put the latchkey in the door of your home, drop your business or profession; drop all the things which have vexed and worried and nagged you during the day; drop everything disagreeable. Just say to yourself, "I will not allow these shadows in my home. This is a shrine too sacred for discord." Resolve that peace, harmony, contentment shall reign there.

If you insist on worrying during the daytime, do not drag your worries home at night. Do not bring the black fiends which have destroyed your peace in the office into your home. Leave your cares and your troubles behind when you enter its doors.

The habit which many married people have of talking their troubles over at night, and especially at the dinner table, is a most vicious one. The dinner bell should be a signal for the happiest time of the day. Every member of the family should go to the table with smiles—each one should bring his best, brightest, and most cheerful things to it. No one should be allowed to complain or relate his unfortunate experiences there. The assembling round the dinner table should be an occasion for fun and laughter—the enemies of indigestion.—Success Magazine.

Thieves Break In

While Mrs. Maxwell is Away Visiting. Tear Things Up in General. Take Few Articles.

GOODS VALUED AT $18.00.

The home of Mrs. Sarah Maxwell was broken into between Tuesday and Friday while she and her son Paul were visiting at Butler. Upon arriving home Friday noon they noticed considerable confusion in the kitchen, and burnt matches strewn all over the house and on examining further found two dresser locks broken and a pair of gold bracelets, gold spectacles and a Columbian 50c piece were missing at first. On going out the next morning Mrs. Maxwell noticed a large funnel which she kept over the drain, over a tin pail. On lifting this up she found a large pocket-book, containing notes and other valuable papers, lying in some water. The pocketbook was not missed before. A key to one of the house doors was also taken. Mrs. Maxwell suspects home talent and if she can obtain a clue will take the matter up and make an example of them to other would-be burglars.

Catharine Sechler

BURIAL AT NEWVILLE.

The subject of this brief sketch, Catharine Anna Mary Sechler, was born in Lehigh Co., Pennsylvania, April 7, 1841, where she spent her girlhood days until at about the age of 12 years she moved with her parents to this county at which time little could be seen or imagined of the present improved and progressive condition of the surrounding country; like any other girl of that age in those times, much depended on her, as well as her parents, in those trying times and it was always her disposition to do her share in bearing burdens and she did it in her cheerful willing way. The fact, too, that she she was the eldest of a family of 12 children would prove that her duties as a helpful child were not few.

On Jan. 1st, 1859 she united with the German Reformed church known as Zion, in this county, under the pastorate of Rev. J. G. Kissell, to which church she remained a faithful consistent member until March 6, 1890 she transferred her membership to St. Mark's Lutheran church of St. Joe, where she still continued to devote her life work for the cause of Christ and his church until death relieved her from her duties here on earth, Jan. 4, 1908, at the age of 66 years, 8 months, 28 days.

She lived to see her father, mother, two sisters and a brother pass over the silent river of death and then before her allotted "three score and ten" had come to pass she approached on the verge of the waveless sea of eternity, the white spectre beckoned her on and with sweet loving eyes that would not shrink from death, she gave her hand to the boatman pale. With bursting heart we saw the vanishing bark of life, the last faint sheen of her silvered hair and the mist and the darkness of that boundless ocean closes around the form of our loved one.

The funeral services were held in Lutheran church Tuesday forenoon at 10:00 o'clock, conducted by Rev. F. A. Dressel, assisted by Rev S. Heininger of the M. P. church. Elza Kinsey, funeral director.

A Cure for Misery.

"I have found a cure for the misery malaria poison produces," says R. M. James, of Louellen, S. C. "It's called Electric Bitters, and comes in 50 cent bottles. It breaks up a case of chills or a bilious attack in almost no time; and it puts yellow jaundice clean out of commission." This great tonic medicine and blood purifier gives quick relief in all stomach, liver and kidney complaints and the misery of lame back. Sold under guarantee at H. Milliman's drug store.

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Rockefeller Gives $2,191,000.

Martin A. Ryerson, president of the board of trustees of the University of Chicago, has announced that John D. Rockefeller had added $2,191,000 to his gifts to the university, making the total of his benefactions over $23,000,000. He also reported that Mr. Rockefeller has offered to treble all contributions to the memorial library which the university is trying to erect in honor of William R. Harper, its first president. The trustees have already received $135,000 for this purpose to add $65,000 to this sum, so that with Mr. Rockefeller's contribution an $800,000 structure may be erected on the campus.

Receiver for Seaboard Air Line.

Judge Pritchard, of the United States Circuit Court, entered a decree naming S. Davies Warfield, of Baltimore, and R. Lancaster Williams, of Richmond, as receivers of the Seaboard Air Line railroad. The bond of each was fixed at $50,000. The system is one of the most extensive in the South, its trackage aggregating 2,611 miles. It has outstanding securities to the amount of about $130,000,000. It is hinted that a coup by the Ryan party, which dominates the property, is the motive for the receivership move.

Ex-Treasurer Commits Suicide.

Charles Becker, 67 years old, formerly State treasurer of Illinois, committed suicide at his home in Belleville, Ill., by shooting himself in the mouth. The suicide followed a family conference, attended by three of his four children. Becker's first wife died two years ago. Last June he was married to Mrs. Frank Espenhain. It is said that a family conference was held to discuss the disposition of Becker's estate as a result of his second marriage. Mr. Becker was worth $500,000.

Train Rolled Down Embankment.

The south-bound Penetang express on the Grand Trunk railway was derailed about seven miles north of Barrie, Ont. The whole train, with the exception of the locomotive, rolled down a forty-foot embankment and made three turns before it reached the bottom. A stove in the second car set the train on fire. All the passengers, of whom fifteen were injured, were taken out safely. The injured were taken to a hospital, where it is understood their injuries are not serious.

Bold Robbers Escape in Auto.

Two men stole a chest containing $2,859 from a street car standing in front of the Main street east car barns at Rochester, N. Y., and got safely away with it in an automobile. The stolen money represents the earnings of the Rochester Railway Company for one day on what is known as the Eastern Division. It was being transferred, according to custom, from the Federal street barns to the State street office to be counted.

Shot at Rival; Killed Sweetheart.

Nineteen-year-old Roy Howard, convicted of murdering Miss Martha Picray in Des Moines, Ia., on the night of November 29, was sentenced to eight years in the penitentiary at Anamosa, Iowa. Howard attempted to shoot down a jealous rival and shot Miss Picray instead. He pleaded an accident as an excuse. He was a trooper of the Second Cavalry stationed at Fort Des Moines. His home is at Peoria, Ill.

Heroes of Stone River in Reunion.

The Union survivors of the battle of Stone River are in session at Kokomo, Ind., with an attendance of 200 veterans. In this battle the Union loss was 31 per cent. of the 43,000 engaged. It was fought in 1862 by the forces of General Rosecrans and General Bragg.

Colorado Bank Closes Its Doors.

The State Bank of Rocky Ford, Col., closed its doors, following a run. The liabilities exceed $400,000 and the assets are placed at over $525,000, mainly loans on high grade farm lands.

STORY WRECKS GIRLS' SCHOOL.

Proprietress of Fashionable Institution Files Bankruptcy Petition.

The name of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, figuratively speaking, is written across the voluntary petition in bankruptcy filed in the United States Circuit Court in New York by Mrs. Mathilda Beatrice DeMille. The chief figure in the Thaw tragedy is the blight that has, after a two-year struggle, forced the widow of the brilliant collaborator of Belasco two decades ago and the mother of two successful playwrights of to-day to plead before a court of law to be released from the obligation of her debts that she may make a fresh start. For it was the story of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw on the witness stand that brought notoriety to the fashionable school at Pompton Lake, N. J., in which Mrs. DeMille sought to rehabilitate the fortune crippled by the death of her husband. This latest action was the climax of a string of circumstances that have followed in logical sequence the quaint story by Evelyn of the life of a chorus girl among the tender daughters of fashionable families at the Pompton Lake school, the shock to the fashionable clientele of the school when they learned that their daughters had the girl as a companion for many months, and the vacant school rooms and dormitories which before had been filled.

WILL TRY TO CONVERT KANSAS.

Next Year's Evangelistic Campaign Planned to Include Whole State.

"Kansas for Christ" is to be the slogan in a State-wide evangelical campaign that is to be rushed simultaneously in every county of the Sunflower State next year. Hundreds of ministers of various denominations, together with numerous well-known evangelists, are to hold revivals. An entire year will be spent in the movement, and an effort is to be made to demonstrate to the whole country what may be accomplished in concerted religious work, carried forward on strictly business lines. The great revival is to be under the direct leadership of Rev. William Edward Biederwolf, who planned it. The undertaking will be subject to the general supervision of a board of two ministers and two laymen from each of fifteen denominations now represented.

UTES RAID UTAH RANGES.

Governor Appeals to Washington to Drive Indians from State.

Bands of Ute Indians from Colorado are traveling in southern Utah, raiding sheep and cattle men, according to a report received in Salt Lake City by Gov. John C. Cutler. A band of Indians attacked three cowboys near Verdure, San Juan county, on Dec. 23, and at the points of rifles compelled them to drive their cattle back into the canyon from which they were trailing on to the winter range, threatening to kill them unless they did so. Cowboys and cattle are still confined to the canyon. Gov. Cutler will take up the matter with the authorities at Washington, as Utes are forbidden to enter Utah.

BUYS U. S. FARM TOOLS.

Several Vessels Chartered to Carry Implements to Continent.

Twenty-five million dollars' worth of American agricultural machinery will be shipped to Europe in a few weeks, six big steamships having been chartered for the transportation of everything conceivable for use in farm work. The engagement of other special vessels for the same purpose is expected to take place within the next few days. These cargoes, together with shipments made by practically every steamship sailing from New York for Europe during the next four months, will aggregate no less than a quarter of a million tons.

COAT OF MINISTER EXPLODES.

Some Substance in Lining of Garment Bursts Into Flame.

The Rev. William H. Hubbel, mayor-elect of Dalton, Ohio, was the victim of a peculiar explosion. His coat suddenly burst into a blaze and was ruined, though he was not injured. He had no matches or explosives in his pocket. He thinks the explosive was sewed in the lining of his coat, which came from a Pittsburg department store.

"Human Skeleton" Is No More.

Charles H. Perry, who traveled with several of the larger circuses for sixteen years, figuring as the skeleton man, was found dead in a hut in the outskirts of Providence, R. I., where he had lately led a hermit's life. Death was due to natural causes. Perry was known to the public as "Eugene Feralto." Although he was 6 feet 1 inch in height, he weighed only 80 pounds.

Marries Her Indian Lover.

Word has reached Denver that Miss Cora Arnold of that city was married in Santa Fe to Albino Chavarria, a full-blooded Indian and chief of the Pueblo tribe. Chavarria and some of his tribe were in camp in Denver during the mountain and plain festival five years ago, and Miss Arnold fell in love with him.

Root Buys Old Homestead.

The old Root homestead, "The Hemlocks," on College Hill, Clinton, N. Y., has been purchased by Secretary Root from Anna Day Root, widow of his brother, the late Dr. Oren Root of Hamilton college. The purchase price was $10,000.

Two Burn to Death.

Mrs. Boyer and one child were burned to death and another child badly burned in the fire that destroyed their home near Hamden, Vinton County, Ohio.

BISHOP EDWARD ANDREWS DEAD

Elevated to Office in Methodist Episcopal Church 35 Years Ago.

Bishop Edward G. Andrews of the Methodist Episcopal church died Tuesday at his home in Brooklyn, N. Y. He was 82 years old. A severe cold contracted while he was attending the bishop's conference and the meetings of the home and foreign mission boards at San Francisco last October caused death. The bishop never recovered from the cold, which resulted in a general breakdown. For nearly half a century Bishop Andrews was one of the most widely known clergymen in the United States. Born in central New York, he studied for the ministry in Wesleyan college. For several years before entering the ministry he was president of Cazenovia academy. He was chosen bishop in 1872 and in 1904 was placed on the retired list. Bishop Andrews is survived by a widow, one son and three daughters.

DEAD AND INJURED LIST 57,919.

Summary of Accidents for Year Presents Startling Figures.

The New York Tribune, in a summary of the accidents of the year 1907, says 57,919 persons have been killed and injured in accidents during the year, 35,612 having been killed and 22,307 injured. Some of the larger items of the list are as follows: Earthquakes, landslides, etc., 21,512 killed, 3,092 injured; explosions and mine disasters, 3,086 killed, 2,721 injured; storms and floods, 4,209 killed, 1,563 injured; railroad wrecks, 811 killed, 2,639 injured; automobile accidents, 229 killed, 704 injured; firearms, 197 killed, 3,978 injured. Among other deaths are 2,260 lost in wrecks of vessels and 492 in other drownings.

LUMBER PRICE IS LOWER.

Reduction Varying from $1 to $3 a Thousand Is Made in the List.

Lumber prices are down and nearly everything on the northern pine list has been cut from $1 to $3 a thousand. The reductions from the August list follow: Dimension and timbers, $2 a thousand; common boards, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5, $1 a thousand; fencing, Nos. 1 and 2, six inches, $1 a thousand; four inches, $2; No. 3, six inches, $2; four inches, $3; "C and better," eight inches and wider, $2 a thousand; siding, C and better, $2; D and E, $1; C and better, Norway, $1; lath, 50 cents a thousand. There is no reduction on inch D or on thick select and shop.

KING OF SPAIN TO SEE AMERICA.

Alfonso Will Probably Visit Latin Republics Next Year.

King Alfonso will probably visit Latin America next year. El Imparcial approves of the idea and adds: "The king is to visit the American continent from Mexico to Argentina. His journey will dispel the recollections of historical errors which have cost us so much blood and so much money and will demonstrate the progress westward of the Latin race and the possibility that it will be able to maintain its supremacy in the world."

Cost of Brownsville Inquiry.

The Senate Committee on Military Affairs spent on the investigation of the Brownsville shooting affray, now in progress, over $30,000 between July 1, 1906, and June 30, 1907, according to the report of the Secretary of the Senate. Most of the items are for traveling and other expenses of witnesses. The largest item is $3,739 for reporting and transcribing the hearings.

Review of Year 1907.

Review of the year 1907 shows extraordinary activity in all lines of trade and manufactures in Chicago, while the exports and imports of the nation are greatest in history; dealings in live stock in Chicago are immense and the dry goods business indicates Chicago is fast becoming the chief center; financial and speculative reports are most encouraging.

Night Work Drives to Suicide.

"I have been afraid of the dark all my life—please get a daylight job," wept 16-year-old Mrs. Stella Hartzell on the shoulder of her 20-year-old husband, George Hartzell, a Pennsylvania brakeman, as he prepared to leave for work in Pittsburg. Immediately after he left the house the bride of three months killed herself.

One Dead, One Wounded.

John Hellrigle, brakeman, was shot and killed by John Deman, in the latter's saloon in Columbus, Ohio. Deman himself received a flesh wound over the eye at the hands of William Miller, a companion of Hellrigle. The shooting was the result of an attempt by Deman to eject Hellrigle from the restaurant kitchen.

Former Banker Is Dead.

Information of the death at Lincoln, Neb., of Zimri Dwiggins was received by relatives. He was formerly in the banking business in Rensselaer, Ind., founded a chain of banks and later founded the Columbia National bank at Chicago. Many of the banks closed their doors.

Find New Saying of Christ.

The discovery of an added saying of Christ, contained in a manuscript dug from the sands of Akhnum, was announced at the meeting of the Archaeological Institute at America at Haskell Hall, University of Chicago.

Mistakes Son for Burglar and Kills.

In San Jose, Cal., Bertram Somers shot and killed his 5-year-old boy, having mistaken him for a burglar. The child, it is believed, was walking in his sleep.

MINER FOUND BY ACCIDENT.

Coal Officials on "Tour" Save Man Entombed for Three Days.

After being imprisoned for three days in Ellsworth No. 1 mine at Ellsworth, Pa., John Omillian, 26 years old, a Slav miner, was released from his underground dungeon a raving maniac. He was taken to the county home at Arden. Omillian went to work last Thursday in a small room off the main entry of the mine and ignited a blast. The charge proved so strong that it loosened enough earth to cause a fall which blocked effectually exit from the room. All his efforts to attract attention were in vain, and he might have been entombed yet but for the accidental discovery of his plight. A number of mine officials, while going through the diggings to see that everything was safe, came to the point where Omillian was entombed. They at once saw that something was wrong. When the debris was cleared the officials were astonished to find a maniac dash among them from the room, knock two of the rescuers down and put up a vigorous fight before he was overpowered.

Nearly Million More Passengers in 1907 than in 1906.

Transatlantic passenger traffic during 1907 was increased by nearly a million passengers over the traffic of 1906. The total passengers carried both east and west has reached the enormous number of 2,957,328, according to figures given out by the North German Lloyd company. The movement has been greater than in 1906 by 972,640, and 1,451,151 greater than in 1904. The passengers from Europe to the United States number 1,699,340, which is 200,000 in excess of the entire east and west traffic in 1904. The east-bound travel during the present year has reached 1,257,328 persons. The east-bound steerage passengers number 550,045, which is 242,565 more than last year, while 1,364,688 steerage passengers have arrived in the United States, 154,526 more than in 1906. The increases were in about the same proportion in all classes.

ORIENTALS RIOT VICTIMS.

Fifteen Hundred Men Stone Lethbridge Chinese Quarter.

Because they believed that a prominent citizen had been murdered in a Chinese restaurant 1,500 men raided the Oriental quarter in Lethbridge, Alberta, and left a wreck behind. Restaurants and laundries were smashed and doors and windows and entire fronts of buildings were reduced to splinters. The town police were powerless and a brigade of mounted police had to be called out to quell the riot. The story had gone abroad that Harry Smith, one of the best known ranchers of the cattle district had been fatally wounded in a restaurant. Neither Smith nor anyone else had been hurt, but even the police, were misled by the tale and two Orientals were placed under arrest, charged with murder.

ROBBERS CAUGHT AFTER BATTLE

Get $2,500 from Camden Point (Mo.) Bank, but Are Taken by Citizens.

The Bank of Camden Point, at Camden Point, Mo., thirty miles southeast of St. Joseph, was robbed by three men at 3 o'clock the other morning and $2,500 was taken. A battle between citizens and the robbers occurred and many shots were exchanged, but the robbers escaped. They were pursued by a posse and captured about noon near Edgerton Junction. The robbers were discovered by Prof. Barhan, president of Camden Point college, who saw a light in the bank and aroused the citizens. Three explosions occurred after the alarm was given, and the safe and interior of the bank were wrecked.

Frees Liquor Law Violator.

Thomas Chamales, the Greek proprietor of the Savoy, a saloon in the levee district of Chicago, has been found not guilty by a jury of his peers. Chamales was charged with keeping his saloon open on Sunday and with selling liquor on that day; he admitted the truth of both accusations; the court ruled that such actions were in violation of the law—the jury returned a verdict of not guilty.

President Sends Gift.

President Roosevelt has sent a letter and a $10 bill to Jacob Kriesfeld, a 14-year-old boy of Worcester, Mass., in return for a Christmas gift which the lad sent the President. The gift consisted of a calendar decorated with the picture of an American eagle, in the beak of which is a scroll on which appears the name of the President.

Protects Mother; Kills Father.

Charles Schroff, proprietor of International Hall, 253 East Genesee street, Buffalo, a saloon and bowling alley, was shot and instantly killed by his son Charles, 20 years old. Schroff, Sr., had been drinking heavily, and, it is said, struck his wife, who called upon her son to protect her. The son was arrested. He claims he shot in self-defense.

Famous Animal Trainer Dead.

William Bell, an animal trainer, known to circus men throughout the country, dropped dead in Kansas City of heart disease. Bell was known as "Texas," and was 55 years old. He was one of the few men who could control Rajah, the famous man-killing elephant.

Falls Dead in Senate.

Jean Francois Edmond Guyot-Dessaigne, French minister of justice, dropped dead of apoplexy at the session of the Senate in Paris Tuesday. M. Guyot-Dessaigne was born in 1833 and entered the public service in 1863.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Business for the year is now virtually completed, and the necessary preparations for inventories and repairs to machinery engage more attention. Developments this week have not been without encouragement for the future. Banking conditions made a closer approach to the normal, money circulated more freely and the Christmas trade rose to proportions which indicated increasing cheerfulness among the people.

Exchange upon New York works smoothly, country banks bid oftener for commercial paper and the discount rate for local account is less rigid, although still quoted at 7 per cent. Mercantile collections have not recovered promptness at western points, but they bring less trouble, and the record of defaults remains comparatively unimportant.

Manufacturing conditions reflect further curtailed production and temporary reduction in hands employed. It is noted that inquiries are substantially better in pig iron and structural steel, while the rail and wire mills have bookings running months ahead.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 22, against 28 last week and 17 a year ago. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 7, against 12 last week and 4 in 1906.—Dun's Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Trade as a whole has been quiet and industry has slackened perceptibly, but the financial situation has eased, except where, as in the case of New York, large end of the year disbursements have to be provided for. Mild weather is still complained of as affecting retail trade in seasonable goods, such as clothing, shoes, rubber footwear and kindred lines. At some cities the usual January reduction sales were held in December, in many instances occurring before Christmas. Jobbing trade was quiet till after the latter date, when the usual clearance sales of wash and other dress fabrics were made, arousing a fair amount of interest. Wholesale business has been quiet and both this line and the jobbing trade note the receipt of many requests to delay shipment of goods.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending Dec. 26 number 246, against 300 last week and 161 in the like week of 1906, 212 in 1905, 218 in 1904 and 209 in 1903. Canadian failures for the week number 50, as against 40 last week and 18 in this week a year ago.—Bradstreet's Commercial Report.

TOLD IN A FEW LINES.

Attorney General Davis of Texas, after a conference at Dallas, decided to run for a third term on the anti-Bailey issue.

The schooner Jesse Barlow was run down near Pollock Rip lightship on Cape Cod. The crew of six men had a narrow escape.

Seth Low, former president of Columbia university, has been elected president of the National Civic Federation to succeed August Belmont at the New York meeting.

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

A. CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER II.—(Continued.)

"Very well," the merchant said coldly. "If you insist on it, it must be done. But, of course, it would make a great difference in your salary."

"Eh?"

"You are at present getting fifteen pounds a month, and five per cent commission. These are exceptional terms in consideration of any risk that you may run. We shall dry dock the Black Eagle, and your salary is now ten pounds a month and two and a half commission."

"Belay, there, belay!" the sailor shouted. His coppery face was a shade darker than usual, and his bilious eyes had a venomous gleam in them. "Don't you beat me down!" he hissed, advancing to the table and leaning his hands upon it while he pushed his angry face forward until it was within a foot of that of the merchant. "Don't you try that game on, mate, for I am a freeborn British seaman, and I am under the thumb of no man. You'd reduce my salary, would ye?" roared Captain Hamilton Miggs, working himself into a fury. "Me that has worked for ye, and slaved for ye, and risked my life for ye. You try it on, guv'nor, just you try it on! Suppose I let out that little story o' the painting out o' the marks—where would the firm of Girdlestone be then? I guess you'd rather double my wage than have that yarn goin' about."

"What do you mean?"

"What do I mean? You don't know what I mean, do you? Of course not. It wasn't you as set us on to go at night and paint out the government Plimsoll marks and paint 'em in again higher up, so as to be able to overload. That wasn't you, was it?"

"Do you mean to assert that it was?"

"In course I do," thundered the angry seaman.

The senior partner struck the gong which stood upon the table. "Gilray," he said quietly, "go out and bring in a policeman."

Captain Hamilton Miggs seemed to be somewhat startled by this sudden move of his antagonist. "Steady your helm, governor," he said. "What are ye up to now?"

"I'm going to give you in charge."

"What for?"

"For intimidating and using threatening language, and endeavoring to extort money under false pretenses."

"There's no witnesses," the sailor said in a half-cringing, half-defiant manner.

"Oh, yes, there are," Ezra Girdlestone remarked, coming into the room. He had been standing between the two doors which led to the counting house, and had overheard the latter portion of the conversation. "Don't let me interrupt you. You were saying that you would blacken my father's character unless he increased your salary."

"I didn't mean no harm," said Captain Hamilton Miggs, glancing nervously from the one to the other. He had been fairly well known to the law in his younger days, and had no desire to renew the acquaintance.

"Who painted out those Plimsoll marks?" asked the merchant.

"It was me."

"Did any one suggest it to you?"

"No."

"Shall I send in the policeman, sir?" asked Gilray, opening the door.

"Ask him to wait for a moment," Girdlestone answered. "And now, captain, to return to the original point, shall we dry dock the Black Eagle and reduce the salary, or do you see your way to going back in her on the same terms?"

"I'll go back," said the captain recklessly. "When d'ye want me to start?"

"When she's unloaded and loaded up again. Three weeks or a month yet. I expect that Spender will have come in with the Maid of Athens by that time."

"Unless some accident happens on the way," said Captain Hamilton Miggs, with a leer. "He was at Sierra Leone when we came up the coast. I say," he continued, giving his employer a confidential nudge with his elbow, "suppose we'd gone down in the bay this last time, you'd ha' been a bit out in your reckoning—eh, what?"

"Why so?"

"Well, we were over-insured on our outward passage. An accident then might ha' put thousands in your pocket I know. Coming back, though, the cargo was worth more than the insurance, I reckon. You'd ha' been out o' pocket if we'd foundered."

"We take our chance of these things," the merchant said with dignity.

"Well, good morning, guv'nor," Captain Hamilton Miggs said brusquely.

As he passed out through the office, Ezra rejoined his father.

"He's a rum chap," he remarked, jerking his head in the direction which Miggs had taken. "A useful servant, though."

"The fellow's half a savage himself," his father said. "He's in his element among them. That's why he gets on so well with them."

"He doesn't seem much the worse for the climate, either."

"His body does not, but his ideas are shockingly immoral! However, to return to business. I wish you to see the underwriters and pay the premium of the Black Eagle. If you see your way to it, increase the policy, but do it carefully, Ezra, and with tact. She will start about the time of the equinoctial gales. If anything should happen to her, it would be as well that the firm should have a margin on the right side."

CHAPTER III.

The residence of Major Tobias Clutterbuck was not known to any of his friends. It is true that at times he alluded in a modest way to his "little place," and even went the length of remarking airily to new acquaintances that he hoped they would look him up any time they happened to be in his direction. As he carefully refrained, however, from ever giving the slightest indication of which direction that might be, his invitations never led to any practical results. Still, they had the effect of filling the recipient with a vague sense of proffered hospitality, and occasionally led to more substantial kindness in return.

The gallant major's figure was a familiar one in the card room of the "Rag and Bobtail," or at the bow window of the Jeunesse Doree. Tall and pompous, with a portly frame and a puffy clean-shaven face which peered over an abnormally high collar and old fashioned linen cravat, he stood as a very type and emblem of staid middle-aged respectability. The major's hat was always of the glossiest, the major's coat was without a wrinkle, and, in short, from the summit of the major's bald head to his bulbous fingertips and his gouty toes, there was not a flaw which the most severe critic of deportment could have detected. Let us add that the conversation of the major was as irreproachable as his person—that he was a distinguished soldier and an accomplished traveler, with a retentive memory and a mind stuffed with the good things of a lifetime. Combine all these qualities, and one would naturally regard the major as a most desirable acquaintance.

Standing at the head of the broad stone steps which lead up to the palatial edifice which its occupiers irreverently term the "Rag and Bobtail," he was explaining to a bull-necked, olive-complexioned young man, the series of marriages and inter-marriages which had culminated in the production of his own portly, stiff-backed figure. His companion, who was none other than Ezra Girdlestone of the great African firm of that name, leaned against one of the pillars of the portico and listened gloomily to the major's family reminiscences, giving an occasional yawn which he made no attempt to conceal.

"It's as plain as the fingers of me hand," the old soldier said in a wheezy muffled brogue as if he were speaking from under a feather bed. "See here now, Girdlestone—this is Miss Letitia Snackles, of Snackleton, a cousin of old Sir Joseph." The major tapped his thumb with the silver head of his walking stick to represent the maiden Snackles. "She marries Crawford, of the Blues—one o' the Warwickshire Crawfords; that's him"—here he elevated his stubby forefinger—"and here's their three children, Jemima, Harold and John." Up went three other fingers. "Jemima Crawford grows up, and then Charley Clutterbuck runs away with her. This other thumb o' mine will stand for that young divil Charley, and then my fingers——"

"Oh, hang your fingers," Girdlestone exclaimed with emphasis. "It's very interesting, major, but it would be more intelligible if you wrote it out."

"And so I shall, me boy!" the major cried enthusiastically, by no means abashed at the sudden interruption. "I'll draw it up on a bit of foolscap paper. Let's see. Fenchurch street, eh? Address to the offices, of course. Though for that matter, 'Girdlestone, London,' would find you. I was spakin' of ye to Sir Musgrave Moore, of the Rifles the other day, and he knew you at once. 'Girdlestone?' says he. 'The same,' says I. 'A merchant prince?' says he. 'The same,' says I. 'I'd be proud to meet him,' says he. 'And you shall,' says I. He's the best blood of county Waterford."

"More blood than money, I suppose," the young man said. "I'm due in the city. The governor leaves at four. Cool-by; shall I see you to-night?"

"Card room, as per usual," quoth the clean-shaven warrior. He looked after the retreating figure of his late companion with anything but a pleasant expression upon his face. The young man happened to glance round as he was half way down the street, on which the major smiled after him paternally, and gave a merry flourish with his stick.

At last he hailed a passing bus, into which he sprang. After a drive which brought him to the other side of the city, he got out in a broad, busy thoroughfare, lined with large shops. Down a somber avenue the major strutted with all his wonted pomposity, until about half way down he reached a tall grim-looking house, with many notices of "apartments" glaring from the windows. The major walked briskly up the stone steps, and pushing open the great splotchy door, which bore upon it a brass plate indicating that the establishment was kept by a Mrs. Robins, he walked into the hall with the air of one who treads familiar ground. Up one flight of stairs, up two flights of stairs did he climb, until on the fourth landing he pushed open a door and found himself in a small room, which formed for the nonce the "little place" about which he was wont at the club to make depreciatory allusions, so skillfully introduced that the listener was left in doubt as to whether the major was the happy possessor of a country house and grounds, or whether he merely owned a large suburban villa. Even this modest sanctum was not entirely the major's own, as was shown by the presence of a ruddy-faced man with a long, tawny beard, who sat on one side of the empty fireplace. As the other entered, the man in the chair gave vent to a guttural grunt, and Major Clutterbuck returned the greeting with an off-handed nod. His next proceeding was to take off his glossy hat, and pack it away in a hat box. He then removed his coat, his collar, his tie and his gaiters with equal solicitude, and put them in a place of safety. After which he donned a long purple dressing gown and a smoking cap, in which garb he performed the first steps of a mazurka as a sign of the additional ease which he experienced.

"Not much to dance about either, me boy," the old soldier said, seating himself in a camp chair and putting his feet upon another one. "We're all on the verge. Unless luck takes a turn there's no saying what may become of us."

"We have been badder than this before now many a time," said the yellow bearded man, in an accent which proclaimed him to be a German. "My money will come, or something will arrive to set all things right."

Sigismond von Baumser was a political refugee from the Fatherland who had managed to become foreign clerk in a small London firm, an occupation which just enabled him to keep body and soul together. He and the major had lodged in different rooms in another establishment until some common leaven of Bohemianism had brought them together. When circumstances had driven them out of their former abode it had occurred to the major that by sharing his rooms with Von Baumser he would diminish his own expenses, and at the same time secure an agreeable companion, for the veteran was a sociable soul in his unofficial hours, and had all the Hibernian dislike to solitude. The arrangement commended itself to the German, for he had a profound admiration for the other's versatile talents and varied experiences, so he grunted an acquiescence and the thing was done. When the major's luck was good there were brave times in the little fourth floor back. On the other hand, if any slice of good fortune came in the German's way, the major had a fair share of the prosperity. During the hard times which intervened between these gleams of opulence, the pair roughed it uncomplainingly as best they might.

"Have you had your letter?" the major asked. The German was expecting his quarterly remittance from his friends at home, and they were both anxiously awaiting it.

Von Baumser shook his head.

"They should have sent a wake ago."

"But you—how do you stand for money?"

Major Clutterbuck took ten sovereigns out of his trousers pocket and placed them upon the table. "You know me law," he said, "I never on any consideration break into these. You can't sit down to play cards for high stakes with less in your purse, and if I was to change one they'd all go like a wuff o' smoke. Bar this money I've hardly a penny."

"Nor me," said Von Baumser, despondently.

"I say, Baumser, I can't stand that young fellow Girdlestone. I'll have to chuck him up. He's a cold-blooded, flinty-hearted, calculating sort of a chap."

"What for did you make him your friend, then?"

"Well," the old soldier confessed, "it seemed to me that if he wanted to fool his money away at cards, Tobias Clutterbuck might as well have the handling of it as any one else. He plays a safe game for low stakes, and never throws away a chance. I think I've been a loser in pocket by knowing him, while as to me character, I'm very sure I'm the worse there."

"Vat's the matter mit him?"

"What's not the matter with him? If he's agreeable he's not natural, and if he's natural he's not agreeable. I don't pretend to be a saint. I've seen some fun in my day, and hope to see some more before I die, but there are some things that I wouldn't do. If I live be cards it's all fair and above board. I never play anything but games o' skill, and I reckon on me skill bringing me out on the right side, taking one night with another through the year. Again, at billiards I may not always play me best, but that's generalship. You don't want a whole room to know to a point what your game is. I'm the last man to preach, but I don't like that chap, and I don't like that handsome brazen face of his. I've spent the greater part of my life reading folks' faces, and never very far out, either."

"Vat did you say his name was?" Von Baumser asked, suddenly.

"Girdlestone."

"Is his father a merchant? One who trades with the Afrikaner?"

"The same."

Von Baumser took a bulky pocketbook from his inside pocket and scanned a long list of names therein. "Ah, it is the same," he cried at last triumphantly, shutting up the book and replacing it. "Girdlestone & Co., African merchants—Fenchurch street, City."

"Those are they."

"And you say they are rich?"

"Yes. Very rich."

"Very rich! Ho, ho! Very rich!" he laughed. "I know dem, not as friends, but I know dem and their affairs."

"What are you driving at? Let's have it. Out with it, man."

"I tell you," said the German, suddenly becoming supernaturally solemn and sawing his hand up and down in the air to emphasize his remarks, "in three or four months, or a year at the most, there will be no firm of Girdlestone. They are rotten, useless—whoo!" He blew an imaginary feather up into the air to demonstrate the extreme fragility of the house in question.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Thomas Hilliard will die of tetanus at Gary. John Ardner quarreled with him, and bit a chunk out of his chin.

Grant Pinkston, aged 30, and single, was run down and killed at Evansville by a switch engine on the Louisville & Nashville railroad.

Nicholas Behne, teamster, who sued the city of Evansville for $7,000 damages because of injuries received, has recovered a verdict for $3,500.

George E. Doolittle, of Logansport, 68 years of age, dropped dead on the street while going to his work as a machinist in the Pan Handle shops.

Perry Keyser, of Goshen, driving a sled loaded with coal, saved his life by jumping when a Lake Shore train hit his coal outfit on a crossing and reduced it to wreckage.

George Wagner, while personating Santa Claus in a school entertainment at Maple Grove, accidentally touched his beard to one of the lighted candles and he was severely burned about the head and breast.

Samuel Meyer, aged 75 years, more familiarly known as "Cheap John," for forty-six years a resident of Goshen, and widely known as a clothing merchant, died at his home. He leaves four daughters and three sons.

William Eskew, a shoemaker, 92 years old, of Anderson, died there recently. He was born at Chillicothe, Ohio. He and Allen G. Thurman were classmates in a district school when Mr. Thurman's father was the teacher.

John Reed, a veteran of the War of the Rebellion, was struck by a Lake Erie train on a street crossing at Tipton and hurled ten feet on one side, escaping with many bruises but with unbroken bones. His condition is serious.

The merchants of Paoli have discontinued the free delivery of goods to customers, which began eight years ago, on the ground that the expense of free delivery reduces to a small margin the profit of the sale of merchandise.

Albert Monnett, who was deaf, while walking across the Vandalia railway tracks at Greencastle, was struck by a freight train, receiving injuries which terminated in death some hours later. His mother and brother witnessed the accident.

Mrs. Sophia Hinds, of Warsaw, saved her own life by rare presence of mind. Her clothing caught fire from a gasoline stove, and the woman subdued the flames by throwing herself into the snow in her front yard. Her injuries are not severe.

The Indiana Reformatory printing trade school at Jeffersonville has turned out a calendar for 1908, prepared by the Rev. W. E. Edgin, chaplain, and published under direction of Charles Reeder, instructor in printing. It is a neat piece of work.

Lauren Dimmick, employed by the Vail Cooperage Company at South Whitley, lacerated the third finger of his left hand so seriously with a saw that it was found necessary to amputate it at the second joint. Just how the accident occurred Mr. Dimmick is unable to state.

Robert Mitchell, one of the most progressive agriculturists of the State, and for over twenty years connected with the State Board of Agriculture, died at his home in Princeton. Death was due to pneumonia, after a short illness. He was 76 years old, and a native of Scotland.

William O. Lynch, who since 1896 has been teacher in the Elkhart High School, has resigned and will re-enter the University of Wisconsin to take the master's degree. His successor has not been named, but it is expected to be Prof. Arthur Bobbitt, who has been in the same school two years.

George Knight, a farmer, has placed on exhibition at Owensville several ear of freak corn. He has six ears grown from one grain of corn; four ears of another kind grown from a single grain, and three ears of another kind grown from a single grain. The six ears are nearly all the same size and shape. Each ear was on a stalk to itself, the stalks coming from the grain after the manner of wheat.

A broadcloth suit of wedding clothes, made by Andrew Johnson before he became President of the United States, is in possession of the Catron heirs, who live east of Frankfort in the Middlefork neighborhood. The suit is made of the finest French doeskin and was worn by Andrew Catron, who died recently on his Clinton County farm. The suit is in a good state of preservation. It was made several years before the Civil War at Greenville, Tenn., where Andrew Johnson kept a tailor shop. Mr. Catron's measure was taken by the man who became President when Wilkes Booth assassinated Abraham Lincoln. Mr. Catron was himself a Democrat and was a great admirer of Andrew Johnson.

Urban Lawson, of Terre Haute, is in jail for cutting his wife's throat. The wound is not mortal.

The Knights of Pythians of Wabash have just dedicated with festal ceremonies the new home which was recently purchased.

Joe, the 16-year-old son of George Robson, a sign writer of New Castle, was accidentally shot and killed by Freddie Scott, aged 13.

As the result of a slight pin scratch inflicted on one of her fingers six weeks ago, Mrs. Mary Barrett died at Frankfort of blood poisoning.

Andrew A. Copeland, aged 64, despondent over long illness, tried to kill himself at Indianapolis, but his razor did not reach the jugular vein.

Stanislaus Putz is in jail at South Bend charged with many burglaries. His last alleged offense was the robbery of a local subpostal station.

Harry P. Johnson, of Brazil, has been notified of his appointment to a responsible position with the police force in the canal zone, Panama.

Samuel Johnson, the oldest native of Indianapolis, died at the home of his son, Dr. William H. Johnson, on Roosevelt avenue. He was born in 1822.

Mrs. Phoebe Klinger, who conducted a boarding house, died at South Bend after drinking carbolic acid, taken, it is said, because of domestic troubles.

James Russ, residence unknown, fell down a flight of stairs at the Gilmartin Hotel in South Bend, breaking his neck and right arm and dying almost instantly.

Harry Foshaar, aged 13, is dead of an accidental gunshot wound inflicted a week ago by Ross Miller, aged 16, while they were hunting. Both live in Terre Haute.

E. E. McDivitt, of the Richmond Shoe Company, was asphyxiated in his home in Richmond during the absence of his wife. His death is thought to be accidental.

John Terrell, a farmer, near Frankfort, was killed by being crushed under a log house, which he was attempting to raise. His wife and a son were assisting him.

Willie Day, 7 years old, son of Cyrus Day, farmer, near Belzer, while hunting, accidentally shot himself and died soon after. He was with an elder brother, who entrusted the gun to the lad while they were returning home. While handling it he shot himself in the face.

Mt. Summit, a little village five miles north of New Castle, was visited by robbers, who entered the postoffice and took $5 in money and about 1,000 two-cent stamps. The safe in the West hardware store was blown open and $105 in cash secured. The robbers then stole a horse and buggy and left.

Mrs. Minnie Dayson, 53 years old, committed suicide by hanging herself from the banitsers on the second floor at her home in Vincennes, and when found by her sister, Mrs. Priscilla Eph, the body was cold. She had been mentally unbalanced for a week, it is said, because of anxiety for her son, William, a soldier in Cuba, from whom she had not heard since December 4.

Jesse May, while assisting in unloading a gas engine on a car at the Pan Handle railway station at Jonesboro, was struck by the "gin-pole," used as a derrick for block and tackle, the pole striking him across the forehead, destroying the sight of his right eye and hurling him to the ground in a semi-conscious condition. His recovery is doubtful. He has a wife and five children.

Dr. Z. T. Sweeney, State Commissioner of Fisheries and Game, and father-in-law of Lieut. Governor Hugh T. Miller, was almost asphyxiated while in his bath at his office in Columbus by escaping artificial gas from a heater. Dr. Sweeney was nearly overcome when he realized his condition and jumping from the tub managed to open the door. After a time the fresh air eliminated the effects of the gas.

Warsaw may soon have a municipal water and light plant. The Winona Water and Light Company, which has furnished water and light for the city of Warsaw for nearly fifty years, is desirous of selling. According to a statement made by the officials of the plant the company lost $5,400 on the water plant alone during the past eleven months. The members of the Warsaw City Council believe that the plant can be made to pay and that it is paying now. The Ten Thousand Club, a commercial organization, has named a committee to inquire into the feasibility of purchasing the plant and will soon make recommendations.

Partners In Guilt.

On Friday of last week, Chicago lawfully hanged a poor wretch for one of the most brutal murders ever committed in this city. In the sickening chilly gray of the morning when they hanged him arousing from the fitful slumbers of the night, the poor fellow said to his guards:

"It is the saloons that I have to blame for my terrible ending. They are a curse to mankind and should be driven from the face of the earth. I had as good, kind and loving mother as any man and she is living today to see her son hanged as a murderer on the gallows. It is an awful ending, but had I heeded her things would have been different.

"It was the saloons that did it. Whisky made me crazy. I did not know what I was doing. It was poison, and it drove me from bad to worse, and the gallows is the certain end. The gallows is waiting for others who persist in leading such a life. I hope my case will be a warning to others; and my last prayer will be that the saloons be driven out of existence."

The Saloon as a Business Factor.

Ex-Governor Larrabee of Iowa says: "I used to think years ago that so long as I left the saloons alone they would leave me alone. But I was engaged in business for twenty years, during which I permitted several thousand dollars' worth of accounts to accumulate on my books. When I sold out and attempted to collect these I found they were worthless, and that nine-tenths of my debtors would not have been so bad if it not been that they had been spending their money for strong drink while I was keeping their families in provisions.

"It was therefore apparent that, as a matter of fact, I had been the greatest patron of the saloons in our community. I had really contributed more to the saloonkeeper than any other person in town. All of us, no matter how temperate we are, will some days find that we are directly concerned in the saloon traffic."—The Journal of Inebriety.

Three arguments against the saloons: The economical argument—we can't afford it; the moral argument—it injures the character of our people; the political argument—it corrupts our politics.

Press despatches from Cincinnati note the fact that a secret meeting of the big brewers of Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Louis, Cincinnati, and other cities, was held in that city August 28 at which the tremendouus strides of prohibition were thoroughly discussed. A committee was appointed to organize the brewers in a new militant opposition, and plans laid for the subscription of a million dollar fund to fight it in the south and other parts of the country where prohibition is rapidly gaining ground.

The province of Prince Edward Island, Canada, passed a provincial prohibition law in July, 1906. It had previously made three other experiments in dealing with the traffic; namely, (1) license, (2) a sort of regulation tax somewhat akin to license, and (3) prohibition under the provisions of the local option or Scott act. The results in arrests for drunkenness in Charlottetown [population over 13,000] under each method, are as follows: Under license [arrests in one year] 701; under regulation act, 400; under prohibition by local option in counties, 240, under provisional prohibition [arrests in 1905] 95; under provisional prohibition [arrests in 1906] 79. During first two months of the present year the arrests for drunkenness in that city were only three.

The leading newspaper of the city and the only morning daily in the province, the Charlottetown Guardian, thus sums up the results of prohibition:

We have better hotels, more prosperous stores, better sidewalks, steadier employment for labor at better wages, more of order, content, peace and prosperity than ever we had in the days of free rum or liquor license. To most people these are good things. Prohibition in Charlottetown has reduced the number of arrests for drunkenness to less than one-fifth of the number arrested here in the days of license. There must be something wrong with the brain "cortex" of any man who cannot see that this is a good thing.

Rank Foolishness.

Rheumatism

I have found a tried and tested cure for Rheumatism! Not a remedy that will straighten the distorted limbs of chronic cripples, nor turn bony growths back to flesh again. That is impossible. But I can now surely kill the pains and pangs of this deplorable disease.

In Germany—with a Chemist in the City of Darmstadt—I found the last ingredient with which Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Remedy was made a perfected, dependable prescription. Without that last ingredient, I successfully treated many, many cases of Rheumatism; but now, at last, it uniformly cures all curable cases of this heretofore much dreaded disease. Those sand-like granular wastes, found in Rheumatic Blood, seem to dissolve and pass away under the action of this remedy as freely as does sugar when added to pure water. And then, when dissolved, these poisonous wastes freely pass from the system, and the cause of Rheumatism is gone forever. There is now no real need—no actual excuse to suffer longer without help. We sell, and in confidence recommend

A tickling cough, from any cause, is quickly stopped by Dr, Shoop's Cough Cure. And it is so thoroughly harmless and safe that Dr. Shoop tells mothers everywhere to give it without hesitation even to very young babes. The wholesome green leaves and tender stems of a lung-healing mountainous shrub, furnishes the curative properties to Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. It calms the cough and heals the sore throat and sensitive bronchial membranes. No opium, no chloroform, nothing harsh used to injure or suppress. Simply a resinous plant extract that helps to heal aching lungs. The Spaniards call this shrub which the Doctor uses, "The Sacred Herb." Always demand Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. All dealers.

If there were no women, men would have no object in life: their mustaches would cease to interest them; they would not care a Chinaman whether their collars were ironed or not; they would have nobody to nurse them when they had the tooth ache, or to keep them from believing they were going to die when an old-fashioned stomach-ache had the grip upon them. There would be nobody to take for ice cream, and no small edition of flesh and blood to hug. There would be nobody to fight against being kissed and then take to it as a cat does to cream. Most important of all there would be nobody to write about, to complain of and to love with all your heart and soul. Without her, man would never get to heaven and without them they would never have a taste of the other place on earth So if man has any sense whatever, he'll put his arm around the woman he is the fondest of, thank the good Lord for her, and wonder, as she does, what in the world he would do without her.

Teaching.

At St. Joe fifteen entirely new students have asked for time 1908.

Possibly some students of 1907, who have not made postive re-engagement are expecting me as teacher again and if so, will be given preference if they notify me in time; but I cannot promise to hold time long as several desire an early answer.

I expect to cover less territory, treat all alike by not soliciting any, old or new, as more than enough new students have applied to fill all available time not now engaged by old students.

Taken Too Soon.

The deputy collector of internal revenue received a telephone message at noon yesterday from the mayor of Garrett, informing him that a foreigner had been arrested there for peddling liquor from house to house. Mr. Sharp went to Garrett on the first interurban and found a very much frightened Hungarian, who could not speak English, locked up in the calaboose and a two gallon jug of whiskey reposing in the mayor's office. He secured an interpreter from the railroad shops who brought out the information that the man under arrest was a Hungarian, and had not been peddling the whiskey at all, but intended to get outside all of it. The man said he had come to Fort Wayne and bought the whiskey at Morris King's saloon in the rolling mill district, and took it back to Garrett. He was a stranger in the town and got on the wrong street while looking for his boarding house. He was wandering aimlessly about when the marshal picked him up believing that he was going about offering the whiskey for sale. Mr. Sharp asked why the whiskey wasn't purchased at Garrett and was told that it was too expensive there, the saloonkeepers charging a dollar a quart, while it could be got at King's place for $2 a gallon.—Saturday's Gazette.

Duties of Supervisor.

Supervisors are to keep animals off roads in townships where they are not permitted to run at large. They are required to take up animals, upon "view" or information," or they can be fined.

Supervisors must see that all dead animals are buried or burned.

ART OF GOING WITHOUT.

By Rev. T. Calvin McClelland, D. D.

I know how to be abased.—Philippians iv. 12.

St. Paul says he has learned the art of going without. It is easy to lose, but it is hard to lose and keep one's spirit. It is easy to lose one's money, but it is hard for made-to-order feet to walk gracefully in bargain-counter shoes. Old age comes without trying, but after working forty years a man must have learned how to give up—to retire graciously.

The secret learned by St. Paul had two parts. First, he looked on loss as intrinsically useful. The loser gives up, but he gets. Adversity has a value.

Tolstoy's Peter, the richest man in Russia, taken prisoner of war, learned for the first time hunger and fatigue, but he learned more—the pleasure of eating when hungry, of sleeping after hard work; lying on the bare ground for the first time, he saw the sun rise, and took in the meaning of the midnight with its myriad stars.

Poverty brings the feeling of the primary happinesses; bankruptcy is a great teacher of the higher values. When a man lies petulant with convalescence he appreciates love's patience. When traditional opinions buckle one discovers that the plain face of duty has the features of her father, God. One never forgets the ineffable movement when feeling the hand he has always held slip away, he looked up, and through his tears saw the heavens open and the assurance of personal immortality descend upon him.

Wealth, health, faith and life have their revelations like the sunshine, panorama of mountain, river, flower and bird. But poverty, doubt, sickness and death, like the night, let in the host of heaven and widen creation till it reaches the fiery margin of infinity.

Wealth, health, faith and life have their revelations like the sunshine, panorama of mountain, river, flower and bird. But poverty, doubt, sickness and death, like the night, let in the host of heaven and widen creation till it reaches the fiery margin of infinity.

The first part of St. Paul's success of going without is, accept loss as a condition with a character of its own.

The second part of his secret is he had a masterful purpose. "I can do all things in Him that strengtheneth me," he said. He was able to go without, because he lived for one thing, to make men Christlike, lovers and doers of good.

An overbearing purpose makes a man put up with anything. Last summer the family slept in that attic with only blankets to cut the place into make-believe rooms, but every one slept well, because the mountains were just over the hill. When one goes for mountains, what boots a bit of publicity and corn husks instead of curled hair?

That wealthy man is known less by his riches than by his hobby for settlements. Then he who made dollars a minute works for dollars a month without whining, because when work is over he goes down to the club house his wealth built and by association with the lads makes them love character even more than they love the club house. And the hobby is the secret of retiring gracefully.

The man who has to give up the old ways of thinking about truth saves himself from skepticism because before the time of transition he devoted himself to doing good as well as believing good. And when he is compelled to say farewell to his heart's companion at the door which swings only outward what will save him from forewandering in his loneliness?

By living deeply, earnestly while his friend is with him for the things that abide—faith, hope and love. A mutual interest in the eternals gives one a great sense of the infinite companionship when the old companion goes away. So one must have an imperative work, must be taken up with something that is worth fitting into God's scheme to stay, then when money goes or health or friend a man has no chance to brood over himself.

It is worth while knowing how to lose gracefully. This is how—to accept loss as a positive experience with bitter-sweet gains, to be commanded by an interest, and this is the greatest interest to get folks to be Christianlike lovers and doers of the good.

RELIGION AND NATIONAL LIFE.

By Henry F. Cope.

"Blessed is the people that know the joyful sound; they shall walk, O Lord, in the light of thy countenance."—Psalms 89:15.

When the man of the painfully pious appearance tells us that he is so much absorbed in religion that he has no time to think of politics or of national affairs common sense usually allays our resentment by reminding us that he is so small a fraction of a cipher that religion is none the richer for a monopoly of him and political affairs none the poorer for losing him.

No man can be religious who neglects the world in which he lives or the nation of which he is a part. Piety is not for the closet or the church, not for the separate places alone, but for every relation of human life. You cannot put your religion in a compartment by itself; it is a spirit, an atmosphere, and a principle which must pervade all.

There is a great difference between the relations which religion must hold to national life and the relation which religious and ecclesiastical organizations hold. The very separation between church and state upon which we insist in America makes the more necessary the deeper permeation of our whole national life with the spirit of morality and religion.

You cannot escape from religion in history and in human affairs. It makes no difference whatever whether the name of the deity be in the constitution of a nation or not, the fact of the religious impulse and motive remains. You might take the mention of religious names from all history, but you could never tell the story of the life of a people if you refuse to recognize this mighty spirit.

The tide in human affairs, the movements that mark human progress or recession, these are of far greater importance than names and dates, buildings and administrations. And back of these tides are mighty forces, great, all compelling motives. These forces we call tradition, religion, patriotism. The true historian looks for the forces.

We are what we are to-day because of deep convictions that our fathers held, because of aspirations and ideals which they cherished, because of the atmosphere of spiritual beliefs in which they lived, and because they counted these things of such value to them that their lives weighed as nothing in the balance. Ideals have ever dominated the world and determined the real conditions that should be.

The ideals of liberty, the conception of human rights, the conviction as to the freedom of the conscience, these all constitute essentially religious principles. They are born of the recognition of man as other than clay, as a being of spiritual heritages and possibilities. Men lived and died for these only as they conceived of their high duty to humanity and of the infinite justice that is over all.

No greater folly could befog our minds to-day than to think that we can attain national prosperity and permanency apart from spiritual ideals. He does not love his land who desires nothing better or greater for her than that she shall be rich in bushels of wheat and billions of gold. Greater than our need of things is the need of the strong hand of the nation to hold them and the wise heart to administer them.

The foundations of a nation are laid in human lives; what they will be in form and whether they shall endure depends on the character of the men and women of the nation. They only build wisely who build from the base up, beginning with character, setting the foundations firm in religious motives and moral ideals. In the final clearing house of history nations have no currency other than character.

The most we can do for America is to make good Americans, men who hold principle and ideals above all else, who so love honor and hate the lie, so look to the things that are higher and turn from those that are lower, so catch the vision of infinite values in individuals in society, and in their own lives, that no bolts or bribes of the pit's devising can turn them from the path of duty and light, and so this spirit filling all, all move together to the fulfillment of the purposes of the most high for this people.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't be impatient. Patience is proof of piety.

Don't imagine that there is no progress in religious experience. Religion can only defend the truth as it discovers new truth.

HYMNS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

The Throne of Grace.

They who seek the throne of grace
Find that throne in every place;
If we live a life of prayer,
God is present everywhere.

In our sickness and our health,
In our want or in our wealth,
If we look to God in prayer,
God is present everywhere.

When our earthly comforts fail,
When the foes of life prevail,
'Tis the time for earnest prayer;
God is present everywhere.

Then, my soul, in every strait,
To thy Father come, and wait;
He will answer every prayer;
God is present everywhere.

OUR BUDGET OF FUN.

HUMOROUS SAYINGS AND DOINGS HERE AND THERE.

Jokes and Jokelets that Are Supposed to Have Been Recently Born—Sayings and Doings that Are Old, Curious and Laughable—The Week's Humor.

Stubb—I see your family are back from Europe. Are they well?

Penn—I don't know. Haven't had time to ask them. I've been too busy trying to get over the flood of souvenir postals they sent me from the other side.

Wisdom of the Seer.

Young Lady—Will the young man I am engaged to make a good husband?

Fortune Teller—It's up to you to make a good husband of him. All bad husbands are self-made.

Disappointed.

"What's the matter, boy?"

"I dreamed teacher broke his leg!"

"Cheer up, dreams seldom come true!"

"I know they don't, and that's what's the matter!"

The Reason.

"Mr. Featherly is the most considerate boarder I have," said Mrs. Hasher. "He never takes the last piece of bread from the plate."

"You bet he doesn't," rejoined one of the other boarders. "He ain't quick enough."

As She Had Observed.

"But I love you dearly," protested the poor but otherwise honest young man, "and it is love, you know, that makes the world go round."

"Yes," rejoined the pretty but otherwise unfair maid, "but it takes money to lubricate the axle."

From Bad to Worse.

Wife (angrily)—Well, there's no use in arguing the matter. When I set my foot down that covers the entire ground.

Husband (calmly)—I wouldn't make it quite that strong, my dear, but your foot certainly does cover a good deal of ground.

Must Have.

"He says I am a fool!"

"Well?"

"I have never met him!"

"Perhaps some one told him."—Houston Post.

Conspirator.

Youngster—Well, I finally made sister throw herself into George's arms last night!

Mother—Bless you, my child! But how did you manage it?

Youngster—Just peeked through the parlor door, and at the right moment yelled "rats!"

Not After She'd Got a Crack at It.

Alice—Her husband is worth a million, isn't he?

Albert—When she married him he was.

The Coal Bin.

"The empty fields,
So sere and thin,"
But the saddest is—
The empty bin.

Museum Muses.

The Sword Swallower—Why do you let that "Tattooing Artist" help you count up the house every night?

The Manager—Oh! he's good at figures.

Weak.

"Ah!" exclaimed the new boarder as he put down his empty cup, "that's quite a good idea."

"Yes?" replied Mrs. Starvem, patronizingly. "Then you haven't been accustomed to begin your dinner with consomme served in a cup, eh?"

"Consomme. Why, I thought it was hot water to prevent dyspepsia."—Philadelphia Press.

Changed His Opinion.

Eva—He used to say she was the most graceful girl in town. What changed his opinion?

Katherine—Why, he came upon her unexpectedly while she was eating corn from the ear.

The Enjoyable Feature.

Jennie—Do you enjoy sleigh riding, Grace?

Grace—Ever so much. It's such rare fun stopping at the farm houses once in a while to get thawed out.

Mean Comparison.

"Confound these railroad time tables," snapped Mr. Stubb as the long folder refused to remain closed long enough for him to place it in his pocket. "They remind me of a woman."

"The idea!" replied his wife in surprise. "What is the comparison?"

"Why, they are hard to understand and you can't get them to shut up."

Settled.

Hubby—I honestly think I am going to have appendicitis.

Wifey—Well, I'm sure I'm going to have a new hat, and your old appendicitis can wait.

The Paternal Dictionary.

"What is it, my son?"

"Pa, what does 'intermittent' mean?"

"'Intermittent,' my son, is an adjective which describes my part of the conversation when I try to reason with your mother."

"Pa;" (a moment later.)

"Well, my son?"

"Pa, what is a financial crisis?"

"A financial crisis, my son, is that state of domestic affairs superinduced by the purchase of your mother's spring bonnet."—Brooklyn Life.

A Yearning.

He—I wish this umbrella was ourn and it would rain forever!

Evidently.

Ethel (looking at the statue of Venus)—It seems to me, Maud, that the women in ancient times had larger waists than they have now.

Maud—Well, perhaps the men had longer arms.

Misunderstood Him.

Hix—Did you hear about the awful fright that I got on my wedding day?

Dix—Hush! No man should talk like that about his wife.

Another View.

Solemn Man—Do you hear the clock slowly ticking? Do you know what day it is ever bringing nearer?

Cheerful Man—Yes, pay day.

In a Utah Newspaper Office.

"What can I do for you, madam?"

"I am the latest wife of Elder Jones, who died this morning, and I'd like to have you say in the obituary notice that I am his most immediate relative."—Harper's Weekly.

Exactly.

"Papa, what is a kleptomaniac?"

"A kleptomaniac, son, is a man or a woman who takes things easy."—Houston Post.

A Double Meaning.

"Ah!" sighed the love-lorn youth, "I wish you would give me that ring on your finger as a reminder of my love for you—because it has no ending."

"No," replied the fair maid, "I shall keep on wearing it as a reminder of my love for you—it has no beginning."

In the Language.

"Some one has said that a kiss is the language of love," remarked the young man in the parlor scene.

"Well," rejoined the fair maid on the far end of the sofa, "why don't you get busy and say something?"

Fixed Location.

"Say," queried the pedestrian, "is that clock right over there?"

"Well," replied the corner loafer, "it certainly ain't anywhere else."

Another Fatal Error.

Myer—I saw a mule try to run away with a cart loaded with pig iron, but he couldn't budge it.

Gyer—Another case of "didn't know it was loaded," eh?

Habitual Constipation

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by the inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

MISS ANNIE CATRON

CATARRH MADE LIFE A BURDEN TO ME.

MISS ANNIE CATRON, 927 Main St., Cincinnati, Ohio, writes:

"As I have found Peruna a blessing for a severe case of catarrh of the head and throat which I suffered from for a number of years, I am only too pleased to give it my personal endorsement.

"Catarrh, such as I suffered from, made life a burden to me, my breath was offensive, stomach bad, and my head stopped up so that I was usually troubled with a headache, and although I tried many so-called remedies, nothing gave me permanent relief. I was rather discouraged with all medicines when Peruna was suggested to me.

"However, I did buy a bottle, and before that was finished there was a marked change in my condition. Much encouraged, I kept on until I was completely cured in a month's time, and I find that my general health is also excellent."

People who prefer solid medicines should try Peruna tablets. Each tablet represents one average dose of Peruna.

Devotion to the Ideal.

The hero of the play had just died to slow, tremulous, wabbling music, but the audience insisted on his coming before the curtain and kept up the applause for the space of five minutes.

At last a supe came out and stepped forward.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he announced in a high-keyed voice, "he says he'll have the curtain raised and you can look again on his cold corpse if you want to, but he'll be d—d if he's going to vi'late the proprieties and degrade his art by coming to life again before to-morrow evening. Thanking you again, ladies and gentlemen, I will now retire."

Muff, Collarette and Scarf.

Nothing gives a greater sense of warmth and comfort than a fur scarf and muff. This season there are a number of styles being worn, but among them all there are none better liked, nor more generally satisfactory than the collarette and scarf illustrated and the big, soft roomy muff. They can be made from genuine fur of any sort, and the making is quite easy; they can be made from one of the very handsome fur cloths for which the season is noted, or they can be made from velvet and trimmed with lace or fur. As illustrated the collarette and muff are made of brown squirrel, while the scarf is of caracul cloth, and the cloth, let it be added, is exceptionally desirable this year, being handsome and effective without meaning any sense of imitation. The collarette has a cape finish at the back and completely covers the shoulders, but the scarf is often preferred by women who do not care for quite such extreme warmth.

Child's Frock.

Such pretty little frocks as this one are always needed for the small folk, who have an unconquerable habit of destroying garments with amazing rapidity. In the illustration it is made of fine white lawn and is trimmed with frills of the material and embroidered discs, but it is appropriate both for all the lawns and other pretty washable materials which are worn at all seasons and for cashmere, challis and similar light weight wools, while the fact that it can be made with either the half low or high neck and with the short or long sleeves means that there are practically two designs in one.

ALMOST A SOLID SORE.

Skin Disease from Birth—Fortune Spent on Her Without Benefit—Cured Her with Cuticura.

"I have a cousin in Rockingham Co. who once had a skin disease from her birth until she was six years of age. Her father had spent a fortune on her to get her cured and none of the treatments did her any good. Old Dr. —— suggested that he try the Cuticura Remedies, which he did. When he commenced to use it the child was almost a solid scab. He had used it about two months and the child was well. I could hardly believe she was the same child. Her skin was as soft as a baby's without a scar on it. I have not seen her in seventeen years, but I have heard from her and the last time I heard she was well. Mrs. W. P. Ingle, Burlington, N. C., June 16, 1905."

The Scholar.

Dr. Evans, a witty member of the Parliament at Melbourne, was an old man, and the other members jokingly spoke of him as belonging to the era of Queen Anne.

Once, while making a speech, he referred to Queen Anne and was greeted with cries of "Did you know her?" "What was she like?"

"Yes, sir," replied the doctor, "I did know her. The scholar is contemporary with all time."

QUEEN MARGHERITA ON WOMAN.

She Abhors "Race Suicide," and Condemns So-Called "Emancipation."

The Dowager Queen Margherita of Italy has been expressing her disapproval of "race suicide" with no less frankness than President Roosevelt. Not often is a queen intervnewed; less often is a royal interview more than a collection of perfunctory phrases, polite, but insignificant. Yet Queen Margherita has been saying:

A childless family is incomplete. There is a poetry and a pathos about childhood which appeal to every right-hearted woman. Most women, though they may not be able to put this idea into words, feel it. They have the maternal instinct. Hence the remoteness of race suicide.

Women show their intellectuality by rearing healthy and great children, just as much as they do by writing books or painting pictures. The wife who deliberately refuses to bring children into the world must have something wrong with her moral make-up.

I am very pleased to know that there is a movement in the United States in favor of large families, and that President Roosevelt has put himself upon record as favoring them. European women have begun to look for light to their sisters of the United States.

On the subject of woman's "emancipation" Queen Margherita is equally outspoken:

I am absolutely opposed to any extravagant theories of what is called the emancipation of women. In whatever condition of life a woman may be placed, her first duty is the negative one of not giving up the qualities that distinguish her sex. Above all, she should guard against developing the trait of men. A blending of ancient reserve with modern independence would give us the ideal woman.

FOUND A WAY

To Be Clear of the Coffee Troubles.

"Husband and myself both had the coffee habit and finally his stomach and kidneys got in such a bad condition that he was compelled to give up a good position that he had held for years. He was too sick to work. His skin was yellow, and I hardly think there was an organ in his body that was not affected.

"I told him I felt sure his sickness was due to coffee and after some discussion he decided to give it up.

"It was a struggle, because of the powerful habit. One day we heard about Postum and concluded to try it and then it was easy to leave off coffee.

"His fearful headaches grew less frequent, his complexion began to clear, kidneys grew better until at last he was a new man altogether, as a result of leaving off coffee and taking up Postum. Then I began to drink it too.

"Although I was never as bad off as my husband, I was always very nervous and never at any time very strong, only weighing 95 lbs. before I began to use Postum. Now I weigh 115 lbs. and can do as much work as anyone my size, I think.

"Many do not use Postum because they have not taken the trouble to make it right. I have successfully fooled a great many persons who have drunk it at my table. They would remark, 'You must buy a high grade of coffee.' One young man who clerked in a grocery store was very enthusiastic about my 'coffee.' When I told him what it was, he said, 'Why, I've sold Postum for four years, but I had no idea it was like this. Think I'll drink Postum hereafter.'"

CONQUERS PAIN

Phew! Salts and Castor Oil!

Why take sickening salts or repulsive castor oil? "Goes through you like a dose of salts" means violence, grips, gripes, gases, soreness, irritation, and leaves your stomach and bowels weak and burnt out. Might just as well take concentrated lye. Then there's castor oil, disgusting, nauseating truck that your stomach refuses unless you disguise the taste. Fool your own stomach, eh? Don't ever believe that anything offensive to your taste or smell is going to do you real good. Nature makes certain things repulsive, so you will not take them. Force yourself to nauseous doses, and you ruin your digestion, weaken your bowels, destroy your health. On the other hand see what a delightful, palatable, perfect modern laxative, liver regulator and bowel tonic you find in Life of Ollie Stafford.

Ollie R. Stafford, eldest daughter of William and Mary Ann Pervines, was born in Ashland Co., Ohio, October 17, 1873 and departed this life, December 29, 1907.

When a child 3 years old she came with her parents to DeKalb Co., Indiana, where she grew to womanhood. At the age of sixteen she gave her heart to God and joined the Lutheran church at Spencerville, Ind., and lived a consistent christian life ever ready to do her duty and lend a helping hand in any church work. For many years she was church and Sunday School organist and in her girlhood days was a music teacher.

On January 31, 1897 she was united in marriage to Perry A. Stafford and to this union were born 4 children, 1 boy and 3 girls, all of whom are living the youngest child being 18 months old. She leaves to mourn her loss a husband and four children, father and mother, four sisters, five brothers, one brother, having preceeded her to the better land. She was a loving mother, always trying to bring her children up in the fear of the Lord.

Farmers' Institute

The institute was called to order by Pres. J. C. Hodges. Prayer by B. A. Hudsell. The matter of the next institute was taken up for next winter, it being unfinished work of the institute at Butler. St. Joe was tendered next years institute and was unanimously accepted by St. Joe, so the next winter's institute will be held at this place.

The subject of "A good and better way to enrich the soil" by J. M. Cantley of Logansport, Ind. Mr. Cantley's discussion was very practical and suggested a great many good points and valuable suggestions. Fred Jenkins led in the discussion and did himself "big." Several questions were asked by farmers present and satisfactorily answered by Mr. Cantley and Jenkins The forenoon session was not largely attended on account of a funeral, but the interest taken was exceedingly good. Noon.

The afternoon session was called to order at 1:30. The subject "How the prize corn in the banner corn section was grown" was discussed by Mr. Cantley. During Mr. Cantley's discussion several questions were asked by farmers present, showing good interest in the discussion. The subject of Corn Culture was very animated, several farmers entering into the discussion. The question of commercial fertilizers was very thoroughly discussed. The matter of next year's institute was taken up, H. M. Widney was chosen as chairman, he selecting the balance of the committee. It was decided that the ladies have an exhibit in connection with the above. Mrs. Howard Northrup was selected chairman of ladies' committee. The matter of sheep raising and feeding was taken up and discussed by Mr. Wm. Watson. A good many questions were asked Mr. Wats onand many opinions expressed. Mr. Watson's address was full of good suggestions and well received.

The evening session was very well attended. The music consisted of piano duets by Misses Lora Hull and Flossie Copp, a vocal duet by Misses Vera and Flossie Copp with Miss Hull at piano. Little Miss Cecil Hamilton recited two selections which were well done and well received, judging by the applause.

The address of Prof. Tarbox was very good, he presenting many good points in discussion. The question was "The necessity of education for the progressive farmer." This being his maiden effort he is to be congratulated. Prof. Cox went at his subject, Why Agriculture should be taught in schools" with his old-time vigor. He discussed the question with great earnestness and at times eloquence. He set the audience to thinking which could be told by the earnest attention.

On the whole this institute was a success, the attendance was not as large as desired but was good, the interest taken was extremely good and we believe much good to our agricultural interests will result.

Birthday Party.

A birthday party was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Mac. Leighty east of town, Friday evening, Jan. 10. The occasion being the eighteenth birthday anniversary of their daughter, Ethel. The forepart of the evening was spent in contests, of which the first prize was awarded to Miss Chloa Hill and the booby prize to Mr. Burl Ensor. Refreshments were served in two courses, after which Miss Ethel cut the birthday cake, on which were placed eighteen lighted candles, representing her age.

At a late hour the guests departed wishing her many happy returns of the day. The invited guests were: Misses Grace and Gladys Kain, Ida Washles, Chloa Hill, Maud Platter, Jessie Headley, Mildred Benninghoff, Cora Harter, Olive Handly, Marie Leighty, Gladys Barney, and the Messrs. August Kinsey Called by Death.

Was Esteemed Citizen and Honest Business Man. Largest Funeral in Years.

One of the most highly esteemed citizens of St. Joe, August Kinsey, died at his home last Tuesday evening, Jan. 7, about 9 o'clock after an illness of several months. His illness began a few years ago, but was not confined to the house for but two months, in which time he became weaker and weaker and was finally compelled to take his bed about three weeks prior to his death. During the past summer he was troubled with fainting spells which would last a a week before he recovered. Upon trying to personally attend his business affairs he would be compelled to give it up on account of his extreme nervousness. He had been in the undertaking, furniture and hardware business here for many years. He served one term as Justice of the Peace and later took out letters of notary.

Mr. Kinsey was a great lodge man, being a member of the K. of P. and I. O. O. F. lodges at this place.

The funeral services were held in the M. P. church, Friday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, conducted by Rev. S. Heminger, assisted by Rev. Brown of the Christian church. The I. O. O. F. conducted services at the church and their impressive burial services at the cemetery. The I. O. O. F.; K. of P.; and Rebekah lodges attended the funeral en masse. It was one of the largest funerals held here in years, the church being unable to accomodate the crowd.

The floral offerings were many and beautiful.

Life of A. Kinsey.

August Kinsey was born in Allen Co. Ind., Oct. 4, 1847, at which place he grew to manhood. At the age of twenty-one years he was united in marriage with Katie Byrodes, to which union were born four boys and one girl, all of which are still living. On Feb. 20, 1885, his wife, Katie, departed this life at St. Joe, Ind., leaving him and his five children to fight the battles of life without a helpmate which he did until March 21, 1890, he was married to Mrs. Viola Mason, to which union were born three children one boy and two girls. On May 7, 1899 he joined the Methodist Protestant church and remained a member until his death.

For 37 years he has engaged in the business of undertaking and dealer in furniture, which business he faithfully followed until Jan. 7, 1908, his spirit took its flight to the God who gave it, aged 60 years, 3 months and 3 days. He leaves a wife, 8 children, three sisters and many other relatives and friends who mourn their loss

CARD OF THANKS.

We wish to express our thanks to our friends and neighbors who so kindly assisted us during the sickness and death of our beloved husband and father.

Resolutions of Respect.

ST. JOE LODGE, NO 671, I. O. O. F. the following preamble and resolutions were adapted:

WHEREAS, In view of the loss we have sustained by the decease of our friend and brother, August Kinsey, and of the still heavier loss sustained by those nearest and dearest to him,

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED, That it is but a just tribute to the memory of the departed to say that in regretting his removal from our midst we mourn for one who was in every way worthy of our respect and regard.

RESOLVED, That we sincerely console with the family of the deceased on the dispensation with which it has pleased the Almighty God to afflict them and commend them for consolation to Him who orders all things for the best and whose chastisements are meant in mercy.

RESOLVED, That this heartfelt testimonial of our sympathy and sorrow be spread upon the minutes of this meeting and a copy be sent to the family and ST. JOE NEWS.

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

More Bodies in Darr Mine.

It is persistently declared by miners in Jacob's Creek, Pa., that there are 100 bodies yet in the Darr mine. One of the miners organizations, which it is claimed, has seventy members missing or unaccounted for, and it is the opinion of this organization's leaders that the bodies of the seventy will yet be brought from the ill-fated mine. This is one of the reasons assigned by Coroner Wynn for postponing the fixing of a date for an inquest on the bodies that have been recovered. He expects that additional bodies may be brought out. A total of 240 bodies have been recovered from the mine to date.

Vesuvius' Cone Drops.

Scientists from all over Europe are hurrying to Naples, Italy, to study the phenomenon of the collapse of Vesuvius' cone into the crater and the subsequent internal disturbances. The entire surrounding country is darkened by the pall of smoke from the crater and the terrifying detonations are beginning to shake the nerves of the residents near the mountain. Director Matteucci still insists, however, that there is no present danger of an eruption. Tourists also are pouring in and many have manifested such recklessness in approaching the crater that the authorities have been compelled to interfere.

Lake Shore Round House Burns.

Eighteen of the fifty stalls of the round house of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern railway, together with the machine shops and oil house at Elkhart, Ind., were destroyed by fire. The woodwork of eighteen engines was more or less burned. Wm. Shamburger, in charge of the tool room, was burned to death. The loss is $125,000 with no insurance. The fire was caused by the explosion of inflammable material in the oil room, when Shamburger entered with a light.

Terrible Powder Explosion.

A terrible explosion which rocked buildings in St. Louis, East St. Louis and Belleville occurred at Edgemont, Ill., nine miles south of East St. Louis, at the Phoenix Powder Company's mills. Despite the tremendous force which was evidenced by the breaking of plate glass windows in St. Louis, no one was killed or injured, according to telephonic reports.

Many Boats Lost.

The storm on the English Channel along the west coast of Europe and one on the north African coast is still raging, and many fishing boats already have been lost. A dispatch received from Tangier says that two native passenger boats foundered off El-Araish, Morrocco. Forty persons were drowned including some Europeans.

Too Much Family; Dies.

Despondent because he could not properly care for his family, Joseph H. Sheppard shot and killed himself at Millville, N. J. He often said he had more children than he could properly support and since early this week, when a seventh child was added to the family, he had been despondent.

Head Nearly Severed.

With the head nearly severed from the trunk by three slashes of a razor, the corpse of a well dressed Italian was found at 196th street and Bridges avenue, New York City. No clue to the murder or to the identity of the victim have been discovered.

California Court Frees Schmitz.

The Appellate Court of California has given a decision which released ex-Mayor Eugene E. Schmitz from custody and declares the indictment on the charge of extortion void. This decision probably also affects the case of Abe Ruef.

Aged Couple Die in Fire.

James Moulton and his wife, each aged more than 75 years, were burned to death in a fire that destroyed their home in Auburn, N. H.

WILLIAM J. BRYAN DEFINES THE ISSUES

STICKS TO 1896 PLATFORM.

Praises Roosevelt for Adhering to What He Calls Tenets of the Democratic Party.

William J. Bryan spoke at the Jackson day banquet in Chicago. The Nebraskan praised President Roosevelt for having encroached on the Democratic platform by indorsing many of the principles of the Bryan party, and political wise ones have since declared this looks as if the Democratic standard bearer were outlining his campaign with the idea that his opponent will be a candidate who will not reflect the Roosevelt policies.

Mr. Bryan reaffirmed allegiance to the platform of 1896, pointing out how Democracy had grown stronger in the advocacy of the principles enunciated then. He did not refer to 16 to 1, but declared that the Democrats at that time advocated "quantative currency," and then added: "The men who despised the '50-cent dollar' in 1896 are now hungering and thirsting for the dollar without any cents in it."

The Nebraskan at the outset of his remarks signified his willingness to lead the Democracy again when he said:

I shall ask no editor of a subsidized press whether I shall ever be a candidate or not. I shall ask no trust magnate whether he prefers some other candidate. There is only one body to which I shall submit the question, and that is that great body of voters in the Democratic party, and these voters know better than any self-styled or constituted leaders what they want done by the Democratic party.

Taking up the platform adopted at the Chicago convention in 1896, when he was first nominated for President, Mr. Bryan said:

Did we not denounce the trusts in '96 and is not our position stronger to-day than it was then? Did we not demand regulation of the railroads then and is not our position stronger to-day than it was eleven years ago? Did we not demand tariff reform then and has not the sentiment continued stronger now than then? Did we not demand arbitration between labor and capital? Who denies that our position on that subject is not stronger now than it was eleven years ago?

Did we not then denounce government by injunction as an attempt to destroy the laboring man's right to trial by jury? Who denies our position is stronger upon that subject to-day than it was then?

A Republican President has indorsed our platform on the railroad question. A Republican President has accepted our platform on the trust question. A Republican President has indorsed our contention on the subject of arbitration, and a Republican President has said in his last message that if things get much worse he will have to indorse our position on government by injunction.

Our position on imperialism is stronger now than it was seven years ago, when it was announced. I repeat that there is not one single Democratic doctrine that is not stronger now than it was then. I will go further than that. There is not one single Republican doctrine that is as strong now as it was then.

Are you surprised that I am happy? Who has more reason to rejoice than I have? Some Democrats have criticised me because I have praised the President where he has done things Democratic. What else could I do? It was only justice to praise him when he took his place upon a Democratic platform and to announce to him that he couldn't drive me off of the Democratic platform by getting on it.

Present Cost of Panama Canal.

According to the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, which brings the record up to July 1 last, there has been appropriated for canal construction the sum of $79,608,568 and expended $48,285,110. These figures, however, do not include the $40,000,000 paid to the French Canal Company in relinquishment of all its rights in the canal and the property there, and the $10,000,000 paid to Panama for the right of way. The expenditures to date include $30,452,499 for construction and engineering work, $2,318,277 on account of the expenses of the civil government, $5,550,208 on account of sanitation, and $935,126 for miscellaneous purposes. The balance available July 1 was $31,323,458.

During the fiscal year 1907 20,884 men were brought to the Isthmus of Panama in connection with canal construction work. They came from the United States, Europe and the West Indies. The skilled force at the end of the fiscal year 1906, approximately 2,500 men, had grown to 4,404 by the end of the following fiscal year. The total force of skilled and unskilled laborers of the Isthmian Canal Commission and the Panama railroad on June 30 last was 29,446.

POWERS JURY DISAGREES.

Famous Kentucky Political Prisoner to Have Fifth Trial.

The jury trying Caleb Powers at Georgetown, Ky., on the charge of complicity in the murder of Governor William Goebel, was dismissed by Judge Morris. The jury stood ten for acquittal and two for conviction. One of the jurors who held out for conviction was willing to come over to the acquittal side, but the remaining juror refused to change his decision.

The charge was complicity in the murder of Governor Goebel, 1899. Four trials have been held—1900, life imprisonment; 1902, life imprisonment; 1903, death penalty; 1908, no verdict.

CALEB POWERS.

Immediately following the discharge of the jury in the Powers case, after a disagreement had been reported, attorneys for the accused sent a telegram to Governor Wilson asking executive clemency. A petition was started in Georgetown asking the Governor to pardon Powers. Similar petitions will be circulated throughout the United States.

MARTIAL LAW AT MUNCIE.

Street Car Strike Necessitates Use of National Guard.

Because of the riots following the street car strike at Muncie, Ind., Governor Hanly issued a proclamation declaring that city to be under martial law. The proclamation says that Muncie and its immediate environs is in a state of riot and insurrection against the laws of the State, and suspends civil law. Quartermaster General Powell was sent to Muncie with troops, and carried the proclamation in person. With the proclamation was a letter to General McKee advising him of the step that had been taken and ordering him to take command of the city of Muncie and the surrounding district.

Soldiers were at once put on patrol duty, guarding the car lines. With their arrival the Union Traction Company announced it was ready to begin running all regular cars.

"Shoot to kill," was the order given to the troops when they were put on cars with strike-breakers.

In the troublous times since the strike started scores have been injured, some seriously, and considerable property damage has been done. Several cars were demolished and shot at by strike sympathizers. Governor Hanly has declared he will protect property and preserve peace, and also endeavor to get employes and company officials together in an effort to settle their differences, which arise over low wages and long hours.

Figures compiled by officials of the Southern Pacific show that in 1906 the Pacific lines of the system had 1,198 locomotives and 26,148 freight cars, an increase in motive power of 16 per cent and in freight cars of 20 per cent.

State Legislatures do not possess autocratic powers over the railroads within their borders, according to a decision of the Supreme Court of Arkansas, and though the constitutionality of their acts may not be directly challengeable, still they are subject to a review of the courts as to their reasonableness and justice.

That officials of railroads cannot be held responsible in any criminal sense for wrecks that may happen upon their lines, even though the cause may be traced indirectly to their failure to provide adequate safeguards, is the essence of the instructions given to the jury by Justice Kellogg at New York in ordering the acquittal of Vice President and General Manager Smith of the New York Central railroad. Mr. Smith had been on trial for manslaughter in connection with the wreck at Woodlawn on Feb. 16, in which twenty-three persons lost their lives. This case has attracted attention throughout the country as the first in which a serious attempt was made to hold a high official of a railroad responsible for the acts of subordinates.

PAY ARMY MORE, SAYS WAR SECRETARY TAFT

COAST DEFENSE A BIG ITEM.

Recommends Erection of Statue to Memory of Edwin M. Stanton in City of Washington.

Secretary Taft is a strong advocate of increased pay for the army, as his annual report, sent to Congress, shows. The report begins with a formidable presentment of figures showing the rapid decrease in the strength of the regular army in recent years (the loss last year being no fewer than 4,428 men) and the pressing need for officers to replace those now detailed on recruiting duty or as military instructors in educational institutions. The Secretary asserts that, while many reasons have been advanced to explain the difficulty, a sufficient one is to be found in the inadequacy of army pay.

"I think it quite probable," he says, "that an increase in the pay of the enlisted men, including considerable additional inducement for men to reenlist and such reasonable increase in the pay of non-commmissioned officers as would stimulate men to remain in the service and to qualify themselves for these higher positions, would have a markedly beneficial effect upon the recruitment of the army."

So the Secretary earnestly favors the adoption for the army of the naval system, under which the President is authorized to fix the rates of pay within defined limits. He also recommends the creation of a general-service corps to relieve the soldiers of the vast amount of unmilitary work they are now called on to perform.

The regular army last year lost 139 officers and 26,310 enlisted men, and, although it was a year of peace, fourteen of the officers and 358 of the men were killed in action or died of wounds and disease.

The Secretary has decided to create one of the new regimental posts at Baguio, in the Philippines, and asks for an appropriation for the purpose. He also urges an enlargement of Fort McKinley reservation, near Manila, by 6,000 acres, at a cost of $185,000, and the construction of an electric railroad from Camp Overton, on the north shore of Mindanao, to Camp Keithley, on Lake Lanao, in the center of the Moro country.

The Secretary urges the creation of a sufficiently large body of competent surgeons, with military knowledge and training, to care for the health and comfort of the volunteer forces in time of war.

Among the estimates submitted is an item of $6,488,000 for the construction of batteries at Manila and Subig bay. This estimate appears in connection with others for the insular possessions, and the only comment made upon it in the report is this:

"The places recommended for fortification have all been visited by one or more members of the national coast defense board and the suitability for fortification sites has been carefully studied by the board, and expenditures are being made accordingly."

Accompanying the report are the estimates for the support of the military establishment during the next fiscal year, which is $11,582,931 greater than last year's appropriations. By far the greater part of the increase (more than 90 per cent) is for coast defense works, of which about $21,700,000 is required for the United States and $14,800,000 for the insular possessions.

In concluding the report Secretary Taft recommends that Congress make adequate provisions for the erection of a statue to Secretary Edwin M. Stanton in Washington.

PETTIBONE NOT GUILTY.

Western Federation Mine Official Tried for Murder Is Acquitted.

George A. Pettibone, an official of the Western Federation of Miners, was acquitted at Boise, Idaho, of the murder of Governor Steunenberg.

Pettibone's acquittal follows that of Secretary Haywood, who was tried on the same charge. Pettibone, as Haywood, was tried on confessions of Harry Orchard and Steve Adams implicating them in numerous bloody plots in which scores of human beings were killed.

Members of the Western Federation all over the country have expressed themselves pleased at the verdict. John Mitchell, president of the United Mine Workers of America, stated that the verdict was highly satisfactory to him.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The holidays brought the usual easing off in business activity, but the new year opened up with the general indications more clearly defined and encouraging. Clearance sales in the leading retail lines reflect no special pressure in the offerings, particularly of heavyweight apparel, and the buying is satisfactory. Wholesale branches have hurried inventories and prepared for departure of road salesmen. Some manufacturers took more time for necessary repairs to machinery, and the number of hands made idle increased, but resumptions next week will bring relief to the temporary depression in iron and steel.

The annual stock taking thus far discloses snug conditions in both producing and distributive trades, there being fair profit results and no serious overaccumulation of products.

January disbursements in dividends and interest are exceptionally large, and there is more effort to obtain better circulation of currency and further loosening of the stringency. Mercantile collections in the West remain slow and assistance is not infrequently needed to tide over difficulties, yet the default record for this district exhibits no discouraging increase in numbers.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 28, against 22 last week and 29 a year ago. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number only 1, against 7 last week and 9 in 1907.—Dun's Review.

NEW YORK.

Rather more than usual post-holiday quiet is reported in general trade and industry, but the financial situation shows continued betterment. Reduction sales stimulate retail trade at some cities, but mild weather limits seasonable distribution at the Northwest, while holding of cotton affects retail trade and collections at the South. Money is more easily obtainable for business purposes at large centers.

Business in dry goods and clothing is light, as a whole, but the tone of that trade is more confident than a month ago. The leather trade is quiet, with sole leather stocks small, owing to curtailment of output, but stocks of hides are large. The wholesalers are not buying freely, but the 7 per cent reduction in 1907 shipments would indicate that stocks are not heavy.

Business failures for the week ending Jan. 2 number 345, against 248 last week, 185 in the like week of 1907, 220 in 1906, 278 in 1905 and 262 in 1904. In Canada failures for the week number 27, as against 50 last week and 16 in this week a year ago.—Bradstreet's Report.

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

A. CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER III.—(Continued.)

"You're raving, Baumser," said Major Clutterbuck, excitedly. "Why, man, their names are above suspicion. They are looked upon as the soundest concern in the city."

"Dat may be; dat may be," the German answered stolidly. "What I know, I know, and what I say I say."

"And how d'ye know it? D'ye tell me that you know more about it than the men on 'Change and the firms that do business with them?"

"I know what I know, and I say what I say," the other repeated.

"And you won't tell me where you heard this of the Girdlestones?"

"It would be no good to you. It is enough that what I say is certain. Let it suffice that they are people what are bound to tell other people all that they know about anything whatever."

"You don't make it very clear now," the old soldier grumbled. "You mean that these secret societies and socialists let each other know all that comes in their way, and have their own means of getting information."

"Dat may be, and dat may not be," the German answered in the same oracular voice. "I thought in any case, my good friend Clutterbuck, that I would give you what you call it in English the straight tap. It is always well to have the straight tap."

"Thank ye, me boy," the major said heartily. "If the firm's in a bad way either the youngster doesn't know of it, or else he's the most natural actor that ever lived. There's the tay-bell; let's get down before the bread and butther is all finished."

Mrs. Robins was in the habit of furnishing her lodgers with an evening meal at a small sum per head. There was only a certain amount of bread and butter supplied for this, however, and those who came late were likely to find an empty platter. The two Bohemians felt that the subject was too grave a one to trifle with, so they suspended their judgment upon the Girdlestones while they clattered down to the dining room.

CHAPTER IV.

Although not a whisper had been heard of it in ordinary commercial circles, there was some foundation for the forecast which Von Baumser had made as to the fate of the great house of Girdlestone. For some time back matters had been going badly with the African traders. If the shrewd eyes of Major Tobias Clutterbuck were unable to detect any indications of this state of affairs in the manner or conversation of the junior partner, the reason simply was that that gentleman was entirely ignorant of the imminent danger which hung over his head. As far as he knew, the concern was as prosperous and as flourishing as it had been at the time of the death of John Harston. The momentous secret was locked in the breast of his grim old father, who bore it about with him as the Spartan lad did the fox—without a quiver or groan to indicate the care which was gnawing at his heart. Placed face to face with ruin, Girdlestone fought against it desperately, and, witnal, coolly and warily, throwing away no chance and leaving no stone unturned. Above all, he exerted himself—and exerted himself successfully—to prevent any rumor of the critical position of the firm from leaking out in the city.

Many things had contributed towards this state of affairs. The firm had been involved in a succession of misfortunes, some known to the world and others known to no one save the elder Girdlestone. Lines of fine vessels from Liverpool and from Hamburg were running to the West coast of Africa, and competition had cut down freightage to the lowest possible point. Where the Girdlestones had once held almost a monopoly there were now many in the field. Again the negroes of the coast were becoming educated, and had a keen eye to business, so that the old profits were no longer obtainable. The days had gone by when flint-lock guns and Manchester prints could be weighed in the balance against ivory and gold dust.

While these general causes were at work a special misfortune had befallen the house of Girdlestone. Finding that their fleet of old sailing vessels were too slow and clumsy to compete with more modern ships, they had bought in two first-rate steamers. One was the Providence, a fine screw vessel of twelve hundred tons, and the other was the Evening Star, somewhat smaller in size, but both classed A 1 at Lloyd's. The former cost twenty-two thousand pounds, and the latter seventeen thousand. Now, Mr. Girdlestone had always had a weakness for petty savings, and in this instance he determined not to insure his new vessels. If the crazy old tubs, for which he had paid fancy premiums for so many years with an eye to an ultimate profit, met with no disaster, surely those new powerful clippers were safe. It chanced, however, by strange luck that as the Evening Star was steaming up Channel in a dense fog on her return from her second voyage, she ran right into the Providence, which had started that very morning from Liverpool upon her third outward trip. The Providence was almost cut in two, and sank within five minutes, taking down the captain and six of the crew, while the Evening Star was so much damaged about the bows that she put into Falmouth in a sinking condition. That day's work cost the African firm more than five-and-thirty thousand pounds.

Other mishaps had occurred to weaken the firm, apart from their trade with the coast. The senior partner had engaged in speculation without the knowledge of his son, and the result had been disastrous. One of the Cornish tin mines in which he had sunk a large amount of money, and which had hitherto yielded him a handsome return, became suddenly exhausted, and the shares went down to zero. No firm could stand against such a run of bad luck, and the African trading company reeled before it. John Girdlestone had not said a word yet of all this to his son. As claims arose he settled them in the best manner he could, and postponed the inevitable day when he should have to give a true account of their financial position. He hoped against hope that the chapter of accidents or the arrival of some brilliant cargoes from the coast might set the concern on its legs again.

From day to day he had been expecting news of one of his vessels. At last one morning he found a telegram awaiting him at the office. He tore it eagerly open for it bore the Madeira mark. It was from his agent, Jose Alverciras, and announced that the voyage from which he had hoped so much had been a total failure. The cargo was hardly sufficient to defray the working expenses. As the merchant read it, his head drooped over the table and he groaned aloud. Another of the props which upheld him from ruin had snapped beneath him.

There were three letters lying beside the telegram. He glanced through them, but there was no consolation in any of them. One was from a bank manager informing him that his account was somewhat overdrawn. Another from Lloyd's Insurance Agency, pointing out that the policies on two of his vessels would lapse unless paid within a certain date. The clouds were gathering very darkly over the African firm, yet the old man bore up against misfortune with dauntless courage. He sat alone in his little room, with his head sunk upon his breast, and his thatched eyebrows drawn down over his keen grey eyes. It was clear to him that the time had come when he must enlighten his son as to the true state of their affairs. With his co-operation he might carry out a plan which had been maturing for some months in his brain.

A moment or two later the green baize door flew open, and the young man came in, throwing his hat and coat down on one of the chairs. It was evident that something had ruffled his temper.

"Good morning," he said brusquely, nodding his head to his father.

"What's the matter with you? You don't look yourself, and haven't for some time back."

"Business worries, my boy, business worries," John Girdlestone answered wearily. "I have not got a good balance at the banker's."

"Pretty fair, pretty fair," his son said, knowingly, picking up the long thin volume in which the finance of the firm was recorded, and tapping it against the table.

"But the figures there are not correct, Ezra," his father said, still more huskily. "We have not got nearly so much as that."

"What!" roared the junior partner.

"Hush! Don't let the clerks hear you. We have very little. In fact, Ezra, we have next to nothing in the bank. It is all gone."

For a moment the young man stood motionless, glaring at his father. The expression of incredulity which had appeared on his features faded away before the earnestness of the other, and was replaced by a look of such malignant passion that it contorted his whole face. "You fool!" he shrieked, springing forward with the book upraised as though he would have struck the old merchant. "I see it now. You have been speculating on your own hook! What have you done with it?" He seized his father by the collar and shook him furiously in his wrath.

"Keep your hands off me!" the senior partner cried, wrenching himself free from his son's grasp. "I did my best with the money. How dare you address me so?"

"Did your best!" hissed Ezra, hurling the ledger down on the table with a crash. "What did you mean by speculating without my knowledge, and telling me at the same time that I knew all that was done? Hadn't I warned you a thousand times of the danger of it? You are not to be trusted with money."

"Remember, Ezra," his father said with dignity, reseating himself in the chair from which he had risen, in order to free himself from his son's clutches, "if I lost the money, I also made it. This was a flourishing concern before you were born. If the worst comes to the worst you are only where I started. But we are far from being absolutely ruined as yet."

"To think of it!" Ezra cried, flinging himself upon the office sofa and burying his face in his hands. "To think of all I have said of our money and our resources! What will Clutterbuck and the fellows at the club say? How can I alter the ways of life that I have learned?" Then suddenly clenching his hands, and turning upon his father, he broke out, "We must have it back, father; we must, by fair means or foul. You must do it, for it was you who lost it. What can we do? How long have we to do it in? Is this known in the city? Oh, I shall be ashamed to show my face on 'Change." So he rambled on half-maddened by the pictures of the future which rose up in his mind.

"Be calm, Ezra, be calm!" his father said imploringly. "We have many chances yet if we only make the best of them. There is no use lamenting the past. I freely confess that I was wrong in using this money without your knowledge, but I did it from the best of motives. We must put our heads together now to retrieve our losses, and there are many ways in which that may be done. I want your clear common sense to help me in the matter."

"Pity you didn't apply to that before," Ezra said sulkily.

"I have suffered for not doing so," the old man answered meekly. "In considering how to rally under this grievous affliction which has come upon us, we must remember that our credit is a great resource, and one on which we have never drawn. That gives us a broad margin to help us while we are carrying out our plans for the future."

"What will our credit be worth when this matter leaks out?"

"But it can't leak out. No one suspects it for a moment. They might imagine that we are suffering from some temporary depression of trade, but no one could possibly know the sad truth. I have more than one plan in my head by which our affairs may be re-established on their old footing. If we can once get sufficient money to satisfy our present creditors, and so tide over this run of bad luck, the current will set in the other way, and all will go well. And first of all, there is one question, my boy, which I should like to ask you. What do you think of John Harston's daughter?"

"She's right enough," the young man answered brusquely.

"She's a good girl, Ezra—a thorough good girl, and a rich girl, too, though her money is a small thing in my eyes compared to her virtue."

Young Girdlestone sneered. "Of course," he said, impatiently. "Well, go on—what about her?"

"Just this, Ezra, that there is no girl in the world whom I should like better to receive as my daughter-in-law. Ah! you rogue, you could come round her; you know you could." The old man poked his long bony finger in the direction of his son's ribs with grim playfulness.

"Oh, that's the idea, is it?" remarked the junior partner, with a very unpleasant smile.

"Yes, that is one way out of our difficulties. She has forty thousand pounds, which would be more than enough to save the firm. At the same time you would gain a charming wife."

"If we are reduced to such an expedient I think I can answer for the result. The girl's not a bad looking one. But you said you had several plans. Let us hear some of the other ones. If the worst comes to the wirst I might consent to that—on condition, of course, that I should have the whole management of the money."

"Quite so—quite so," his father said hurriedly. "That's a dear, good lad. As you say, when all other things fail we can always fall back upon that. At present I intend to raise as much money as I can upon our credit, and invest it in such a manner as to bring in a large and immediate profit."

"And how do you intend to do this?" his son asked doubtfully.

"I intend," said John Girdlestone, solemly rising up and leaning his elbow against the mantelpiece, "I intend to make a corner in diamonds."

CHAPTER V.

John Girdlestone propounded his intention with such dignity and emphasis that he evidently expected the announcement to come as a surprise upon his son. If so, he was not disappointed, for the young man stared open-eyed.

"A corner in diamonds!" he repeated. "How will you do that?"

"You know what a corner is," has father explained. "If you buy up all the cotton, say, or sugar in the market, so as to have the whole of it in your own hands, and to be able to put your own price on it in selling it again—that is called making a corner in wheat or cotton. I intend to make a corner in diamonds."

"Of course, I know what a corner is," Ezra said impatiently. "But how on earth are you going to buy all the diamonds in? You would want the capital of a Rothschild."

"Not so much as you think, my boy, for there are not any great amount of diamonds in the market at any one time. The yield of the South African fields regulates the price. I have had this idea in my head for some time, and have studied the details. Of course, I should not attempt to buy in all the diamonds that are in the market. A small portion of them would yield profit enough to float the firm off again."

"But if you have only a part of the supply in your hands, how are you to regulate the market value? You must come down to the prices at which other holders are selling."

"Ha! ha! Very good! very good!" the old merchant said, shaking his head good-humoredly. "But you don't quite see my plan yet. You have not altogether grasped it. Allow me to explain to you. I did some business in diamonds myself when I was a younger man, and so I had an opportunity of observing their fluctuations in the market. Now, there is one thing which invariably depreciates the price of diamonds. That is the rumor of fresh discoveries of mines in other parts of the world. The instant such a thing gets wind the value of the stones goes down wonderfully. The discovery of diamonds in Central India not long ago had that effect very markedly, and they have never recovered their value since. Do you follow me?"

An expression of interest had come over Ezra's face, and he nodded to show that he was listening.

The claim is made that the railroad station at Juvisy, on the outskirts of France, will soon be the largest in the world.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Masons at Laporte will erect a $60,000 temple.

Thomas McKinstry, former sheriff of Miami County, is dead at Peru.

Dan L. Speicher has purchased the Harter Opera House block at Wabash and another building east of it for $28,000.

Rev. E. E. Neal, a Methodist clergyman, has been appointed a member of the metropolitan police board at Elwood.

While playing with fire, the 2-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Woods, southwest of Elkhart, received burns that it is feared will prove fatal.

William Ralston, a brakeman on the Big Four, was shot and killed at a gravel pit near Terre Haute as he was boarding the caboose of his train.

The dead body of Crate Pavey, an aged attorney, was found in his home in Indianapolis. He had killed himself in the night by turning on the gas.

The 1907 fire loss in Terre Haute will not exceed $100,000. The heaviest single loss was $48,500, on the mill owned by the American Hominy Company. During December only once did the department use hose, being able to extinguish all fires with a chemical engine.

Fire started from an overheated stove and completely destroyed the plant of the Sweeping Compound Company of South Bend, a new corporation making sweping compound out of an inflammable substance. There was no insurance on the building. The loss is $10,000.

Elisha Clark, who is living with his daughter, Mrs. Alphonse Carter, near the Clay County line, is now 100 years old. At times he is able to read, and although feeble can walk about the house with the aid of a cane. He was born in Marion County, Ky., and came to Indiana in 1870.

During a windstorm of several hours' duration, near Waldron, T. H. Hubbard, an employe of the I. & C. Traction Company, working as a lineman, while on top of one of the derrick cars, fixing the trolley wire, fell with the derrick, which was blown over. His right ankle was broken.

Mrs. Margaret Lewis, of Greenfield, was seriously burned and narrowly escaped death from her skirts catching fire from a blazing piece of paper. Mrs. Lewis used the paper to light a lamp, and threw it on the floor, stamping with her foot to put out the blaze, which, in this way, was communicated to her dress.

While John Tinsley was eating his supper at his boarding house at Jasonville, and was masticating bread, his teeth closed on a hard substance, which broke one of them off. Examination disclosed a small diamond ring, worth $50. How it came into the bread is unknown. The loaf was a Terre Haute product.

The little town of Claypool, Kosciusko County, with a population of only 400, claims the distinction of having a larger kindergarten department in the public school than can be found in any other town or city with a population of twenty times the size of Claypool. There are fifty-four youngsters enrolled in this department.

J. S. Simison, of Romney, on behalf of his mother, Mrs. Harriet Simison, has forwarded $1,000, to be added to the endowment of the Simison Latin Library. The late Dr. John Simison, of Romney, joined with his wife in contributing $200 for the endowment of the library, which has since borne the name of the Simison Latin Library of DePauw University. Altogether the Simison family has set aside and given $7,500 to the Latin department of the university.

General Manager Emmons, Auditor Vordermark and Superintendent Gunn, of the Fort Wayne & Wabash Valley road, have announced the winners of the prizes for the best photographs of scenes along the route of the company's lines. The following were winners: First prize, $50, O. L. Harrington, of Logansport; second, $30, J. A. Edelman, of Fort Wayne; third prize, $20, Frederick Felts, of Peru. The first prize view was of Baker's curve, the second a view in Robison Park and the third a view in Boyd Park.

Mr. and Mrs. Noel Barnhart and their son, William, of Peru, have just returned from a novel trip. Mr. Barnhart is a wealthy merchant. During the War of the Rebellion he served in the Ninety-ninth Indiana Infantry, which marched with Sherman to the sea. Mr. Barnhart concluded to visit the old battlegrounds, and he constructed a comfortable car on wheels, provided with household and camping effects. This car, with a strong team of horses as motive power, traveled over 700 miles, the family having a delightful trip. When through with sightseeing, the car and horses were shipped back by freight.

Miss Hattie Izor, of Milton, plucked a bunch of beautiful pansies in full bloom from her dooryard, New Year's day.

W. H. Hildebrand's blacksmith shop at Columbia City, was damaged by fire a few days ago, with a loss of about $200.

C. E. VinZant, superintendent of the Dunkirk schools for the last four years, has resigned to enter the State University.

Editor Virgil A. Geiger, of the Churubusco Truth, has purchased a half interest in a moving picture show in his strenuous effort to keep busy in a business way.

Otley Lynn, an employe of the L. & N., at Howell, filled a car axle with powder and touched it off. The explosion burned his face so that he will lose the sight of both eyes.

Capt. Evan Sharp is dead at Kokomo, aged 70 years. He was one of the men who dug his way out of Libby prison in the famous escape from that bastile during the Civil War.

Wagner & Lewis, clothiers at Wabash, who have been in financial embarrassment, have reached an agreement with creditors whereby they will be enabled to resume business.

Blood poisoning caused by the bursting of a boil in his ear resulted in the death of Earl Rinearson, aged 19 years, at his father's home in Mentone. The swelling gave the young man considerable trouble and he placed the end of one of his fingers into his ear, with the result that the nail caused the boil to break. His death followed.

Orval, the 10-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Pearcy, east of Martinsville, was accidentally shot in the left side, just under the heart, but he is likely to recover. The boy and his companions were loading a 22-caliber rifle preparatory to hunting, and the weapon was accidentally discharged. The bullet has not been removed. It passed within an inch of the heart.

When Dr. Richard M. Howe, of Terre Haute, was stricken with blood poisoning, contracted in a surgical operation at St. Anthony's Hospital, he bid farewell to friends, but there is a chance for his recovery, although he may lose a hand or an arm by amputation. A few weeks ago he volunteered to perform an operation on a charity patient in the hospital, and while doing so injured his hand.

Andrew A. Copeland, 54 years old, was found unconscious in his bed with his throat horribly slashed, at his home in Indianapolis. The man had attempted to kill himself with a razor and when he drew the keen edge over his throat the flesh was ripped from ear to ear. However, the razor did not touch the wind pipe or jugular vein, and it is probable that the man is not fatally hurt.

After spreading covers for the Christmas dinner she had prepared at the home where she was employed as housekeeper in South Bend, Mrs. Phoebe Clinger drank the contents of a bottle of carbolic acid, and fell dead on the floor after calling the members of the family to dinner. She had been divorced three times, and a few moments before committing suicide she quarreled with her employer. She was the daughter of John W. Ross, of Warsaw, and soon after her death word was received from Warsaw that her sister has died in that city.

Judge John M. Van Fleet, a prominent Indiana jurist, author of Van Fleet's "Collateral Attack," and other well known works on jurisprudence and practice, died at his home at Elkhart, after a brief illness with toxemia, aged 66 years. The deceased was formerly president and a member of the Elkhart County bar for over forty years. He was author of the St. Joseph Superior Court bill, passed by the last Legislature. He was father of Judge Vernon W. Van Fleet, who was appointed by Governor Hanly as the first judge of the Elkhart-St. Joseph Superior Court.

Noah Bower, the South Whitley timberman, reports a most remarkable tree which he recently cut on the farm of Harry Fosler, north of South Whitley. The tree was a cottonwood. Just forty years ago Samuel Fosler, now deceased, then owner of the farm, standing on the ground cut the top out of the tree with his pocket knife. The tree was then only three inches in diameter at the ground. When the tree was cut this week it measured four feet across the stump. The logs from the tree were as follows: Six logs twelve feet long; one fourteen feet long; three logs ten feet long; one log nine feet long; five logs eight feet long, total sixteen logs and total length, 165 feet. The total number of feet the logs scaled was 3,087.

Whiskey Rebellion.

There is going on at this moment in the city of Chicago a legal conflict that merits the attention of the whole nation.

In its history and its course of present events it illustrates and emphasizes the liquor traffic's constant and invariable character as a law breaker, the spirit of rebellion, as real as, and more dangerous than, that which fired the fatal shot in Charleston Harbor in 1861, which is entertained by the whole liquor power; the menace to our institutions and to our national future in the power of our great cities controlled and manipulated by the greed and unscrupulousness of the drink rebels.

Chicago's Sunday closing fight is not a temperance question of law enforcement. The issue is, Shall the lawful will of the people or the greed of the drink capitalists rule this country?

Courts martial for drunkenness in the army have steadily decreased year after year since the abolition of the beer canteen at army posts. The last year of the canteen regime brought 1,645 cases before military courts on this charge; the year 1906 had but 504 such cases. If the prohibition of the canteen has so monstrously increased drinking as various high officers allege, they must not have been attending very well to the discipline of the drinkers.—The Interior.

The hackneyed bluffs of the liquor champion that "Prohibition will kill a town,"—that "Business requires the saloon as a commercial bait," that "No-license means 'grass in the street,'" "empty stores," and "shrinkage in real estate values," etc., etc., are being daily pulverized and exploded one by one, not merely by prohibitionists, but by the accumulating testimony of impartial business men whose prejudices and adverse opinions are alike being shattered by the facts of actual prohibition results.

They say saloons help a town. Did you ever see a real estate man put in his circular something like this: 'THIS TOWN HAS TWO SMELTERS, TWO BRICK FACTORIES, GAS AND ELECTRIC PLANTS, A CARNEGIE LIBRARY, Y. M. C. A., FOURTEEN CHURCHES AND TEN SALOONS?" If saloons help draw to a town, why do not towns advertise the saloons more?"—Canon City Record.

Twenty years ago in San Francisco they had 200 flourishing churches which were well attended. At the time of the earthquake, notwithstanding the increase in population by the thousands during the twenty years, they had 160 churches and 3,400 saloons licensed by the people. The saloons caused forty churches to die and to go out of existence. And one of the largest remaining churches has lost 50 per cent in membership and spiritual power. In Northern California there is a town with 150 legalized saloons and twelve churches.

A visit to the liquor cafes in Los Angeles one night found 350 girls and 600 boys drinking liquors in three places: only three. On another night [Sunday] four places were visited, and found 391 girls, some from the best families, drinking liquor. One was the daughter of the pastors of the city, who was preaching that night in his pulpit. The girl could not have been remonstrated with for she was patronizing one of the places her father had voted to permit to do business. Every man who votes for the nominee of any party that licenses the liquor traffic, becomes, himself, by his vote, a party to the liquor business and the results which it brings.

If is generally admitted by sociologists that while advancing civilization enlarges the sphere of individual life and liberty, society must also defend itself by an increased number and a strict enforcement of prohibitory statutes.—Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens.

Many people have thought that the $1000 license fee in Chicago would put the saloons out of business. The Chicago Tribune in a leading editorial (Nov. 8, 1906,) declared:

"Out of the total of 7,350 saloons in Chicago only 132 have failed to secure a new permit at the higher figure. Neither the increase in the license fees nor the new law relating to the proportion of saloons to the population has accomplished that weeding out of conditions which many of the friends of restriction have looked for. It is sufficient comment to know that the increased revenues are to be used largely for the support of the 1,100 new policemen required for the better protection of person and property, the dangers to which are in a great degree due to the influences which radiate from the saloon as a center."

Rank Foolishness.

"When attacked by a cough or cold, or when your throat is sore, it is rank foolishness to take any other medicine than Dr. King's New Discovery," says C. O. Eldridge of Empire, Ga. "I have used New Discovery seven years and I know it is the best remedy on earth for coughs and colds, croup, and all throat and lung troubles. My children are subject to croup, but New Discovery quickly cures every attack." Known the world over as King of throat and lung remedies. Sold under guarantee at H. Heart Strength

Heart Strength, or Heart Weakness, means Nerve Strength, or Nerve Weakness—nothing more. Positively, not one weak heart in a hundred is, in itself, actually diseased. It is almost always a hidden tiny little nerve that really is all at fault. This obscure nerve—the Cardiac, or Heart Nerve—simply needs, and must have, more power, more stability, more controlling, more governing strength. Without that the Heart must continue to fail, and the stomach and kidneys also have these same controlling nerves.

This clearly explains why, as a medicine, Dr. Shoop's Restorative has in the past done so much for weak and ailing Hearts. Dr. Shoop first sought the cause of all this painful, palpitating, suffocating heart distress. Dr. Shoop's Restorative—this popular prescription—is alone directed to these weak and wasting nerve centers. It builds, it strengthens; it offers real, genuine heart help.

If you would have strong Hearth, strong digestion, strengthen these nerves—re-establish them as needed, with Born to John Masters and wife, Sunday, a girl baby.

Protracted meetings have begun at the M. P. church.

Do you owe the printer? If so, come in and settle up.

Of every million people 800 are blind—and the other 999,200 can't see their own faults.

Miss Gladys Morris of Fort Wayne, visited over Sunday with her sister, Mrs. Bert Woodcox.

Mrs. G. M. Barney and daughter Pauline spent Saturday and Sunday with her mother at Hicksville.

Mrs. John Koch has been quite sick with la grippe the past couple weeks but is now improving slowly.

John George moved his goods Monday from his father's home. He moved on the Lewis Howey farm west of Concord.

Mr. W. W. Newcomer of the Lima School of Oratory, said, "I frequently hear of the Day Co. in the course of my entertainment tours. They are always spoken of in the highest praise They please wherever they go.

Myron Abel, who lives one half-mile south Jackson center, sold his 56 acre farm for $3,100 one day last week. A man from Ft. Wayne being the purchaser. Myron has a farm in Michigan and will move on same in a short time.

G. W. Bowen was accidentally struck on the mouth by a sledge which a fellow shopman was swinging and several teeth were loosened and the lower lip split. He is an apprentice at the Pennsylvania erecting shops.—Journal-Gazette.

Articles were signed Tuesday, whereby J. D. Campbell of Waterloo will in the near future establish a general drug and wall paper business in in this town. Mr. Campbell has been in the drug business at his home town for the past 24 years, until the last four years and owing to his health he was compelled to retire in order to recuperate, and is now enjoying the best of health and has a desire for his former occupation, and has the property rented and will soon commence business. This has been our long felt need, at last it has come and now, Grabill is ready to attend to all the wants of a trader. Mr. Campbell comes very highly recommended and it is our opinion that he will do a very good business.—Grabill Review.

A tickling cough, from any cause, is quickly stopped by Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. And it is so thoroughly harmless and safe that Dr. Shoop tells mothers everywhere to give it without hesitation even to very young babes. The wholesome green leaves and tender stems of a lung-healing mountainous shrub, furnishes the curative properties to Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. It calms the cough and heals the sore throat and sensitive bronchial membranes. No opium, no chloroform, nothing harsh used to injure or suppress. Simply a resinous plant extract that helps to heal aching lungs. The Spaniards call this shrub which the Doctor uses, "The Sacred Herb." Always demand Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. All dealers.

"If there is one time more than another," says an experienced married man, "when a woman should be left alone, it is when a line of clothes comes down in the mud.

When the people can be made to understand that it actually costs more in time and money to travel over a poor road than it does to travel over a good one, they will be less inclined to begrudge the expense of good roads, and what is more important still, will be willing and anxious to put the business of road making into the hands of intelligent men who understand the business. Poor roads are the expensive things that curse any district.

One of the most thoroughly delightful entertainments ever presented in the Coldren was that given by Mr. Elias Day and Mrs. Oranne Truitt-Day. Without costumes, Mr. Day depends upon facial make-up and expression and achieves his ends superbly. Whether he impersonates the Cockney bailiff, the Kentucky Colonel, the ardent lover, the loquacious Hoosier store lounger, or any other one of the dozen characters, he is as near perfection as possible. He plays upon the heart strings, and the most tender impulses of humanity are awakened by his emotional acting—for his readings in the field of sentiment are truly worty of the stronger word. To the Bureau our thanks are due for a program so unusually excellent.—Iowa City Press. At the Widney Opera House, Thursday night, Jan. 16.

Shipped Piano to Daughter as Present

Mrs. J. L. Draggoo of Beulah, Mich., will be surprised beyond expression when a city drayman backs up to her door and unloads a piano without her knowing why or anything about it. Her mother, Mrs. H. Baker, of Concord, purchased one of E. C. Sheets of this city and ordered it shipped to Mrs. Draggoo. This is a valuable present. Mrs. Baker bought a crown piano of Mr. Sheets several months ago and bought the second for her daughter, Tuesday.—Dispatch.

A Cure for Misery.

"I have found a cure for the misery malaria poison produces," says R. M. James, of Louellen, S. C. "It's called Electric Bitters, and comes in 50 cent bottles. It breaks up a case of chills or a bilious attack in almost no time; and it puts yellow jaundice clean out of commission." This great tonic medicine and blood purifier gives quick relief in all stomach, liver and kidney complaints and the misery of lame back. Sold under guarantee at H. Milliman's drug store.

Lucas-Miller.

At the Lutheran parsonage at Auburn, last Wednesday forenoon at 11 o'clock, George C. Lucas of West Virginia, and Dora Miller of DeKalb county, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony by Rev. S. E. Slater. The bride is a daughter of David Miller, near St. Joe. An infare dinner was given at the home of Wm. Lucas, a brother of the groom, Sunday. They will reside near St. Joe on a farm and no doubt a rich measure of success lies in store for this worthy young couple. We extend congratulations.

Mrs. McCain received word from her former home in Shelbyville, Ind., that her mother, Mrs. Davidson, was quite ill. Mrs. Davidson is 60 years of age and has symptoms of paralysis. Mrs. McCain will leave for Shelbyville soon if no word of improvement comes from the sick room.—Allen County Herald.

Many people are embarassed by unconstrainable fits of sneezing in public places, which make them very conspicuous. It can easily be stopped. Just press firmly upon the middle of the upper lip with the finger, and the tickling sensation in the nose will dissappear. It rarely fails. The theory is that a nerve, which plays an important part in the sneezing, lays under the lip, and is paralyzed by the pressure on the lip.

Tickets for entertainment Thursday night, at Milliman's.

Samuel Lawhead of Corunna, visited relatives at this place, a few days last week.

Mr. Weeks, the first entertainer on our lecture course, said, "There is no question about the ability of the Day Co. to please. They give first class satisfaction wherever they go, and are usually wanted for a return date." Come and hear them next Thursday night. Admission 35 cents. Tickets at Milliman's.

An Unpleasant Office.

The task assigned to the bell boy at a small New England hotel was no sinecure, and he realized it, for the old gentleman who had requested that he be awakened for an early breakfast was extremely deaf.

"I don't know what I'll do about the man in No. 41, that wanted to go off on the 7 o'clock train," the bell boy announced breathlessly to the proprietress.

"Haven't you waked him up yet?" demanded that brisk person.

"I've waked him three times," said the boy, sulkily, "but he hasn't heard me yet. Everybody else has, though, on that floor. I know, because they've all hollered to me to stop battering on their doors."

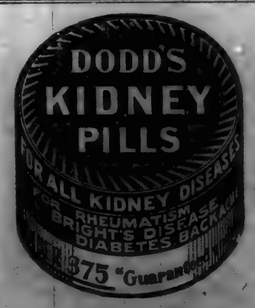
The Overruling of a Judge.

A judge once awoke in the night to find his room in the possession of two armed burglars. Covered by the pistol of one of the marauders, the judge watched the proceedings with his usual judicial calm. One of the depredators found a watch. "Don't take that," the judge said; "it has little value and is a keepsake." "The motion is overruled," replied the burglar. "I appeal," rejoined the judge. The two burglars consulted, and the spokesman then replied: "The appeal is allowed. The case coming on before a full tribunal of the supreme court, that body is of the unanimous opinion that the decree of the lower court should be sustained, and is accordingly so ordered." Pocketing the watch, court adjourned.



The Popular Pulpit

SYMBOL FOR OUR ADVANCE.

By Rev. Geo. D. Sparks.

Take up the ark of the covenant and pass over.—Joshua 3:6.

The long journey in the wilderness is over; the endless stretches of sand will haunt the tired eyes of the pilgrims no longer. Beyond the swiftly-gliding river lies Canaan—the Land of Promise.

Joshua is a born leader of men, and as such knows what they will do if appealed to in the right way. The River Jordan flows between the Promised Land and his followers. It must be crossed. With the same feeling that afterward animated Douglas to take from his breast the jeweled heart of the dead Bruce and fling it over the heads of the advancing foe, shouting: "Fight, my men, for the heart of Bruce!" So Joshua, with the deep religious consciousness of a Jew, gives the order to carry forward the ark of the covenant. No one of his followers will dream of lagging behind when he sees that sacred symbol in front. And so, following in the footsteps of the priests, the people, old and young, cross the Jordan and enter upon a new phase of their national life.

The parallel between our case, as we stand on the threshold of a new year, and the Jews on the eve of their entering Canaan, is so apparent that it can be seen at once. As the tired wanderers from Egypt stood facing the Promised Land, so do you and I stand facing 1908.

How are we going to commence our journey into the new year? Joshua, though he lived long, long ago, and though he was but a leader of a mob of liberated slaves, can show us the way. The captain of the Jewish host sent forward the ark of the covenant. We who are children of the larger hope can do nothing better than to send forward into the new year the cross of Christ. Why? Because only by the power of the cross can we hope to pass successfully through the trials and temptations and to overcome the kings of passion and selfishness which so surely lie waiting for us in the next twelve months.

It must appeal to nearly everyone, this ending of an old year and the beginning of a new one. A man must be dull indeed if it awakens no thoughts of a larger life, a more consecrated manhood, a more devoted discipleship. The past, let us remember, is dead: the future is always alive. It holds aloft in its strong right hand the morning star of hope and whispers to each child of man: "It is never too late to mend."

Let us face the new year with brave hearts and better determinations, placing before us as we advance the cross of Christ, believing that in proportion as we are loyal to this symbol shall we have strength given us to endure hardness as good soldiers of the Master, patience to suffer without giving way to despair, sorrow and misfortune, and spiritual courage so that we can come through every temptation triumphant and unafraid.

FAITH FOR THE FUTURE.

By Henry F. Cope.

By faith Abraham when he was called to go out * * * went out not knowing whither he went.—Hebrews 11:8.

You cannot tell much about a man's faith by his willingness to deal in futures without any foundation in fact. And yet no man is ready to face the future unless his heart is nerved by a high and worthy faith. This alone can give strength to look down the coming days and to take up their tasks.

None of us can know what these new days hold for us; fear readily conjures up pictures of disaster. But because of certain sublime confidences we hold we banish our fears, shake off our sloth and gladly step out into the unknown and untrodden country of tomorrow.

Faith is the force of all the ages. It accounts for the past; it enters and determines the future. Because certain men in days gone by believed certain things intensely; because they were thrilled by great visions, by glorious ideals, history was wrought out in the forge of their convictions, under the hammer of their wills.

No great things are done except by the power of faith, under glowing hopes and compelling convictions. It is her faith in her boy's future that makes the mother willing to suffer, keeps her patient, that buoys up the father in the strife and weariness of life. No man or woman is doing anything that makes the world richer for mere bread and butter; some purpose and vision is behind the worthy work.

It is because somehow we believe, no matter how we may phrase the belief, that destiny is behind this strange weaving we call life that we are content to seem to be the shuttles jerked hither and thither. We bear the ills of to-day because we dimly see the glorious goal of the good of all. We do a full day's work only as we see somehow an eternal wage.

It may belong to few of us to be heralded as heroes, and the judgment of history may confer on none the martyr's crown, but the hero's joy and the martyr's glory are in the heart of everyone who boldly reaches up to and lives out the highest he conceives, for he will not do that without sacrifice and pain on his side nor without enriching mankind on the other.

The largest faith may be manifest in the lowliest places. When all the work of the ages appears, when the weaving of the centuries is turned with its finished side towards us, we may see that the man who has laid the brick or fed the furnace or the woman who has washed and cooked and tended the little ones, doing these things for love, has shot the most glowing colors into the great fabric.

It is not the thing you do so much as the spirit in which you do it that makes it great or small. Faith determines this spirit, for faith is that which fashions the ideal of the one we love, the ideal we serve and for which we joyfully suffer. The prophet whose burning words we cannot forget lives by the faith in a vision broad and sweeping; but not less is the faith of the humble toiler who lives each day by the vision of his home and fireside.

Nor is this all. It is faith that draws on life's invisible sources of power and refreshing; it is faith that finds inner contact with the invisible. How empty is life if it hold nothing but things; how hungry grows the heart fed only on cold facts. For each day as it comes we need to be able to draw on the deep springs of the water of life, the springs from which our fathers drank and found strength to lay the foundations of our day.

Faith is not the blind confidence that, somehow, Providence will send us daily bread. It is the faculty by which the heart eats of the bread of heaven, by which it comes into fellowship with the great and immortal of all ages, by which it walks with Jesus of Nazareth and every spirit like His and learns to read life as love and law and see it as leading to eternal good.

DONT'S FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't complain of your church duties. Where love is one forgets labor.

Don't claim that you are already saved. Character begins in the cradle and ends in the grave.

Don't try to hug to yourself the blessings you receive. You cannot keep the joy you will not share.

Don't profess what you do not feel. Your sympathies express more than your words, and determine the breadth of your life.

Don't pray God to shower blessings upon you when they are already falling, and are yours if you are in condition to receive them.

Don't try to meet God in your church only. If you cannot find Him everywhere, you will find him nowhere. The success of your search depends on the way you search.

Don't shed tears when your attention is called to suffering. The tear of pity is a good thing only when it is accompanied by effort to relieve suffering.

Don't expect heavenly music in every temple. The angel's song can best be heard where hearts are attuned to genuine praise. The angels never sang in costly churches.

SHORT METER SERMONS.

Our lives are the lips of the Most High.

Only a coward will hide behind his conscience.

Your superiority does not depend on your pedestal.

HYMNS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

Consolation.

Come, ye disconsolate, where'er ye languish;
Come to the mercy seat, fervently kneel;
Here bring your wounded hearts, here tell your anguish,
Earth has no sorrow that heaven cannot heal.

Joy of the desolate, light of the straying,
Hope of the penitent, fadeless and pure;
Here speaks the Comforter, tenderly saying
Earth has no sorrow that heaven cannot cure.

Here see the Bread of Life; see waters flowing
Forth from the throne of God, pure from above;
Come to the feast of love; come, ever knowing
Earth has no sorrow but heaven can remove.

JOLLY JOKER

Wife—Must you go to the club tonight, dear? Husband—It isn't absolutely necessary, but I need the rest.—Life.

"If there was more kissing done at home and less at the depot, life in the married state would have more halos.—Palmyra Items.

"Do you approve of working Sunday?" "Certainly not," replied the man addressed. "Why make an exception of Sunday?"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Knicker—Retrenchment is hard on the poor. Bocker—Yes; when you have to give up your auto the ones who suffer are the chauffeur's friends.—New York Sun.

Mr. Goodlie—My boy, you'd never hear me use language like that! The Kid—I bet you don't! Why, it took me five years to learn all dem words.—The Sketch.

Neighbor—If your statement is true your clothesline was robbed by tramps. Judson—How do you make that out? Neighbor—Didn't you say they took everything but the towels?—Illustrated Bits.

Rich Uncle John—Ah, is this one of your children? Agitated Mother—Yes, Uncle John, that's our little Johnnie. Kiss your uncle, dear, and then go and wash your face.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Well, well! I'm surprised to hear of Miss Passay being engaged to Mr. Gayman. He's so awfully fast, you know." "O, I don't know; apparently he wasn't fast enough to get away from her."—Stray Stories.

Farmer Jones (to amateur hunter)—There wasn't a better water dawg livin' until you shootin' gents took to borrowing 'im. Now 'is ide's that full of shots, he'd sink to the bottom like a brick!"—The Bystander.

"There's wan thing," said Cassidy, in the restaurant, "that's always puzzled me." "Only wan thing?" piped Casey, sarcastically, "an' w'at's that?" "Is turtle soup fish whin 'tis made out av veal?"—New York Globe.

Mrs. Benham—Why don't you see him and ask him for the money he owes you? Benham—You don't know what a plausible talker he is, my dear; if I should meet him he would borrow more of me.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Missus—My man, don't you ever use soap? The Hobo—I would, mum, but I'm skeered. I been readin' the ads, an' each one says all other kinds is injurious to the skin. How am I goin' ter tell w'ich one is right?—Cleveland Leader.

"Do you think, Miss Gertrude," inquired a vapid young man conceitedly, "it would be foolish for me to marry a girl who was my inferior intellectually?" "More than foolish," answered Gertrude, sweetly—"impossible."—Rehoboth Sunday Herald.

"I never know what to do with my feet when I am in the parlor," remarked the bashful young man, as the conversation lagged. "Did it ever occur to you," remarked the matter-of-fact maid, "that you might steer them toward home?"—Chicago Daily News.

"George, I saw that Singleton woman to-day carrying the silk umbrella that she borrowed from me at the club card party." "Why didn't you ask her for it?" "I was just going to when I remembered that I borrowed it from Mrs. Trumper."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Burglar (rousing the sleeping head of the family)—Don't move or I'll shoot! Whar's your money hid? Head of the family (struck by a bright thought)—It's in the pocket of my wife's dress. Burglar—That's all right. I'll just take the dress. Thanks.—Chicago Tribune.

"Now, we must admit," began Woodby Wise, "that woman is naturally more hopeful than man——" "Yes," interrupted Marryat, "there's my wife, for instance; every time that she's bought fish since we've been married she has asked the dealer if they were fresh, hoping, I suppose, that some day he'll say 'No.'"—Philadelphia Press.

Jack—Say, Bill, we've been in hard luck lately, ain't we? Bill—We have, old man. Jack—I'll tell you what we'll do. You insure your life in my favor for ten thousand dollars, and I'll do the same for you. Bill—Well, what good'll that do us? Jack—Why, we'll just load up our guns, and step off thirty paces somewhere, and see who gets the money.—Life.

NATURE AND A WOMAN'S WORK

LYDIA E. PINKHAM

Nature and a woman's work combined have produced the grandest remedy for woman's ills that the world has ever known.

In the good old-fashioned days of our grandmothers they relied upon the roots and herbs of the field to cure disease and mitigate suffering.

The Indians on our Western Plains to-day can produce roots and herbs for every ailment, and cure diseases that baffle the most skilled physicians who have spent years in the study of drugs.

From the roots and herbs of the field Lydia E. Pinkham more than thirty years ago gave to the women of the world a remedy for their peculiar ills, more potent and efficacious than any combination of drugs.

Mrs. Bertha Muff, of 515 N.C. St., Louisiana, Mo., writes:

"Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my troubles public.

"For twelve years I had been suffering with the worst forms of female ills. During that time I had eleven different physicians without help. No tongue can tell what I suffered, and at times I could hardly walk. About two years ago I wrote Mrs. Pinkham for advice. I followed it, and can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Mrs. Pinkham's advice restored health and strength. It is worth mountains of gold to suffering women."

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for Mrs. Muff, it will do for other suffering women.

Fetching Little Frock.

Pale green mull with decoration of white lace insertion and edging made the bewitching little dress sketched here. The deep bertha forms a graceful finish to the waist, although (as shown in the smaller sketches) a very pretty and serviceable frock may be made without it. The short, full skirt has a deep hem, with two tucks of the same width which help to hold it out at the bottom. With the low neck, short sleeves—just below the elbows—are used, but when a high-neck guimpe is worn, full length sleeves are preferred.

The above pattern will be mailed to your address on receipt of 10 cents Send all orders to the Pattern Department of this paper. Be sure to give both the number and size of pattern wanted, and write very plainly. For convenience, write your order on the following coupon:

One-Piece Tucked Kimona.

One-piece kimonos seem fairly to have taken the world of negligees by storm and many of the latest are made in that way. This one is among the prettiest and is eminently graceful and attractive, while the labor of making is so slight as scarcely to be computed. There are tucks over the shoulders that give needed fulness, but the only seams are those at the under-arms. In this instance a pretty figured French flannel is trimmed with bands of India silk, but cashmere and henrietta, challis and albatross are all used for such negligees as well as all the pretty lawns and batistes for thinner ones. Bands can always be of any contrasting material, silk or cotton, as liked.

Once upon a time not many years hence perhaps a man being seized with a sudden and violent pain hastens to a doctor for relief.

"Where is the pain?" asks the doctor.

"Right here," groans the man and lays his hand on the afflicted part.

The doctor opens his case of instruments and takes therefrom several delicate compasses and a number of finely graduated tapes. With these he proceeds to make precise and elaborate measurements, stopping at frequent intervals to set down a great many figures on a sheet of paper.

"What are you doing?" cries the man at last, for his pain is all the time increasing.

"Of course I shall make very sure, first of all, that the location of the difficulty brings it within my specialty. Do you take me for a quack? You deserve to have been born a thousand years ago!"—Puck.

The railroads killed 196 persons in Chicago during the first nine months of this year, the street cars 106, teams and wagons 48 and the automobiles only 10.

REASON FOR WOMEN'S "NERVES."

In Very Many Cases It Is Weakened Kidneys.

Mrs. Frank Roseboom, 512 South Washington street, Moscow, Idaho, says: Inherited kidney trouble grew steadily worse with me until so nervous I could not sleep at night. I was dizzy and spots floated before my eyes. My back and hips ached and every cold settled on my kidneys and made me worse. I have used many different medicines and was discouraged when I began with Doan's Kidney Pills, but now the symptoms that alarmed me are gone."

Hudson Bay—New Outlet to Europe.

Without a doubt, Canada will raise half a billion bushels of grain annually ten years hence, and we shall see Hudson Bay unrivaled among the world's greatest inland trade arteries, says J. C. Eliot in the Technical World Magazine. Hudson Bay has been proposed as a new highway for transporting Canadian grain to Liverpool, and the fact that the new route would be a thousand miles shorter than the present way through the Great Lakes and overland to New York would greatly reduce the transportation cost on grain sent to Europe through the Bay. Many people to-day think of Northwestern Canada as a bleak, barren country, as cold as Alaska or Greenland. But in areas which are in the same latitude as Greenland, fine wheat crops have been raised. The tremendous amount of territory that will be affected by this new grain route makes Hudson Bay one of the greatest inland trade arteries of the world. Vast agricultural lands stretching as far west as the Canadian Rockies and a thousand miles north of Montreal, are included within the cost-saving reach of this New-World Mediterranean. The new route through Hudson Bay will place the farmers who cultivate 600 million acres of land, in control of the grain markets of the world by making possible a 50 per cent reduction in cost of transportation. To attract and control the future traffic of the Hudson Bay route would be—it would seem—to control the destiny of all Western Canada and the commercial supremacy of the New World.

RAILROAD MAN

Didn't Like Being Starved.

A man running on a railroad has to be in good condition all the time or he is liable to do harm to himself and others.

A clear head is necessary to run a locomotive or conduct a train. Even a railroad man's appetite and digestion are matters of importance, as the clear brain and steady hand result from the healthy appetite followed by the proper digestion of food.

"For the past five years," writes a railroader, "I have been constantly troubled with indigestion. Every doctor I consulted seemed to want to starve me to death. First I was dieted on warm water and toast until I was almost starved; then, when they would let me eat, the indigestion would be right back again.

"Only temporary relief came from remedies, and I tried about all of them I saw advertised. About three months ago a friend advised me to try Grape-Nuts food. The very first day I noticed that my appetite was satisfied, which had not been the case before, that I can remember.

"In a week, I believe, I had more energy than ever before in my life. I have gained seven pounds and have not had a touch of indigestion since I have been eating Grape-Nuts. When my wife saw how much good this food was doing me she thought she would try it awhile. We believe the discoverer of Grape-Nuts found the 'Perfect Food.'"

SCALY ERUPTION ON BODY.

Doctors and Remedies Fruitless—Suffered 10 Years—Completely Cured by Cuticura.

"Small sores appeared on each of my lower limbs and shortly afterwards they became so sore that I could scarcely walk. The sores began to heal, but small scaly eruptions appeared. The itching was so severe that I would scratch the sores until the blood began to flow. After I suffered thus about ten years I made a renewed effort to effect a cure. The eruptions by this time had appeared on every part of my body except my face and hands. The best doctor in my native county and many remedies gave no relief. All this was fruitless. Finally my hair began to fall out and I was rapidly becoming bald. A few months after, having used almost everything else, I thought I would try Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Soap. After using three boxes I was completely cured, and my hair was restored, after fourteen years of suffering and an expenditure of at least $50 or $60 in vainly endeavoring to find a cure. B. Hiram Mattingly, Vermillion, S. Dak., Aug. 18, 1906."

New Zealand's Wonderland.

New Zealand is a kind of Utopian colony where women vote and poverty is unknown, says W. G. Fitz-Gerald in the Technical World Magazine. It is firstly a pastoral, and secondly an agricultural country. But it is mainly remarkable to the outsider for its most curious aboriginal race, whose origin has been lost in obscurity; and for the thermal "wonderland" of North Island, where a vast region has been set apart by the government for all time as a sanatorium for invalids. This region abounds in volcanoes, many of them over 6,000 feet high, whose crater-lips emit steam, vapors, and poisonous gases. In one of the mountains a hot, steaming lake lies at the bottom of a funnel-shaped crater whose perpendicular sides are mantled with snow and ice. The land seethes with hot springs, geysers, "Porridge Pots," mud holes that forever boil, and exploding pools.

A Remedy for Neuralgia or Pain in Nerves.

For neuralgia and sciatica Sloan's Liniment has no equal. It has a powerfully sedative effect on the nerves—penetrates without rubbing and gives immediate relief from pain—quickens the circulation of the blood and gives a pleasant sensation of comfort and warmth.

"For three years I suffered with neuralgia in the head and jaws," writes J. P. Hubbard, of Marietta, S. C., "and had almost decided to have three of my teeth pulled, when a friend recommended me to buy a twenty-five-cent bottle of Sloan's Liniment. I did so and experienced immediate relief, and I kept on using it until the neuralgia was entirely cured. I will never be without a bottle of Sloan's Liniment in my house again. I use it also for insect bites and sore throat, and I can cheerfully recommend it to any one who suffers from any of the ills which I have mentioned."

Joseph Deitrick Called by Death.

Alfred Joseph Deitrick, son of John and Elizabeth Deitrick, was born near McSherrystown, Adams Co., Pa., Aug. 5, 1828, departed this life Jan. 9, 1908, at his home in Milan township, Allen Co., Ind., aged 80 years, 5 months and four days. He came from Pennsylvania with his parents when a young boy and settled in Mahoning Co., O., where he grew to manhood. He was united in marriage to Katherine Oberholtzer, March 23, 1851. To this union were born three sons and three daughters. Two sons and one daughter having preceded their father in death. Those living are Mrs. E. H. Horn of Spencerville, Mrs. Frank Scholes of St. Joe and Reuben Deitrick of Coburntown. There were nine grand children and one great grandchild of which two grandchildren and great grandchild are dead. His first wife died April 11, 1887. He was again married to Lorena Perry the following year, who was the mother of two children, by first husband, Alpha Perry of Ft. Wayne and Mrs. Green of Kansas City. Mr. Deitrick was the seventh of a family of eight children, and the last to leave this earthly career. He moved to Indiana in 1853 and settled in Springfield township one mile from Salem Center, Lutheran church. He was one of its charter members and the last one to depart this life. In the spring of 1885 he moved from Springfield to Milan township near the Barnett chapel and had his membership transferred to that place, of which he remained a faithful member until death.

The funeral was held Sunday, Jan. 12, at Barnett chapel, conducted by the pastor, Rev. Moehler. Interment at Salem Center cemetery.

Bidby Burns Has Gone Insane.

Biddy Burns, at different times a member of Auburn's semiprofessional base ball teams, is now within the confines of the state hospital for the insane at Toledo. His hallucination is that he is an author whose writings are inspired by direct telephone communication with heaven. Biddy was one of the best ball players that ever donned an Auburn uniform and was a favorite among the local fans but dissipation wrecked him mentally and physically. He was a heavy drinker and of late was not at his best because of his willingness to satisfy his appetite. He was a good natured fellow as all the fans can truthfully testify. It has been said of him that he would give the shirt off his own back if it would help someone in need. His condition is a lamentable one.—Dispatch.

Mr. Stevens, who so recently moved from Auburn, is turning out some very neat and satisfactory shoe mending. He certainly has his trade well learned and is deserving of your patronage.

When the sad news came on Monday noon of the death of Mary Maurer it came as a thunderbolt. Her parents and friends were so encouraged over the morning news, that she was getting along nicely and with great hopes of her recovery. Her death has cast a deep sorrow over the community as Mrs. Maurer had a host of friends and no enemies, to know her was to love her. She will be greatly missed and we mourn her departure. We extend to her husband and parents all our heartfelt sympathy. The body arrived at St. Joe, Monday evening on No. 6. She was operated on at the Mary Thompson hospital and died Monday at 8:45. The funeral services will be held in the Lutheran church, Thursday at 1:30 o'clock. Frank Baltz and Mrs. R. F. Moffett and husband of Auburn were present when she passed away.

Why Suffer From Rheumatism?

Do you know that rheumatic pains can be relieved? If you doubt this just try one application of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It will make rest and sleep possible and that means a great deal to any one afflicted with rheumatism. For sale by H. Milliman, St. Joe: F. R. Bowman, Spencerville.

Beans, Beans, Beans.

G. A. R. Boys Give Annual Bean Supper Friday Evening in Opera House to a Large Crowd.

The Bean supper given in the opera house Friday evening, was a success in every way. Supper was served from 6:30 until 8:00 o'clock for 10c. After the feast was over the program was begun by music by the Coburntown band, which was enjoyed by all. Rev. J. A. Brown was introduced and he made a few remarks in behalf of old veterans. Chris Curie was called upon for a few remarks but he said as he was not in the service he was unable to tell of the hardships the soldiers went through and that no one knew the real hardships without first having the experience in this line. J. A. Provines had promised Mr. Curie that he would tell him why he was captured during the war and Mr. Curie thought that at this time it would be very appropriate for his remarks. He called upon Provines for the desired information. Provines stated that the only reason he could give that he was captured with about 5,000 others, was that he did'nt start to run soon enough, and we guess he was about right. Rev. Heininger, an old veteran, was called upon for a talk and he gave a very interesting talk, he having the experience and thus he knew what he was talking about. O. H. Widney made a few remarks, after which a patriotic drill was given by young people of the Christian church, which was well received. The Coburntown band furnished music for the remainder of the program. The crowd was large and an enjoyable time was had.

METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH.

Next Friday at 2 p. m. the quarterly Conference meets in the Concord church. Rev. J. L. Barclay, treas. of the Indiana Conference, will preside at 7 p. m. he will preach at the Fairview church, Saturday at 7 p. m. he will preach at the Concord church on Sunday at 10 a. m. after which communion services will be held. At 7 p. m. Bro. Barclay will preach in the St. Joe church. A cordial welcome to all. Revival services at St. Joe continue.

Glen Hart has been sick for the past week.

Alva Trace has been sick with pneumonia but is now better.

Wash Hart and wife were guests of W. M. Abel and wife, one day last week.

Wash Hart has been quite poorly again but is now so improved as to be about.

Rev. Brown of Auburn preached at the Corners, Sunday morning and evening.

Little Delphia Coburn has been suffering with a beating in her head this week.

The band boys cleared about $13.50 by their box social Saturday evening. The attendance was good and the music was fine. The boys have improved wonderfully while under the instruction of Foraker Ferrell and have decided to have him for some time.

We stated a few weeks ago that Myron Abel had sold his farm, but we were later informed that the party buying backed down and out.

Vol. 1, No. 3 of the Public Press of Garrett reached our exchange table Monday. It is published by the Ideal Printing Company and is a bright, newsy little sheet. We welcome it as an exchange.

The Woodman lodge at this place are making rapid progress. Monday evening two men were taken in as social members. It started a year ago with about a dozen members and now they number between thirty-five and forty.

Friends and neighbors to the number of about twenty-five gathered at the home of Frank Sechler and wife, north of town, last Saturday night and were treated to oysters. The occasion of the gathering was the result of the fact that Mrs. Sechler was the lucky one that held the ticket that drew the kitchen cabinet given away at Barneys, Saturday afternoon. Those that gathered there felt that they were entitled to a treat from Mr. and Mrs. Sechler because of their good luck.

ST. Joe was certainly a busy town Saturday, being thronged with bargain hunters all afternoon. The principal attractions were the cabinet drawing at Sol Barney's, the shoes at the Big 4 Store and the Clearance Sale prices at H. Milliman's. Rigs began coming in town early and at one time there were over 150 rigs east of the post office, but one can be safe in making it 175 rigs in the least. Could our merchants get together they could have a large crowd in town every Saturday.

For that Dandruff

There is one thing that will cure it—Ayer's Hair Vigor. It is a regular scalp-medicine. It quickly destroys the germs which cause this disease. The unhealthy scalp becomes healthy. The dandruff disappears, had to disappear. A healthy scalp means a great deal to you—healthy hair, no dandruff, no pimples, no eruptions.

Herbert Sherer is able to be about the house after an attack of typhoid fever.

Miss Ethel Berry is again on the sick list, but will be at work in a few days.

A new Acetylene Gas Lighting Plant is being installed in the home of Henry Krabill.

Mrs. Rose Johnston returned last week after several weeks visit with her sons at Rockford, Ill.

The following item of last week now stands corrected:—Mrs. W. C. De Long entertained the following last week, in honor of Miss Erb, of Garrett: Frank White and wife, Will Hart and family, Dr. and Mrs. W. Mutzfeld and Mrs. C. F. Kagey. It should have read Dr. and Mrs. Price, Mrs. W. Mutzfeld and Mrs. C. F. Kagey.

Educated Owls.

The "Independent Order of Educated Owls" met at the home of Mrs. W. C. DeLong on Widney Avenue, Monday night. The members present were; Mrs. Harry Milliman and little Lenore, Mrs. Charles Kagey, Mrs. Mahlon Baker, Mrs. Edward Leighty and Miss Marie, Mrs. G. M. Barney and daughter Pauline, Mrs. Wes Mutzfeld also Miss Florence Mutzfeld of Butler. After regular session of the order, games were indulged in until ten o'clock, when the following two course luncheon was served by the hostess. Bitter sandwich, chicken Spanish pickle, potato salad, cucumber pickle, peaches a la mode, spice cake and coffee. At eleven o'clock all wended their way homeward, after agreeing to meet again in one week, the place not yet decided.

To Our Subscribers

If you are in arrears for THE NEWS you will have to pay up or the paper will be discontinued. This action is not through choice of the publishers but the postoffice department has made a ruling to the effect that all papers not paid for in advance or within the year, will not be accepted as second class matter, but a larger amount of postage will have to be paid, which, of course the publisher could not stand. This is a radical ruling, but we have nothing to do but comply with it. The new law was effective Jan. 1st., but a reasonable length of time has been allowed the publishers to get their books straightened up. We do not desire to stop anyone's paper, but we will be compelled to do so with some if they do not respond quickly.

We will in a few days send you a statement of your account and then if not settled for we will take other means. We have until April 1 to get our list in shape and those who are not paid up will be "cut off." If you want to read THE NEWS, please act accordingly.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

All Sides and Conditions of Things are Shown. Nothing Overlooked to make it Complete.

Police Battle with Hungarians.

Two men were killed, one policeman was wounded and several working men were injured in a pitched battle between three policemen and thirty Hungarian railroad laborers at Gary, Ind. Guns and revolvers were fired and knives thrown, but, though they were outnumbered ten to one, the policemen made seven arrests and stood their grounds until reinforcements arrived, when thirteen more men were captured. Several escaped through the sand dunes. The Hungarians had been working on the tracks of the South Bend railroad. Several of their number destroyed the tent of a negro laborer and when the latter sought redress at the camp, he was fired upon. A railroad watchman, who sought to aid the negro, also was compelled to flee. Warrants then were sworn out and the policemen went to the scene. A shot greeted their demand to surrender and the battle followed.

Texas Trust Company Fails.

The Western Bank and Trust Company, of Dallas, Tex., the largest savings bank in the State, has been placed in the hands of a receiver, Henry D. Lindsey. Officers of the bank declare that a quiet run has prevailed since October 1 and to meet it, they have paid out over $900,000. The bank had a capital of $500,000 and over 4,000 saving depositors. Its total liabilities are $1,054,104. Officers of the bank declare the depositors will lose nothing.

Fears That Ship is Lost.

The British ship Hartfield, from Liverpool to Seattle, Wash., is believed to have gone down with all on board off the west coast of Vancouver Island. A wireless message reports that the vessel's deck house and several empty boxes were washed ashore. The ship's captain is A. S. Anderson, and his wife and family probably were on board. In all about thirty persons were aboard the ship.

Fire at Miami University.

Hepburn Hall, the girls' dormitory at Miami University, Oxford, Ohio, was destroyed by fire. All of the young women students were in the gymnasium when the fire started, but all saved their personal effects, except those who had rooms on the third floor. The loss is estimated at $40,000.

Earthquake in Haiti.

A serious earthquake has occurred at Gonavis, sixty-five miles northwest of Port Au Prince, Haiti. A few houses have been destroyed and others were damaged. No loss of life has been reported. Communication with the town is broken. The shocks continue. The first was followed by a tidal wave.

Kills Sweetheart's Father.

Because Joseph Banks, of Carmi, Ill., refused to give his daughter in marriage to Allen Morrow, said to be insane, the latter shot and killed him and then mortally wounded himself. Morrow was wounded by William Banks, a son. He had recently been released from an insane hospital.

Madman Runs Amuck.

In a fit of insanity Harvey Lackner, of Tuscola, Ill., gashed with an ax the head of his wife and that of his 7-months-old baby and then killed himself by cutting his throat with a razor. The woman died later. The baby cannot live. Lackner dissipated and was an epileptic and partial paralytic.

Excitement Proves Fatal.

Fire destroyed the Pacific Press building at Twelfth and Castro streets, Oakland, Cal. During the fire W. B. Coldian, 61 years old, a mining broker, dropped dead from excitement and Fireman Arthur Govens was seriously injured. The total loss is estimated at $80,000.

Many Men Return to Work.

Orders have been issued by the Pittsburg Steel Company to put full forces at work in the wire, rod and tube mills at Monessen, Pa. Approximately 2,000 men are affected by the resumption.

DWINDLING OF ARMY GIVES CUE TO CRITICS

Military Men Say Force Is Reduced Beyond Point of Safety for the Nation.

NEED OF REFORM IN SERVICE.

Low Pay and Requirement of Hard Practice Marches Are Main Points of Attack.

The War and Navy Departments are trying to reach an agreement by which the marines are to be withdrawn from the Isthmus of Panama and two regiments of infantry are to be sent to take their places as guards. It is fully expected that before long two regiments or foot will be on their way to the canal zone. This diverting of army regulars to a new field will mean that the forces in the United States are to be depleted beyond that which officers believe to be the danger point.

The infantry problem is one of the most serious factors in the greater problem of the army's weakness. On paper we are supposed to have 30,000 infantrymen, but in truth we have nothing like that number, and unless the increase of pay bill pass Congress, it is perfectly evident that the ranks will be thinned still further. An army officer who knows conditions tells a Washington correspondent that in a case of emergency there would be less than 7,000 infantrymen who could be brought with anything like dispatch to any threatened point within the limits of the United States proper.

There are two chief army measures now before Congress, one dealing with the matter of the increase of pay and the other dealing with the matter of the increase of the infantry. A correspondent says there is precious little hope that both bills can pass. It probably would be folly to pass the second bill without passing the first, for it would be useless to provide for an increase in the ranks if no inducements were held out by which the increase could be effected.

Interviews with enlisted men disclose three chief objections to army life, and, in order of numerical precedent, they rank like this:

Monthly practice marches.

Poor pay.

Non-military duty required of the enlisted men.

Some of the ranking officers of the army have inveighed constantly against what they call the folly of the frequent practice marches. The men are kept in fine physical condition and as hard as walnuts through the daily drills, the guard duty, the good food, and the regular living generally. Yet they are compelled at least once a month to hike out on the road under heavy burdens and trying conditions for the purpose of keeping in trim so that they will be ready for the field in case of hostilities. The practice march, fairly long continued and to come at long intervals, has its uses, and the men like it; but they don't like it coming as it does every three or four weeks.

POLITICS and POLITICIANS

Jackson Day at Chicago was a far different affair from that of the New York gathering. There the banquet given by the Jefferson Club was the scene of a Bryan love feast, in which 600 Democrats cheered riotously the words of the Nebraskan.

Viscount Aoki, the retiring Japanese ambassador, in an interview at San Francisco, declared in positive terms that there could be no such thing at present as war between this country and Japan. He said the questions at issue were not such as would cause war and that all the high officials of Japan were convinced of the good faith and friendship of this country.

Secretary Taft, who will soon begin the preparation of an extended report on his observations in the Philippines, in a recent interview expressed himself as highly pleased with the progress already made in the islands. Peace, he says, prevails throughout the Philippines to a greater extent than ever before in their history, and agriculture is proceeding without fear from predatory bands. He finds the natives receptive to education and to modern western conceptions of religion and politics, and says there is no difference between the educated and the ignorant Filipino that cannot be overcome by the education of one generation. The Secretary thinks the people should not be intrusted with self-government until their primary and industrial education is complete, and this may require more than a generation owing to a lack of funds for educational purposes.

WORK OF CONGRESS

The Senate was not in session Friday. The House resumed its old activity and for over five hours transacted business of a public nature. Material progress was made with the bill to codify, revise and amend the criminal laws of the United States, which was taken up after some routine bills had been disposed of. An attempt by Mr. Littlefield of Maine to amend the bill so as to afford protection to aliens in the matter of civil rights failed by a decisive vote. The feature of the session was a brief address by Mr. Burleson of Texas, who credited Senator Foraker and other Republicans with having charged the President with the responsibility for the recent financial crisis.

-:—:-

The Senate was not in session Saturday. A vigorous fight was waged in the House of Representatives over the bill to codify and revise the penal laws of the United States, with particular reference to Section 19, affecting conspiracies against the civil rights of citizens. Messrs. Smith of Missouri and Hughes of New Jersey, offered amendments, having for their object the exemption of labor unions from the operation of the section whenever such unions declare strikes or boycotts. A motion to strike out the whole section was made by Mr. Bartlett of Georgia. The brunt of the debate was borne by Mr. Sherley of Kentucky, a member of the Committee on Revision, but he was supported by a number of Republicans. These amendments were all lost, as was one by Mr. De Armond to strike out Section 20. It is likely that discussion of the bill on points of law will be indulged from time to time for several weeks.

-:—:-

The recent issue of bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury was the occasion of an animated debate in the Senate Monday. The discussion was precipitated by an inquiry by Senator Culberson and was participated in by Senators Aldrich, Tillman and Bailey. It resulted in an agreement to postpone further controversy until a statement can be received from Secretary Cortelyou. Mr. Tillman's resolutions directing the Finance Committee to inquire into the operations of the Treasury Department was referred, with his consent, to that committee. The unfinished business in the form of a bill to codify the criminal laws of the United States was placed before the Senate and the reading of the bill was begun. Vigorous defense of State's rights in dealing with violations of civil rights or with special State elections where troops have been called into service served to enliven the debate in the House in connection with the bill to codify the penal laws of the United States. A number of Democrats, mostly from the Southern States, strenuously sought by amendment to reserve to the States themselves the discretion as to the qualifications of voters, and of persons to serve on juries, and to limit the power of federal judges on certain cases; but every attempt failed.

-:—:-

The recent federal bond issue was again the subject for discussion in the Senate Tuesday, being brought forward for a resolution offered by Senator Culberson, calling on the secretary for additional information concerning the reasons that induced him to award bonds to national banks instead of to individuals who offered a higher price. Mr. Aldrich insisted that the resolution should not be adopted until after Secretary Cortelyou's reply to a resolution formerly adopted by the Senate was received, but promised to aid in securing additional information. Mr. Culberson's resolution went over under the rules. Senator Tillman offered a resolution embodying a new series of inquiries concerning the financial situation. The amount of the fine and the length of the term of imprisonment to be meted out to officers and directors of corporations for violating the law with respect to money contributions for political purposes furnished material for debate in the House in connection with the consideration of the penal code bill. All amendments to increase the penalty were voted down. Earlier in the day there was a sharp debate over the section prohibiting the enticing of artificers and workmen from government arsenals or armories by private employers, and all attempts to amend the provision so as to make it applicable only in time of war or public emergency were voted down. When adjournment was taken eighty-six sections of the 342 had been disposed of.

-:—:-

The Senate did not receive a reply Wednesday from the Secretary of the Treasury to its resolution calling for information concerning the financial situation, and in its absence Senator Aldrich assented to the passage of Senator Culberson's resolution on the same subject. A joint resolution reducing from $24,000,000 to $11,000,000 the war indemnity of the United States from China was passed. The remainder of the session was devoted to the discussion of the penal code bill. The committee on revision of the laws in the House finally consented to allow amendments to the bill codifying the penal laws of the United States, and as a result the measure was changed in some important particulars. When the House adjourned there were pending a number of important amendments. The portions of the bill which attracted the most attention were those covering the giving and accepting of bribes by Senators and members and the sale of indorsements or support for appointive public offices.

100 KILLED IN PANIC AT CHURCH BENEFIT

Blaze Follows Explosion and Women and Children Are Trampled to Death.

CORPSES BLOCK STAIRWAY.

Overturned Oil Lamps Feed Flames and Force Trapped Audience to Jump from Windows.

One hundred persons were killed and seventy-five were seriously injured, many of whom will die, in a fire and panic which followed the explosion of a moving picture machine at a church entertainment in the Rhodes Opera House in Boyerton, Pa., Monday evening.

Most of the dead and injured are women and children, and the catastrophe has thrown the little town of 2,500 inhabitants into the deepest grief. Scarcely a family but has lost some member.

The opera house, a two-story structure on the main street of the town, was filled to overflowing by a benefit for St. John's Lutheran Church. The feature of the program was a series of moving pictures. Most of the audience were women and children.

Giant Tank Explodes.

Suddenly, in the midst of the entertainment, the acetylene tank which furnished light for the moving picture machine exploded. Instantly the whole interior of the opera house was filled with flames.

The actors endeavored to quiet the audience, but in their anxiety to make themselves heard and to avoid the awful stampede of the women and children, the coal oil lamps which were used at the footlights were overturned, setting the place on fire.

The flames, fed by oil, shot almost to the ceiling, and there was a rush of the several hundred persons to escape from the burning building. Scores of women and children were trampled on and several who escaped being burned to death died after being dragged from the opera house.

In some cases, it is said, entire families have been wiped out. The scene which followed the explosion is indescribable.

Section of the Floor Gives Way.

Following the explosion there was a wild rush of the audience for the stairway, the one means of exit. A score of persons reached the stairway simultaneously, and it was jammed so full of struggling humanity that only a few reached the outer air.

In the mad rush a section of the floor gave way, precipitating scores of persons to the basement. As the floor collapsed the shrieks of the helpless persons who were carried down were heard for blocks.

The interior of the opera house was of wood and plaster, and the flimsy carpentry that made the stage and its fittings furnished excellent material for the flames. Within two minutes after the explosion occurred the entire building was a mass of flames.

The jamming of people in the stairway blocked that means of egress, and dozens of frantic women and children leaped from the front window to the stone pavement below. Not one of these escaped broken limbs, and they are practically all of the injured, inasmuch as those inside the opera house perished.

Only Fire Engine Disabled.

To make matters worse, the one fire engine in Boyertown is disabled, and there was no means of fighting the fire. It is almost certain that all of the bodies of the victims were cremated, and the hopes of identifying any of them are destroyed. Fire engines were sent to the scene from Reading and Pottstown, but they arrived too late to be of any service further than to save surrounding property.

Requests for assistance were quickly sent to Pottstown and Reading, and special trains bearing surgeons and nurses were hurried there. These surgeons, assisted by local physicians, improvised hospitals in near-by residences and stores, and gave what aid was possible to the injured.

At the foot of the narrow stairway, which was jammed full of dead and dying, scores of victims could be seen from the street. Dozens of men tried to reach them, and succeeded in carrying a few of them out, but the heat of the fire soon drove them back. Then, as the flames ate their way down the stairway and reached them, the bodies were cremated in the very sight of those who would have carried them out.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

While the curtailment of production in various industrial branches continues, there are evidences of a favorable nature for steady improvement to take place soon. With the banks now virtually back to specie payment and discount operations extending, it is not surprising that the volume of business, as reflected by bank exchanges, makes the best exhibit in nine weeks, the comparative decline being the lowest in that period.

Following the extra time taken to make necessary repairs to plants, resumption became general and quickly reduced the number of workers made temporarily idle, and the indications now turn for the better at the furnaces, mills and forges.

Some substantial bookings appear in iron, steel and wire, and fair orders come forward in furniture, boxmaking, footwear and vehicles. Little change is expected in prices of finished products, but a feeling that costs may be lowered is to some extent causing hesitation where much capital is involved.

Weather conditions advanced the January clearance sales in retail lines, stocks undergoing satisfactory reduction, and a considerable increased number of visiting buyers attended the wholesale markets for staples, textiles, boots and shoes, clothing and food products. Mercantile collections throughout the West are irregular, some sections remitting promptly, while at others the defaults indicate weakness.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 36, against 28 last week and 26 a year ago. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 7, against 1 last week and 8 in 1907.—Dun's Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Financial affairs show further and marked improvement, and money is more plentiful and easier to obtain, but the gain in trade and industry proper is still largely one of sentiment, because business is quiet, the country over, railway earnings and bank clearings are below a year ago, collections are slow, though better than a month ago, and industry is as a whole on short time, with the larger centers reporting a great number of unemployed.

In trade lines the general report is one of backward business. Mild weather is still a bar to the widest activities in seasonable goods North and West, and retailers are stimulating lagging demand by reduction sales. Southern trade shows little more life than a week ago. Some lines report after-holiday collections as better than those of December, and in some cases better than anticipated, but they in few cases are better than slow to fair.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending Jan. 9 number 434, against 345 last week, 283 in the like week of 1907, 286 in 1906, 295 in 1905 and 315 in 1904. Failures in Canada this week numbered 63, against 27 last week and 24 in this week a year ago.—Bradstreet's Review.

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

A. CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER I. (Continued.)

"Now supposing," continued the senior partner, with a smile on his thin lips, "that such a report got about. Suppose, too, that we were at this time, when the market was in a depressed condition, to invest several thousand pounds in them. If these rumors of an alleged discovery turned out to be entirely unfounded, of course the value of the stones which we held would go up once more, and we might very well sell out for double or treble the sum that we invested. Don't you see the sequence of events?"

"There seems to me to be rather too much of the suppose in it," remarked Ezra. "How do we know that such rumors will get about; and if they do, how do we know that they will prove to be unfounded?"

"How are we to know?" the merchant cried, wriggling his long lank body with amusement. "Why, my lad, if we spread the rumor ourselves we shall have pretty good reason to believe that they are unfounded. Eh, Ezra! Ha! ha! You see there are some brains in the old man yet."

Ezra looked at his father in considerable surprise and some admiration. "Why," he exclaimed, "it's dishonest. I'm not sure that it's not actionable."

"Dishonest! Pooh!" The merchant snapped his fingers. "It's finesse, my boy, commercial finesse. Who's to trace it, I should like to know. I haven't worked out all the details—I want your co-operation over that—but here's a rough sketch of my plan. We send a man we can depend upon to some distant part of the world, Chimborazo, for example, or the Ural Mountains. It doesn't matter where, as long as it is out of the way. On arriving at this place our agent starts a report that he has discovered a diamond mine. We should even go the length, if he considers it necessary, of hiding a few rough stones in the earth, which he can dig up to give color to his story. Of course the local press would be full of this. He might present one of the diamonds to the editor of the nearest paper. In course of time a pretty colored description of the new diamond fields would find its way to London and thence to the Cape. I'll answer for it that the immediate effect is a great drop in the price of stones. We should have a second agent at the Cape diamond fields, and he would lay our money out by buying in all that he could while the panic lasted. Then, the original scare having proved to be all a mistake, the prices naturally go up once more, and we get a long figure for all that we hold. That's what I mean by 'making a corner in diamonds.' There is no room in it for any miscalculation."

"It sounds very nice," his son remarked, thoughtfully. "I'm not so sure about its working, though."

"It must work well. As far as human calculation can go there is no possibility of failure. Besides, my boy, never lose sight of the fact that we shall be speculating with other people's money. We ourselves have nothing to lose, absolutely nothing."

"I am not likely to lose sight of it," said Ezra angrily, his mind coming back to his grievance.

"I reckon that we can raise from forty to fifty thousand pounds without much difficulty. My name is, as you know, as good as that of any firm in the city. For nearly forty years it has been above stain or suspicion. If we carry on our plans at once, and lay this money out judiciously, all may come right."

"It's Hobson's choice," the young man remarked. "We must try some bold stroke of the sort. Have you chosen the right sort of men for agents? You should have men of some standing to set such reports going. They would have more weight then."

John Girdlestone shook his head despondingly. "How am I to get a man of any standing to do such a piece of business?" he said.

"Nothing easier," answered Ezra with a cynical laugh. "I could pick out a score of impecunious fellows from the clubs who would be only too glad to earn a hundred or two in any way you can mention. I shall go myself to the diamond fields. As to our other agent, I have the very man, Major Tobias Clutterbuck. He is a shrewd, clever fellow, and he's always hard up. His social rank would be a great help to our plan. I'll answer for his jumping at the idea."

"Sound him on the subject, then."

"I will."

"I am glad," said the old merchant, "that you and I have had this conversation, Ezra. The fact of my having speculated without your knowledge, and deceived you by a false ledger, has often weighed heavily upon my conscience, I assure you. It is a relief to me to have told you all."

"Drop the subject, then," Ezra said, curtly. "I must put up with it, for I have no redress. The thing is done and nothing can undo it, but I consider that you have willfully wasted the money."

"Believe me, I have tried to act for the best. The good name of our firm is everything to me. I have spent my whole life in building it up, and if the day should come when it must go, I trust that I may have gone myself. There is nothing which I would not do to preserve it."

"I see they want our premiums," Ezra said, glancing at the open letter upon the table. "How is it that none of those ships go down? That would give us help."

"Hush! hush!" John Girdlestone cried, imploringly. "Speak in a whisper when you talk of such things."

"I can't understand you," said Ezra, petulantly. "You persistently over-insure your ships, year after year. Look at the Leopard; it is put at more than twice what she was worth as new. And the Black Eagle, I dare say, is about the same. Yet you never have an accident with them, while your two new uninsured clippers run each other down."

"Well, what more can I do?" replied the merchant. "They are thoroughly rotten. I have done nothing for them for years. Sooner or later they must go. I cannot do any more."

"I'd make 'em go down quick enough," muttered Ezra with an oath. "Why don't you make old Miggs bore a hole in them, or put a light to a barrel of paraffin? The thing's done every day. What's the use of being milk-and-watery about it?"

"No, no, Ezra!" cried his father. "Not that, not that. It's one thing letting matters take their course, and it is another thing giving positive orders to scuttle a ship. Besides, it would put us in Miggs' power. It would be too dangerous."

"Please yourself," said Ezra with a sneer. "You've got us into the mess and you must take us out again. If the worst comes to the worst I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll marry Kate Harston, wash my hands of the firm, leave you to settle matters with the creditors, and retire with the forty thousand pounds," with which threat the junior partner took up his hat and swaggered out of the office.

After his departure John Girdlestone spent an hour in anxious thought, arranging the details of the scheme which he had just submitted to his son. As he sat his eye chanced to fall upon the two letters lying on his desk, and it struck him that they had better be attended to. It did not suit his plans to fall back upon his credit just yet. It has been already shown that he was a man of ready resource. He rang the bell and summoned his senior clerk.

"Good morning, John," he said affably.

"Good morning, Mr. Girdlestone, good morning, sir," said wizened little John Gilray, rubbing his thin yellow hands together, as a sign of his gratification.

"I hear, John, that you have come into a legacy lately," Mr. Girdlestone said.

"Yes, sir. Fifteen hundred pounds, sir."

"What have you done with the money, John?"

"Banked it, sir, in the United Metropolitan."

"In the United Metropolitan, John? Let me see. Their present rate of interest is four and a half?"

"Four, sir," said John.

"Four! Dear me, John, that is poor intehest, very poor indeed. It is most fortunate that I made these inquiries. I was on the point of drawing fourteen hundred pounds from one of my correspondents as a temporary convenience. For this I should pay him five per cent. I have no objection, John, as you are an old servant of the firm, to giving you the preference in this matter. I cannot take more than fourteen hundred—but I shall be happy to accommodate you up to that sum at the rate named."

John Gilray was overwhelmed by this thoughtful and considerate act. "It is really too generous and kind, sir," he said. "I don't know how to thank you."

"Don't mention it, John," the senior partner said grandly. "The firm is always glad to advance the interests of its employes in any reasonable manner. Have you your check book with you? Fill it up for fourteen hundred. No more, John, I cannot oblige you by taking any more."

John Girdlestone's private residence in Eccleston square was a large and substantial house in a district which the wave of fashion had passed over in its westward course. The building was stern and hard, and massive in its external appearance, but the interior was luxury itself, for the old merchant had a due appreciation of the good things of this world. Indeed there was an oriental and almost barbarous splendor about the great rooms, where the richest furniture was interspersed with skins from the Gaboon, hand-worked ivory from Old Calabar, and the thousand other strange valuables which were presented by his agents to the African trader.

After the death of his friend, Girdlestone had been as good as his word. He had taken Kate Harston away from the desolate house at Fulham and brought her to live with him. From the garrets of that palatial edifice to the cellars she was at liberty to roam where she would, and do what she chose. No cares or responsibilities were imposed upon her. The domestic affairs were superintended by a stern housekeeper, who arranged every detail of housekeeping. The young girl had apparently only to exist and to be happy.

John Girdlestone had been by no means overjoyed upon the return of the Dimsdales from Edinburgh to learn that his ward had been thrown into the company of her young cousin. He received her coldly, and forbade her to visit Phillimore Gardens for some time to come. He even took the precaution of telling off a confidential footman to walk behind her on all occasions, and to act either as an escort or as a sentry.

It chanced, however, that one day, a few weeks after her return, Kate found an opportunity of recovering her freedom. The footman had been dispatched upon some other duty. So she bethought herself that a book was to be bought, and some lace to be matched, and several other important feminine duties to be fulfilled. It happened, however, that as she walked sedately down Warwick street her eyes fell upon a very tall and square-shouldered young man, who was lounging in her direction, tapping his stick listlessly against the railings, as is the habit of idle men. At this Kate forgot incontinently all about the book and the lace, while the tall youth ceased to tap the railings, and came striding towards her with long springy footsteps and a smiling face.

"Why, Cousin Tom, who would have thought of meeting you here?" she exclaimed, when the first greetings had been exchanged. "It is a most surprising thing." It is possible that the incident would not have struck her as so very astonishing after all, had she known that Tom had spent six hours a day for the last fortnight in blockading the entrances to Eccleston square.

"Most remarkable!" said the young hypocrite. "You see I haven't anything to do yet, so I walk about London a good deal. It was a lucky chance that sent me in this direction."

"And how is the doctor?" Kate asked eagerly. "And Mrs. Dimsdale, how is she? You must give my love to them both."

"How is it that you have never been to see us?" Tom asked reproachfully.

"Mr. Girdlestone thinks that I have been too idle lately, and that I should stay at home. I am afraid it will be some little time before I can steal away to Kensington."

Tom consigned her guardian under his breath to a region warmer even than the scene of that gentleman's commercial speculations. "Which way are you going?" he asked.

"I was going to Victoria street to change my book, and then to Ford street."

"What a strange thing!" the young man exclaimed, "was going in that direction too." It seemed the more strange as he was walking in the opposite direction when she met him. Neither seemed inclined to make any comment upon the fact.

As they walked on, threading their way among the vehicles, Tom took his companion's hand in his, and they exchanged one firm grip, which each felt to be of the nature of a pledge. How sunny and bright the dull brick-lined streets seemed to those two young people that afternoon. They were both looking into a future which seemed to be one long vista of happiness. So light-hearted were these two lovers that it was not until they found themselves in Warwick street once more that they came down from the clouds, and realised that there were some commonplace details which must be dealt with in one way or another.

"Of course, I may tell my own people, dearest, about our engagement?" Tom said.

"I wonder what your mother will say?" answered Kate laughing merrily. "She will be awfully astonished."

"How about Girdlestone?" asked Tom.

The thought of the guardian had never occurred to either of them before. They stared at each other and Kate's face assumed such an expression of dismay that her companion burst out laughing.

"Don't be frightened, darling," he said. "If you like I'll go in and beard the lion in his den. There is no time like the present."

"No, no, dear Tom," she cried eagerly. "You must not do that." It was impossible for her to tell him how especially Girdlestone had cautioned her against him, but she felt that it would never do to allow the two to meet. "We must conceal our engagement from Mr. Girdlestone."

"Conceal our engagement!"

"Yes, Tom. He has warned me so often against anything of the sort, that really I don't know what he would do if he knew about it. He would certainly make it very uncomfortable for me to live with him. Remember I am nearly twenty now, so in a little more than a year I shall be entirely free. That is not very long."

"I don't know about that," Tom said, doubtfully. "However, if you will be more comfortable, of course, that settles the question. It seems rather hard, though, that we should have to conceal it, simply in order to pacify this old bear."

"It's only for a time, Tom;" and you may tell them at home by all means. Now, good-by, dear, they will see you from the windows if you come nearer."

"Good-by, my darling." They shook hands and parted, he hurrying away with the glad tidings to Phillimore Gardens, she tripping back to her captivity with the lightest heart that she had felt for a weary time. Passers-by glanced back at the bright little face under the bright little bonnet, and Ezra Girdlestone looking down at her from the drawing room window, bethought him that if the diamond speculation should fail it would be no hardship to turn to his father's ward.

Charge It in the Bill.

"Doctor," said a shrewd-looking man, "how many feet of gas does it take to kill a man?"

"That's a queer question," replied the doctor. "Why do you wish to know?"

"One of the guests in my hotel used enough of it to kill himself, and I want to send in a proper bill to his executors."—London Tit-Bits.

AWFUL EFFECT OF ECZEMA.

Covered with Yellow Sores—Grew Worse—Parents Discouraged—Cuticura Drove Sores Away.

"Our little girl, one year and a half old, was taken with eczema or that was what the doctor called it. We took her to three doctors, but by this time she was nothing but a yellow, greenish sore. One morning we discovered a little yellow pimple on one of her eyes. Doctor No. 3 said that we had better take her to some eye specialist, since it was an ulcer. So we went to Oswego to doctor No. 4, and he said the eyesight was gone. We were nearly discouraged, but I thought we would try the Cuticura Treatment; so I purchased a set of Cuticura Remedies, which cost me $1, and in three days our daughter, who had been sick about eight months, showed great improvement, and in one week all sores had disappeared. Of course it could not restore the eyesight, but if we had used Cuticura in time I am confident that it would have saved the eye. Mrs. Frank Abbott, R. F. D. No. 9, Fulton, Oswego Co., N. DO YOUR LEVEL BEST.

Put the Right Spirit Into Your Work and Keep Your Ideals High.

Put the right spirit into your work. Treat your calling as divine, as a call from principle. If the thing itself be not important, the spirit in which you take hold of it makes all the difference in the world to you. It can make or mar the man. You cannot afford grumbling service or botched work in your life's record. You cannot afford to form a habit of half doing things or of doing them in the spirit of a drudge, for this will drag its slimy trail through all your subsequent career, always humiliating you at the most unexpected times. Let other people do the poor jobs, the botched work, if they will. Keep your standards up, your ideals high.

The attitude with which a man approaches his task has everything to do with the quality and efficiency of his work and with its influence upon his character. What a man does is a part of himself. It is the self-expression of what he stands for. Our life work is an outpicturing of our ambition, our ideals, our real selves. If you see a man's work, you can see the man.

No one can respect himself or have that sublime faith in himself which is essential to all high achievements when he puts mean, half-hearted, slipshod service into what he does. He cannot get his highest self approval until he does his level best.—Success.

Coffee Finally Had to Go.

The way some persons cling to coffee even after they know it is doing them harm, is a puzzler. But it is an easy matter to give it up for good, when Postum Food Coffee is properly made and used instead.

A girl writes: "Mother had been suffering with nervous headaches for seven weary years, but kept drinking coffee.

"One day I asked her why she did not give up coffee, as a cousin of mine had done who had taken to Postum. But Mother was such a slave to coffee she thought it would be terrible to give it up.

"Finally, one day, she made the change to Postum, and quickly her headaches disappeared. One morning while she was drinking Postum so freely and with such relish, I asked for a taste.

"That started me on Postum and I now drink it more freely than I did coffee, which never comes into our house now.

"A girl friend of mine, one day, saw me drinking Postum and asked if it was coffee. I told her it was Postum and gave her some to take home, but forgot to tell her how to make it.

"The next day she said she did not see how I could drink Postum. I found she had made it like ordinary coffee. So I told her how to make it right and gave her a cupful I made, after boiling it fifteen minutes. She said she never drank any coffee that tasted as good, and now coffee is banished from both our homes." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Michigan.

"The church of today, much more the church of the future, must take to its heart the duty of combining and massing its force against the gigantic atrocity of Christian civilization that mothers nine-tenths of the woes and sorrows that blight and curse our modern age—the traffic in intoxicants which hides its deformity under forms of law. The conflict is now upon us. The church must lead in this reform. This is her most peculiar province. It comes in the line of the great class of moral issues of which she is the recognized guardian. The rum hole must be closed, or the rum hell will engulf Christendom. If ever the pulpit had a right, the duty to flay with unsparing rebuke, it is here."—Bishop Randolph S. Foster.

"Only give us a model license to do evil, and we will be very good."—The Model License League.

A certain liquor journal which six months ago maintained most emphatically that the saloon business was not in need of reform, has now come to the conclusion that "We are up against a condition and not a theory, and it is high time to set our house in order and remove any pretext for hostility."

Some of the saloonists are reported to have argued that people have no right to oppose their business as it is a business like any other business that has a right to protection by law. The saloon business is recognized as a thing that ought not to be permitted and so it exists legally only as the people grant them license to exist. It is just as much within the right of the people to say no license shall be issued as it is for the people, through their representatives, to make law granting them license. In fact, it is questioned whether the government has any right to make a law to grant license at all. So long as a saloon keeper has a license and obeys the law, he has a right to conduct his business and a right to the protection of the law in the conduct of his business. But it is generally understood that saloon keepers who do not violate the law every day are mighty few. If they did business according to law not more than one in a half-dozen could make expenses—and if reports are true very few are making much in Butler as it is.—Butler Record.

The Washington papers, especially those presumably representing the administration, are very outspoken concerning the spread of prohibition. A recent editorial declared that neither of the dominant parties could afford to ignore the subject of prohibition as a passing fad, nor brush aside its growth as of no account; that it might be well for political leaders to consider the situation of thirty-three million people living under some sort of prohibition at the present time in the United States; and that the subject was one that would be heard, and in the not far distant future.

Dear Reader: Do you know that there is no such thing as being neutral in the saloon matter? The law provides that in order to remove the saloons a majority of the voters in each ward must sign the remonstrance. To illustrate, suppose a ward had 213 voters all told at the last election, then it only 106 sign the remonstrance the saloons cannot be removed. The other 107 is made up of the saloon keeper, their friends who sign their cards, and with them the people who are trying to be neutral in the matter. The fact is the neutrals count for the saloon keepers, no matter what their sentiment is.—Record.

Humor in Journalism

Next to a million dollars a hearty laugh is about as pleasant a thing as one can have. Everybody really wants to laugh. No man and no newspaper can be really great without a sense of humor. The Chicago Record-Herald regards the promoting of smiles and laughter as a part of the legitimate mission of the press. For years the "Alternating currents" column of S. E. Kiser, in that paper has been a daily source of delight to its readers. The cartoons of Ralph Wilder on the first page also are designed to make people laugh—and make them think as well. In fact, the humor of The Record Herald, like its news columns, is always clean and kindly, as well as amusing and entertaining. It affords a striking example of the right way to "tell the truth laughing."

Famous humorists contribute to the Sunday Magazine of The Record-Herald with the popular novelists and celebrated writes on timely questions. Both text and illustrations are of the highest standard of periodical literature—the new idea in Sunday journalism perfected.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy a Safe Medicine for Children.

In buying a cough medicine for children, never be afraid to buy Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. There is no danger from it and relief is always sure to follow. It is intended especially for coughs, colds, croup and whooping cough, and there is no better medicine in the world for these diseases. It is not only a certain cure for croup, but when given as soon as the croupy cough appears, will prevent the attack. Whooping cough is not as dangerous when this remedy is given as directed. It contains no opium or other harmful drugs, and may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. For sale by H. Milliman, St. Joe; F. R. Bowman, Spencerville.

Why Suffer?

If you suffer pain from any cause, Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills will relieve it—and leave no bad after-effects. That's the important thing. Neither do they create a habit. More often the attacks become less frequent, or disappear altogether. Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills have no other effect except to relieve pain and quiet nervous irritation.

"We are never without Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. My husband and son, aged 15 were always subject to sick headache until we began using these Pills, and they have broken them up entirely. Don't think they have had to use them for six months. I recommend them to every one. A few weeks ago I heard an old lady friend was sick. I went to see her. She was down with LaGrippe, and nearly crazy with awful backache. I gave her one of the Anti-Pain Pills and left another for her to take in a short time. They helped her right away, and she says she will never be without them again. Last winter my husband was taken with pheurisy on both sides, and I know he would have died if it hadn't been for the Pills. In less than half an hour he was sweating, and went to bed as client."

Weak Women

To weak and ailing women, there is at least one way to help. But with that way, two requirements must be combined. One is local, the is constitutional, but both are important, both essential.

Dr. Shoop's Night Cure is the Local.

Dr. Shoop's Restorative, the Constitutional.

The former—Dr. Shoop's Night Cure—is a topical mucous membrane suppository remedy, while Dr. Shoop's Restorative is wholly an internal treatment. The Restorative reaches down into the entire system, seeking the repair of all nerve, all tissue and all blood elements.

The "Night Cure", as the name implies, does its work while you sleep. It soothes sore and inflamed mucous surfaces, heals local weakness and discharges, while the Restorative, super-nerve excitement, gives renewed vigor and ambition, builds up wasted tissue, enriches the blood, gives strength, vigor, and energy. Take Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—as a general tonic for the system. For positive local help, use no wash in the system. Dr. Shoop's Night Cure

The only men of worth to a town or community are those who forget their own selfish ends long enough and are liberal enough in their ideas to encourage every public and private enterprise, who are ready with brain and purse to push every project calculated to build up the town and enhance its importance. The enterprise and push of a town or community is the foundation of its permanent success. A town may as well prepare for funeral as to become indifferent to the enterprise in its midst. Men who come to a town to make it their future home, who can see far enough before them to see that money placed judiciously in a public enterprise of their own town will be a hundred fold in the appreciation of their property, are to be pitied.

Day's Come and Go.

The Day's Co. billed for this place, Thursday evening, made their appearance at the Widney Opera House, to a large crowd. Each number on the program was received with enthusiasm Mr. and Mrs. Day fully met with the approval of the entire audience. Their recommendations are not in the least exaggerated and those who did not hear them missed a rare treat.

Mr. Day's characterizations are original in the extreme. In any of them he acts his part in a way that seems almost true to life. Mrs. Day won the audience on her first appearance and was enthusiastically applauded. The closing piece was a one act comedy entitled "A Happy Pair," and was very good.

The next number on the course is a lecture by Sylvester A. Long, Feb. 7, 1908. Mr. Long is said to be as good as Lou J. Beauchamp, who was on our course several years ago and whom we remember with pleasure.

Modern Reading.

Fielding and Smollett wrote in the language of their age, which did not call a spade an agricultural implement. But they were wholesomeness itself as compared with the suggestiveness of much modern literature.—The Academy.

West Virginia Problem.

A knotty legal question has come to the surface in Webster county, says the Morgantown Chronicle. One man stole another man's skunk. It was a wild animal which was privileged to roam where it pleased, and it recognized no owner, lord or master. But in the course of its perambulations it entered upon the land of a man named Zicafoose, who set up a claim to the visitor because it was on his land, and when a predatory mountaineer came down like a wolf on the fold and carried away the dead carcass of the animal Mr. Zicafoose set up a claim that it was his property. Was it?

Tyranny of Clothes.

Place a man in a silk hat and frock coat, and transport him to a farmyard. Agricultural pursuits may be the one passion of his life, but clad in these garments he feels in such surroundings miserable, out of place, essentially urban. Clothe him, conversely, in flannels or knickers, and place him in a church, and it is utterly impossible for him to assume a fitting devotional frame of mind. Unlimited autocracy itself cannot impose such tyrannies on the subject. Civilization is the slave of its clothes—and there is no prospect of freedom.—London Daily Graphic.

No Coat for Nineteen Years.

During the journey from Victoria Falls to Kimberley a big, sun browned man boarded the Zambesi express minus his coat, with his shirtsleeves rolled up. He took a seat at dinner and the chief steward remarked to him that as there were ladies present perhaps he would have no objection to putting on his coat. "Great Scott!" the man replied, "I haven't worn a coat for 19 years. You will have to wait, my friend, until I can buy one at Kimberley!"—South African Railway Magazine.

One of the Essentials

of the happy homes of to-day is a vast fund of information as to the best methods of promoting health and happiness and right living and knowledge of the world's best products.

Products of actual excellence and reasonable claims truthfully presented and which have attained to world-wide acceptance through the approval of the Well-Informed of the World; not of individuals only, but of the many who have the happy faculty of selecting and obtaining the best the world affords.

One of the products of that class, of known component parts, an Ethical remedy, approved by physicians and commended by the Well-Informed of the World as a valuable and wholesome family laxative is the well-known Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna. To get its beneficial effects always buy the genuine, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., only, and for sale by all leading druggists.

SINKS AND DRAINS A FREQUENT CAUSE OF TYPHOID

Purify These and You Will Be Safe from Contagion.

DISINFECTING THE ONLY PREVENTIVE.

Borax, a Simple, Safe and Sure Method.

How to keep our homes clean, sweet and free from germ influences is a question.

While there is no occasion for alarm, it is always well to be forearmed on the theory that "An Ounce of Prevention Is Better Than a Pound of Cure," and no ounce of prevention has yet been discovered that is more simple, more direct and more effective, yet harmless to the human system, than Borax.

Borax has been known and used for generations as a purifier and preventive against epidemic influences originating from uncleanly conditions resulting from unsanitary sinks and drains, and when used as a hot solution in the proportion of two tablespoonfuls to a gallon of hot water flushed through the offending locations, removes every trace of disease germs and renders the pipes clean and wholesome.

Borax in addition to its hygienic qualities, is a household necessity, and can be used for numberless domestic purposes. It softens the water, makes linen dazzling white, will cleanse every article in the kitchen or dining room and make it bright, will prevent moths, soften and whiten the skin, remove dandruff and cleanse the scalp, and for cleansing and sterilizing baby's milk bottle and nipple has no equal.

Borax, unlike every other cleanser and disinfectant, is absolutely harmless to the system, and is safe, simple, economical, and can be purchased at any druggist or grocery. A dainty book in colors, called the "Jingle Book," will be sent free to any Mother sending name and address of her baby and tops from two one-pound cartons of "20-Mule-Team" Borax, with 5c in stamps. Address Pacific Coast Borax Co., Chicago, Ill.

The Popular Pulpit

By Henry F. Cope.

"So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."—Ps. xc., 12.

It is only natural and it is quite necessary that men should stop at times and ask, are we moving forward or drifting back, are we on an incoming or an outgoing tide? Old as the question is, it has a perennial interest for every generation. But these times of review and stocktaking always bring out the pessimism monger with his cry of the good old times and the present evil days.

Many people seem to be born with an inward persuasion of the total depravity of the whole universe; some of them are doing their best to demonstrate their beliefs by their practices. We need deliberately to free ourselves from any such paralyzing prejudice, from the notion that there is an inevitable moral gravitation of humanity toward the pit.

There are two possible views of this world: One, that it is normally wholly bad, with occasional heaven sent gleams of goodness to throw its night into greater relief; the other, that it is normally right, that wrong and sin are unnatural and that the trend of humanity is upward and heavenward.

The law of the moral world is such that neither of these views can be adopted as always absolutely true; there is no external law or force compelling us, in spite of ourselves, either to be good or to be evil. Even more sublime than the fact that the trend of mankind is forward and upward is the deeper fact that we are left ever free to choose what way life shall go.

There is another natural law in morals that must be remembered; that is, that a man goes in the direction which he is facing, he goes according to his faith. If he believes in the possibility of goodness he perseveres in its way: if he believes in the inevitability of evil he submits to its way.

We are each making our own world, each determining whether it be better or worse to-day than yesterday. There is such a thing as a world spirit, a tide in human affairs, but we are not derelicts drifting helplessly upon its onsweeping flood, or we ought not to be.

Neither must we think we can take our course in life alone. Each helps to determine other lives, by influence, by example, by that mysterious something that binds us together, so that no one can adopt the philosophy of despair and give himself to its way without helping to make it true that all are moving to darker days.

To believe that the race is doomed is to doom it. Yet many have declared the good tidings of religion in such a way as to make it seem that perdition was the greatest certainty of all. It is a good thing that man shall know that he is not perfect; no one but a perfect fool ever thought he was; but it is an evil thing that we should come to think that we have nothing but augmenting imperfection before us.

The principal danger of moral stocktaking is that we manage to pass by the things that are most worth preserving, those that are our really valuable assets, and charge against ourselves only our debits and dangers. Blindness to the good we have will work as much harm as blindness to the evil that may be.

No man was ever the worse for the discovery of good in him; every power of betterment we have gives promise of yet better things and greater power. We need not only to fight our weeds, we need to foster and cherish our flowers of virtue and love and goodness.

It will make all the difference whether you go through the days that come simply looking for disease and depravity or go looking for the things of beauty and joy. You find that for which you look. This will be a year of darkness and defeat or of light and larger living according to whether you have larger faith in the good or in the bad.

Have faith in the good in yourself; trust that good. Believe in the good in others. Let your life tell for the upward life of all because you set your face toward the heights, you believe that every good life may be lived again, that all good that has been may yet be in larger measure, that the infinite might that moves the world is the life of love and goodness.

ILL GOTTEN GAINS.

By Rev. John P. Peters, D. D.

As many as received him to them gave he power to become the sons of God.—John 1:12.

There was a great temple in Jerusalem which was still in process of reconstruction at the time when Christ was born. It was the center of the Jewish faith and nation. The traditions of the people looked back to the first temple erected on that site by Solomon and dwelt with delight on the details of its glory and its wealth; but, as is the way with such things, much suffering was built into the walls of that temple. Men were torn from their homes and families and compelled to work in gangs for so many months to complete this grand work.

On the same site Herod built a temple still more beautiful than Solomon's—Herod, the man who is execrated in Jewish and Christian story alike for his cruelty and tyranny, built a temple to God which was one of the wonders of the world. These are the things that men count great. The oppression, the cruelty, the misdeeds, the death of the innocent and the suffering of the downtrodden working folk are all forgotten in the world's thought in the benefit which the world derives from the deeds and the constructions of such men. Their temples and cathedrals, their hospitals and asylums, their schools and colleges, their endowments of research and education make them great in men's minds.

According to an old Christian tradition the veil of that temple which Herod built was rent in twain when Christ died on the cross. A new order had come in with Jesus Christ. The temple for the in-dwelling of God was man. Man as man was exalted to a new place. In him God was revealed. There was no room for the old order. No buildings, however beautiful, whose foundations rested on the sorrow and suffering of men, could contain the majesty of God or show forth God to men.

The birth of Jesus Christ meant the exaltation of humanity as such. The story of the birth is full of a mystical significance. God came appealing through the woman and an unborn child to men and women of the same blood; to men and women bound to them by the ties of a sacred religion, which, while setting them apart from other men, laid upon them a special obligation to care each for the other. He came in appeal of supreme need—a woman whose child was to be born, looking for a place to bring it forth, and no one would make place. Each was so wrapped up in his own selfishness and his own needs, each was so bound to maintain his own rights and his own privileges that none would abandon his room in the inn that God might be born there. He came unto his own and his own knew him not.

The inn is the life of man in which the love of God must be born, and that love of God comes to the life of each man, appealing for room to be born. It asks man to give up the room which self habits in his life, that the mother of God may come in; for love can be born only where self maketh place.

Self hath many things to say, many reasons why it cannot make place, and he who listeneth to the voice of self can never know God, because he maketh no room in his life for the Son of God. But he who trusteth self out altogether, who counteth nothing in comparison with the need of another, to him is God revealed and to him power is given to become the Son of God. Let self go out and God come in, then shall you have power to become a son of God.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't be a hypocrite. A holy tone does not make a heavenly tune.

Don't imagine that you have made certain your salvation. There can be no salvation so long as there is self-satisfaction.

Don't labor for the reward that may come as compensation for effort. It's an empty life that thinks only of the pay envelope.

Don't put too much faith in the man who speaks only pleasant words. It takes something more than pious phrases to keep the heart from starvation.

Don't try to persuade men to be Christians by telling them what will happen to them if they don't. It's a poor way to bring men to heaven by shaking them over hell.

HYMNS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

A Great Friend.

O, thou great friend to all the sons of men,
Who once appeared in humblest guise below,
Sin to rebuke, to break the captive's chain,
And call thy brethren forth from want and woe!

We look to thee; thy truth is still the light
Which guides the nations, groping on their way,
Stumbling and falling in disastrous night,
Yet hoping ever for the perfect day.

Yes, thou art still the life; thou art the way
The holiest know—light, life, and way of heaven;
And they who dearest hope, and deepest pray,
Toil by the light, life, way, which thou hast given.

The Star Mira.

For the greatest part of the time the variable Mira, which has been known to astronomers for 300 years, is altogether unnoticeable and indeed invisible, except with telescopes. It once disappeared entirely for a period of four years, but afterward attained extraordinary splendor, only to fade again to invisibility. It is a sun of great size, brighter than our sun when it shines at its brightest, but some trouble, some solar disease, seems to be sapping its vitality, and it resembles a patient almost at the last gasp. Once in about 331 days—but the period is irregular—it has a sudden accession of energy and flares up for a little while with several hundredfold brilliancy only to sink back into a dull red point that nearly escapes the ken of the telescope. One interesting explanation that has been suggested is that the surface of Mira periodically bursts into a vast flame of burning hydrogen, so great and powerful that it is visible across millions of millions of miles of space. It is a star for the imagination of a Dante, yet there is reason to believe that the time is coming when every star in the sky, not excepting the sun, will have to confront a similar struggle for existence, just as every mortal being must some time see death.—Garrett P. Serviss, in New York American.

It Didn't Come Natural.

Thomas W. Lawson, Boston's noted financier, was talking to a reporter about a notorious New York capitalist.

"Well," said Mr. Lawson, "I have heard that man tell the truth once or twice. He can tell the truth, I admit, but it doesn't come natural to him. He reminds me of the Russian moujik who sat one day in the ante-room of the military commissioner of his town. There was an anxious frown on his face. A friend approached and said:

"'What is the matter, Piotr?'

"'I am worried,' Piotr answered, 'about my son. I don't know what to say when the commissioner asks me about his age. You see, if I make him out younger than he is, he will be sent back to school; and if I make him out older, they'll stick him in the army. What the deuce am I to do?'

"'How would it do,' said the friend, thoughtfully, 'if you told the commissioner his exact age?'

"Piotr slapped his leg and laughed delightedly.

"'The very thing!' he cried. 'I never thought of that!'"

Any 12 Year Old Girl

Can make those delicious Lemon, Chocolate and Custard pies as well as the more experienced cook if she uses "OUR-PIE" preparation, which is now sold by nearly all grocers at 10 cents per package. Just the proper ingredients in each package.

Aeronaughtyness.

"O, Mr. Simmons," gushed one of the fair guests, "didn't it seem frightful to you to be away up in the air, going farther and farther from the earth, as if you were an independent body in space?"

"Why, no, Mrs. Jymes," said the aeronaut; "it wasn't so awfully terrifying. In a balloon you don't seem to be going up. The earth appears to be going away from you, don't you know, while you are standing still."

"But to see the horizon receding away from you——"

"Pardon me, Mrs. Jymes, but the horizon doesn't seem to recede. It seems to rise up, like the rim of a great soup bowl, and the earth has a concave appearance."

"Looks like a soup bowl? How odd! Still, doesn't it excite one's deepest emotions, Mr. Simmons?"

"Well, you can't help thinking that if anything should happen to the balloon you'd mighty soon be in the soup."

Doing It Well.

Miss Wentworth was first attracted to the man as he sat on the park bench by a certain happy relaxation of his body.

He sat at ease, with a primitive poise and naturalness rarely seen in this age of unrest. Yet he was poorly clad, in well-washed overalls of a dim blue, and looked like a laborer.

After she had passed him, on her daily walk through the park, many times, she decided that he was a gardener's helper, and determined to find out.

"I suppose you are engaged in the park?" she hazarded.

"No, I ain't," he replied, placidly. "I'm doin' nothin'."

WORK WEAKENS THE KIDNEYS.

The Experience of Mr. Woods Is the Experience of Thousands of Others.

Bernard P. Woods, of Jackson street, Lonaconing, Md., says: "Hard work and heavy lifting weakened my kidneys. I was tired every morning and my limbs stiff and sore. Dizzy spells and headaches were frequent, and the kidney secretions much disordered. This continued for fifteen years and until I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. Then I improved steadily until cured, and naturally, I recommend them strongly."

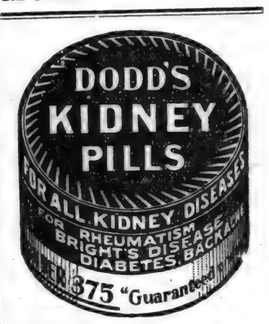
An Appropriate Hymn.

The worshipers in a certain chapel had some trouble to keep their faces straight a short time ago.

During the service some commotion was caused by a gentleman who accidentally ignited a box of wax matches in his pocket and was trying to put them out, while his alarmed neighbors struggled equally hard to help him.

The minister, being shortsighted, could not make out the reason of the disturbance, and, thinking to diplomatically cover the incident, he innocently said:

"Brethren, there is a little noise going on. Until it is over let us sing 'Sometimes a Light Surprises.'"—London Chronicle.



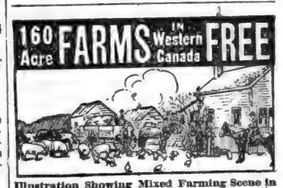


Illustration Showing Mixed Farming Scene in WESTERN CANADA

Some of the choicest lands for grain growing, stock raising and mixed farming in the new districts of Saskatchewan and Alberta have recently been Opened for Settlement under the

Revised Homestead Regulations

Entry may now be made by proxy (on certain conditions), by the father, mother, son, daughter, brother or sister of an intending homesteader. Thousands of homesteads of 160 acres each are thus now easily obtainable in these great grain-growing, stock-raising and mixed farming sections.

There you will find healthful climate, good neighbors, churches for family worship, schools for your children, good laws, splendid crops, and railroads convenient to market.

Entry fee in each case is $10.00. For pamphlet, "Last Best West," particulars as to rates, routes, best time to go and where to locate, apply to W. D. Scott, Superintendent of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or W. H. Rogers, 3d Floor Traction Terminal Building, Indianapolis, Ind., and H. M. This woman says that sick women should not fail to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as she did.

Mrs. A. Gregory, of 2355 Lawrence St., Denver, Col., writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"I was practically an invalid for six years, on account of female troubles. I underwent an operation by the doctor's advice, but in a few months I was worse than before. A friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it restored me to perfect health, such as I have not enjoyed in many years. Any woman suffering as I did with backache, bearing-down pains, and periodic pains, should not fail to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness or nervous prostration. Why don't you try it?

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

The Handy Doctor in Your Vest Pocket

When carried in your vest pocket it means Health-Insurance.

It contains Six Candy Tablets of pleasant taste, almost as pleasant as Chocolate.

Each tablet is a working dose of Cascarets, which acts like Exercise on the Bowels and Liver.

It will not purge, sicken, nor upset the stomach.

Because it is not a "Bile-driver," like Salts, Sodium, Calomel, Jalap, Senna, nor Aperient Waters.

Neither is it like Castor Oil, Glycerine, or other Oily Laxatives that simply lubricate the intestines for transit of the food stopped up in them at that particular time.

The chief cause of Constipation and Indigestion is a weakness of the Muscles that contract the Intestines and Bowels.

Cascarets are practically to the Bowel Muscles what a Massage and Cold Bath are to the Athletic Muscles.

They stimulate the Bowel Muscles to contract, expand, and squeeze the Digestive Juices out of food eaten.

They don't help the Bowels and Liver in such a way as to make them lean upon similar assistance for the future.

This is why, with Cascarets, the dose may be lessened each succeeding time instead of increased, as it must be with all other Cathartics and Laxatives.

Cascarets act like exercise.

If carried in your vest pocket, (or carried in My Lady's Purse,) and eaten just when you suspect you need one, you will never know a sick day from the ordinary ills of life.

Because these ills begin in the Bowels, and pave the way for all other diseases.

"Vest Pocket" box 10 cents. 727

Be sure you get the genuine, made only by the Sterling Remedy Company, and never sold in bulk. Every tablet stamped "CCC."

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Ed. Whipple, of Columbia City, has caught a white squirrel in the woods near that city.

Rev. W. W. Denham, pastor of the First Christian church at Elkhart, has tendered hs resignation to take effect April 1. The pastor is considering calls from a number of Illinois cities.

An Italian named Louis Jalsi, aged 31, was instantly killed by being struck by a Big Four railway gravel train, at Perth. The man had been working on the Big Four construction gang at that place.

Vera Miller, 5 years old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Perry B. Miller, living southwest of Elkhart, was frightfully scalded when she overturned a pot of boiling coffee. It is believed the child will recover.

Phil Lochman, of Wabash, poured coal oil into a base burner coal stove to help the fire along. He was painfully burned about the head and face in the explosion which followed, but will recover.

Mrs. Maggie Cox, wife of the Rev. Sampson Cox, of Kyana, and a sister-in-law of Congressman William E. Cox, is dead at her home as a result of injuries she received some days ago from falling into a cellar.

A blanket remonstrance has just been filed at Wabash which will make Lagro a dry town when the licenses of the two saloons now there expire. There is a big majority of signatures on the remonstrances.

Kempt Patterson, unmarried, aged 24, an electrician employed by the United Telephone Company, was electrocuted at Marion by grasping telephone wires that had become crossed with an electric light wire.

Clarence Snider, who disappeared from his home in Marietta quite suddenly, has returned. He is the owner of the general merchandise store at that place and, on his arrival home, he sold the establishment to Steve Brockman.

Alleging that her husband, since he has been trying to invent a gasoline plow, is more irritable and cruel than usual, Mrs. Malinda Culp has brought suit at Goshen for divorce from Henry Culp. The husband is a member of the undertaking firm of Culp & Son.

The Farmers' Mutual Aid Association of Elkhart County has been in existence thirty-seven years and in that time has paid fire losses to its members aggregating $286,433.58. It is an organization of farmers in a fire insurance company, and the annual meeting just held at Goshen shows the company in an excellent condition.

Sarah Hoel, of Daleville, 18 years old, died from the effects of burns received while lighting a natural gas jet in her room. Her sleeve caught fire and the blaze communicated to her waist. She ran across the street to a neighbor's home, where the blaze was put out, but not until the clothing on the upper part of her body was burned off.

While on his way home at a late hour one night recently, Harper Porter, a well-known man of Richmond, was struck by lightning. He was carrying an umbrella, and the lightning ran down the handle, along one arm and then down his body, burning his clothes and shoes off. He was rendered unconscious and was severely burned, but will recover.

While kneeling in St. Joseph's Catholic church during mass at South Bend two women picked the pocket of Miss Margaret Joyce, sister of former Councilman Patrick Joyce, a well-known merchant. Miss Joyce caught the women in the act, and all three started on a run out of the church, and continued for a mile, when Miss Joyce's strength failed her, and she abandoned the chase. A fine purse, some jewels and $25 cash are missing.

Among the several Richmond couples who have reached their golden wedding anniversary are Mr. and Mrs. Frank Knollman, who have just celebrated this event by entertaining a large company of relatives and friends. The Knollmans have long been identified with the affairs of Richmond and few, if any, of the German residents are better known. One of the interesting features of the wedding anniversary was the display of the old tile hat which Mr. Knollman wore on his wedding day.

Allen T. Johns, 26 years old, of Pt. Fulton, a suburb of Jeffersonville, died at the home of his father, Edward Johns, of hydrophobia. He was bitten by a dog six weeks ago, and the slight wound apparently healed. Symptoms of hydrophobia appeared several days ago, and he was advised to go to the Pasteur Institute, Chicago, for treatment. He reached the institute but after a diagnosis the physicians reported that the case had been advanced to a point where no relief could be afforded.

Clay Ham, aged 66 years, fell dead in his home at Liberty of heart failure. He was the owner and manager of the opera house there, and an inventor.

A girl baby weighing but four pounds and possessing a full set of teeth was born at Evansville to the wife of Elve Crow. The child seems in perfect health.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Choats, two miles north of Jasonville, celebrated their fiftieth anniversary of their marriage at their home. More than 100 relatives and friends were present.

Mrs. Chas. Thompson, aged 70, was killed by an engine at an E. & T. H. crossing at Terre Haute. Her dog, in great distress, guarded the body and fought off those who would remove it.

John Small, of Terre Haute, struck by a club wielded by Joseph Logue, car inspector, the blow fracturing his skull, died of his injury. He was struck for starting trouble on an interurban car.

Former residents of Wabash County who have recently located in Beckham County, Oklahoma, have named the new county seat town there Sayre, in honor of Hon. Warren G. Sayre, of Wabash.

Because he distrusted banks, Henry Teel, of South Bend, had $982 in currency secreted in the sideboard at his home. There was an explosion when an attempt was made to kindle the kitchen fire with coal oil, and Teel's money went up in smoke in the blaze which followed.

The State Bank of Waveland, capital $25,000, has opened for business. This succeeds the Bank of Weveland, a private institution founded in 1882 by F. N. Johnson, T. L. Hanna and S. M. Durham. Mr. Johnson had just completed a term as county treasurer. This bank was the first in the county outside Crawfordsville.

After an absence of twenty-seven years Garry Rabb, a former resident of Covington, has returned. He is a brother of Charles Rabb, police chief, and Mrs. Grace Wolfe. For the last twelve years nothing had been heard from him, and it was supposed he was dead. During the greater part of his absence he lived in Minnesota.

Robert and Edward Hosinski, eight and six years old, respectively, disappeared from the front porch of their home in South Bend while playing, and have not since been seen. They are children of John Hosinski, a Polish merchant, and noted for their beauty. It is feared they have been kidnapped and are being held for a ransom.

Angered at his parents, Homer Lilves, of Wabash, 16 years old, put a shotgun on his shoulders and left home, as his parents thought, to hunt. He failed to return and for one day and night 300 neighbors and friends searched, expecting to find his dead body. Later came word that he had been seen in Peru, and that he was heading west. The search was promptly abandoned.

Mrs. Marie Wood, of Indianapolis, fell over a banister in the rear of her home and died later at the City Hospital. She fell thirty feet and her skull was crushed. Mrs. Wood was walking along the banister taking dry clothes from a line, when she became overbalanced and fell headlong to the cement courtyard below. When picked up she was unconscious. She remained in this state until she died about midnight at the City Hospital.

David W. Landis, who served in the War of the Rebellion, and who died a few days ago at Clay City, made a forecast ten days in advance of the time that he would pass away, the fulfillment of the prophecy taking place at 6:30 p. m. Of the ten sons and daughters of his father's family, he was the second one to die, an older brother passing away in his youth, more than half a century ago. He also died on New Year's day. Of the numerous family of children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, as many as fourteen were born in the month of December.

David Gardner, of New Albany, has built himself a room ten feet square in the branches of a huge cottonwood tree, a short distance below the city on the banks of the Ohio river. A stairway leads from the ground upward. Gardner formerly lived at the foot of Bank street, but he was forced to move so often because of high water that he finally decided to build him a permanent home above high water mark. Gardner spends more time, either in a skiff or in the water, than he does on dry land. He is an expert swimmer, and the coldest weather does not deter him from a daily plunge into the icy water, swimming out to the middle of the river and back again. He spends most of his time fishing, and he attributes his hardy constitution to the outdoor life he has led.

REV. TROUTMAN SENDS BEST WISHES FOR PE-RU-NA

Rev. George A. E. Troutman, Mt. Washington, Mo., Writes,

"My Wife and I Are Strong Believers in Pe-ru-na."

Catarrh and La Grippe.

Rev. Geo. A. E. Troutman, Mt. Washington, Mo., writes: "My wife and I are strong believers in Peruna.

I was cured of a bad case of catarrh when nothing else that I tried had any effect. My wife was cured from a severe case of la grippe, and we feel that the least we can do is to gratefully acknowledge the merit of Peruna.

"My wife joins me in sending best wishes for your success."

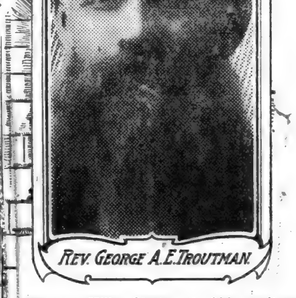
Throat Trouble.

Rev. H. W. Tate, 920 Lincoln Avenue, Walnut Hills, Cincinnati, Ohio, writes: "For several years I have been troubled with a peculiar spasmodic affection of the throat. It would seize me suddenly and for a few minutes I would be unable to speak audibly, and my breath would be greatly interfered with. I would be obliged to gasp for breath.

"I finally concluded that it was some catarrhal affection which probably excited the spasm. It interfered with my vocation as a preacher, attacking me occasionally in the pulpit.

"I had heard so much about Peruna as a catarrh remedy that I determined to try it. After taking two bottles, my trouble has disappeared. I feel sure that Peruna has greatly benefited me."

Rev. P. E. Swanstrom, Swedish Baptist Pastor, Box 228, Grantsburg, Wis., writes that from the use of Peruna he is perfectly well, entirely cured of chronic diarrhœa and catarrh.



REV. GEORGE A. E. TROUTMAN.

Peruna in Tablet Form.

For two years Dr. Hartman and his assistants have incessantly labored to create Peruna in tablet form, and their strenuous labors have just been crowned with success. People who object to liquid medicines can now secure Peruna Tablets, which represent the medicinal ingredients of Peruna. Each tablet is equivalent to one average dose of Peruna.

A Surprise.

On last Saturday evening, neighbors and friends of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Hull assembled themselves together and went to their home and gave Joe a complete surprise. The gentlemen wore masks and a lively time was on. Joe admitted the treats were on him as he could not tell a single one. The crowd of merry makers had not forgotten the necessaries of life so they had plenty of oysters along. Mr. Hull's good wife had prepared a fine lunch, and at 10 o'clock an elaborate supper was served in the dining room. At a late hour all departed feeling that it had been an evening well spent together and one not soon forgotten. Those present with their families were: Messers Alvin Reasoner Frank Sechler, H. M. Widney, Frank Curie, M. D. Engle, Fred Jenkins, Roy Wade, Ira Bone, Archie Squires, Sam Mumaw, A. Rhinehart, C. H. Hull, Hollis Jackson and John Engle.

Then and Now.

Prices sixty years ago:

"Eggs, six cents a dozen; beef, two and one-half cents a pound; butter, ten cents a pound." This is an extract taken from the market report in the Kosciusko Republican of March 16, 1848. A few other quotations are: White beans, sixty-two cents a bushel; cheese, six cents a pound; corn, eighteen cents a bushel; red deer skins two and one-half cents a pound; rye, twenty-five cents a bushel. The Cincinnati market of the same date quotes wheat at $1 a bushel and the same cereal was bringing eighty cents a bushel in the Fort Wayne market at the same time. Oats were quoted on the Fort Wayne market at sixteen cents a bushel.—Warsaw Times.

METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH.

Preaching next Sunday at St. Joe at 10:15 a. m. Fairview at 7 p. m. Not withstanding the inclement weather the quarterly meeting was a success. The earnest sermons of Pres. Barclay were enjoyed by the people. The finances were in good shape. Everything was done in a beautiful Christian Spirit.

Robbins Case Dismissed.

The old criminal cases against Edward L. Robbins and Albert Robbins which have been pending on the court docket of Allen county for two years were dismissed by Judge O'Rourke Friday afternoon on a motion made by the Prosecuting Attorney Thomas of Allen county. It will be remembered that when the cases were filed in the DeKalb circuit court against the three Robbins a change of venue was granted and they were sent to Allen and Whitley county for trial. Bert was tried in Whitley county and acquited while Edward was convicted in the Allen circuit court. Albert Robbins was also tried in Whitley county and fined. The other cases against them were not pushed and were therefore stricken from the dockets of the Allen court.—Courier.

Mortuary Record.

Mary Barbara, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Baltz, was born at Orangeville, DeKalb Co., Indiana, March 23rd. 1870 and departed this life at Mary Thompson Hospital, Chicago, Ill., January 20th. 1908, aged thirty-seven years nine months and twenty-seven days. When a year old she moved with her parents to a farm near Hurshtown, Allen Co., Indiana, where they resided until 1882 when they moved to Spencerville. Here she became acquainted with S. H. Maurer to whom she was united in marriage on Dec. 31st, 1891, Rev. J. S. Nelson performing the ceremony.

The affliction which was indirectly the cause of her death, was of long duration, at times the pain would be very severe and almost unbearable. She could suffer and endure, however, and never complain, such was her indomitable courage. Indeed, her outward expressions would hardly credit the belief she was so ill, She was the "Cloud" to herself—we saw but the "Silver Lining." With a philosophical view she looked at death, the pale boatman, to her had no terrors. The love and kindly ministries of relatives and friends and the best of medical science that could be procured by her husband, could not baffle death. To her, if it was the will of the Supreme Physician she should live, it was WELL if otherwise, it was WELL. To her, we have grounded reasons for believing death was a release, a victory.

That she would accept the sting of death rather than the sting of this mortal flesh, that she would rather be in the presence of a merciful Christ "where pain shall be no more" is self-evident to her nearest relatives and and husband, for she had chosen her funeral songs-songs she said "would not make sadness sadder." She requested that the same pall-bearers, who bore a late beloved aunt to a final resting place should bear her form also. And realizing that her husband had never spared time nor money that she might be well again, she requested that her funeral might be as inexpensive as possible. All this is indicative to us that all she expected that would be returned to the home of a sad and faithful husband, would be a lifeless and pain-racked body and that her soul which pain cannot destroy, would take its silent flight to the home of a merciful God.

When a mere infant she was baptized, Rev. J. G. Kissell administering. On Dec. 25th, 1884 under pastorate of Rev. John F. Winter, she united with the German Reformed Church, a few miles southeast of this place. On April 10th, 1887, she transferred her membership to the Evangelical Lutheran church of this place, under the pastorate of Rev. J. S. Nelson, where she retained her membership until after her marriage, when she wished to enjoy a church home with her husband and likewise she joined the Hopewell U. B. church, near their former home. Upon removing with her husband to Spencerville in 1904, she, with her husband joined the Evangelical Lutheran church under the pastorate of Rev. W. M. Habey, where she remained a faithful member until death.

She leaves a husband, father, mother, two sisters, a brother and many friends and relatives to mourn her departure.

The text was:-

Jeremiah 15: 9

"Her sun is gone down while it is yet day."

The funeral services were held at the Lutheran church of Spencerville, on Jan. 24, by her pastor, Rev. F. A. Dressel, assisted by Rev. F. W. Erick and Rev. Sweeney. Interment was made in Spencerville cemetery.

Mesdames E. D. Hendricks and John Wineland came near being caught by a Wabash train, one day last week, at the Wolff crossing. By reports it was a narrow escape.

Ora Earl, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. John Sechler, was born Jan. 1, 1908, and departed this life Jan. 22. Funeral services were held at the home Jan. 25, by Rev. F. A. Dressel. Interment at Riverside cemetery.

Some time during last Friday some one gained an entrance to the home of Mr. Sipe and succeeded in breaking a lock off the door upstairs and stole his watch. Mr. Sipe says that not more than two weeks ago his razor was taken. No one was seen about the place and of course no one can be suspected, but it looks rather curious.

The finest Coffee Substitute ever made, has recently been produced by Dr. Shoop of Racine, Wis. You don't have to boil it twenty or thirty minutes. "Made in a minute" says the doctor "Health Coffee" is really the closest coffee imitation ever yet produced. Not a grain of real coffee in it either. Health Coffee imitation is made from pure toasted cereals or grains, with malt, nuts, etc. Really it would fool an expert—were he to unknowingly drink it for Coffee. Sol Barney.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

All Sides and Conditions of Things are Shown. Nothing Overlooked to make it Complete.

A Bold Robbery Planned.

An exploding bomb wrecked the front of an Italian bank building on Elizabeth street, New York City, exposing $40,000 in silver and gold which the bankers, Pasquale A. Pati & Son, had piled in the windows as proof of their ability to pay depositors on demand. The junior partner, Salvatore Pati, who was on guard inside, was cut by the glass that crashed in upon him, but stuck to his charge and soon had the money stored away in the vaults. The bomb throwers, who were not seen by the banker, were quickly lost in the crowd. If robbery was the objective the perpetrators, it is believed, were amateurs who lost courage at the critical moment when the tempting treasure was within arm's reach from the street.

Hung Up by Thumbs and Whipped.

A special from Brookfield, Mo., says: Information was received here that on last Friday night Dr. W. E. Carter, a veterinary surgeon, of Meadville, was waylaid by whitecaps, strung up by the thumbs and thrashed on the bare back until he was exhausted, in an effort to wring from him a confession of wife beating and petty theft. He was called eleven miles into the country ostensibly to treat a sick animal and was waylaid on the trip. After the punishment the masked assailants commanded him to leave the country within thirty days. He denies the charges emphatically and professes a determination not to leave.

Four Firemen Killed in Baltimore.

Fire broke out in the upper part of the building occupied by the firm of J. Regester & Sons, Holliday and Saratoga streets, Baltimore, Md. The first alarm was followed by a general one, calling out all the apparatus in the city. Then, fanned by a high wind from the northwest, the fire spread rapidly and in an incredibly short time the north wall of the building fell. Saratoga street being very narrow, four firemen were killed and fifteen injured, among them George Horton, chief of the fire department. While the damage cannot be estimated, it is believed to be the heaviest fire loss since the great fire of 1904.

Woman Kills Woman in Chicago.

Mrs. Mary Maloney, 30 years old, was shot and fatally wounded in Chicago by Mrs. Grace Garswick, of 309 West Jackson boulevard. After shooting Mrs. Maloney, Mrs. Garswick ran and was not captured until after she had been pursued for a mile. The two women quarreled over a charge of stealing twenty-five cents brought by Mrs. Garswick against the 12-year-old son of Mrs. Maloney. Later Mrs. Garswick returned to the house and when Mrs. Maloney opened the door in response to her ring, she shot Mrs. Maloney through the abdomen.

Darrow Operated On; Gains.

Clarence Darrow, who has been under treatment in Los Angeles, Cal., since his breakdown while chief counsel in the Haywood and Pettibone trials at Boise, Idaho, was operated upon at the California Hospital by Dr. H. Bert Ellis. Mr. Darrow recovered from the effects of the anaesthetic. The result of the operation cannot be determined for two or three days.

Big Mills Resume Work.

There is much rejoicing among the residents of the Falls of Schuylkill, in the northwestern part of Philadelphia, Pa., over announcement of a complete resumption of work at the carpet mills of John and James Dobson. Nearly 3,000 persons who have been out of employment or on part time for some months are affected.

Valet Commits Suicide.

George Canty, valet to William Faversham, and who also acted minor parts in the play in which his employer is appearing in Chicago, committed suicide by inhaling gas. No motive for the act could be learned by the police.

BATTLE ROYAL IN THE CHICAGO CONVENTION

Republican National Gathering Alone Will Determine Who Candidate Is to Be.

GREAT 1908 CAMPAIGN NOW ON.

In the Democratic Field, Washington Political Observers Think Bryan Is a Certainty.

Washington correspondence:

THIS city will be the center of the great political campaign which will rage from California to Maine until the ballots of next November determine the people's choice for President. From now on until the successor of Mr. Roosevelt is chosen there will not be an instant's intermission in the din of political battle.

Secretary Taft stands sharply in the limelight and his friends are redoubling their efforts in his behalf. The fact that he is the candidate of the administration is sure to have the effect of keeping Washington on the jump to watch every move. Senators Foraker and Knox and Secretary Cortelyou, also located in Washington, will help to keep the political pot furiously boiling in the capital. New York will get the height of its excitement from the fact that Gov. Hughes seems destined to be a factor of no small moment in the line-up of the contestants in Chicago. Vice President Fairbanks and Speaker Cannon, presiding officers respectively of the Senate and House, must inevitably keep these bodies embroiled in the stress growing out of their candidacy, and their home States of Indiana and Illinois are likely to feel the heat.

Between these men, Taft, Knox, Hughes, Foraker, Fairbanks and Cannon, the convention at Chicago is regarded an open chance. All are powerfully backed, all will push their campaigns with that energy for which the American politician is famous. For them will be expended limitless eloquence, and in their interest the quiet work, which appears little on the surface, but which means so much in the final result, will keep forces of trained men busy from now on until the nomination is made.

For the first time in twenty years the Republican convention will see a real battle. The gathering that nominated Benjamin Harrison in 1888 was an open fight much similar to the one that promises for this year. In 1892 the renomination of Harrison was a foregone conclusion; in 1896 the movement against free silver had fixed on McKinley in advance of the convention as the man to lead the fight; and in 1900 not a shadow of opposition developed against his renomination. Similarly Roosevelt outranked in popularity every name suggested for the Republican nomination. But this year the quadrennial upheaval will be made still more chaotic by the sharpness of the Republican battle.

Democratic Fight Different.

The Democratic fight is a little different. There is no mixed field with the hopes even. It is everybody against Bryan. In opposition to the Nebraskan will be welded all the forces that contend that his two defeats for the place eliminate him, but though Judge Gray, Gov. Johnson of Minnesota, Chanler of New York, and Hoke Smith have been tentatively mentioned, there is no evidence of any boom powerful enough to prevail against the magnetic Nebraskan's undoubted strength in his party.

Six months of contention must take place before the two parties place their standard bearers in the field, the Republicans at Chicago, the Democrats at Denver. Meantime the nation's business will be swayed and moved by every new boom, by every straw, by every indication. Capital, sensitive above all things of which man has knowledge, will rejoice or tremble as this man or that seems to gain the ascendancy, and gigantic projects will hang fire pending the nominations.

And when the men are in the field, far from helping the situation, a new and even worse upheaval will take place. Frenzied stump speakers will tramp up and down the country, painting in horrible phrase the terrific experiences that confront the nation in the doleful event of the success of the opposition party. Platforms will be torn to pieces in this delirium of exhortation; men's lives, aims and characters riddled; the constitution of the country will be both invoked and condemned; the giants of business will on the one hand be extolled, on the other savagely condemned. And every speech, every mass meeting, each attack, will further send new tremors up and down the spinal cord of business.

The campaign will last four months, and in that time both parties will call on the biggest guns they have; the star speakers will be drafted to present the opposing arguments. As a forensic struggle the fight is bound to be more than ordinarily interesting. Each side has orators of the first rank, veterans who understand the art of stirring audiences.

Leading the Republicans may be Roosevelt himself. For him to speak in a campaign while holding the office of President would be in violation of precedent, of course, but the chief apostle of the strenuous life has never bothered much about slavish deference to custom, and as his policies are likely to be under fire throughout the campaign it is entirely possible that he may be wrought up to one of his characteristically blunt speeches.

For Democracy Bryan is bound to be the big figure, whether he is the candidate or not. No man matches him in the popular kind of eloquence, and his fine voice, handsome face and magnetic bearing give him a phenomenal power to sway audiences. If Bryan is the nominee it is probable that the country will be stirred by another speechmaking tour similar to the memorable one of 1896.

And after the turmoil has subsided, and business, collecting its scattered wits, gets together at the beginning of 1909 to try to make up the ground lost in a wasted year there will be new advocates for a bill introduced into Congress recently by the venerable Senator Cullom of Illinois, which provides for an amendment to the constitution making the term of the President six years, limiting each incumbent to one term, and thus decreasing 50 per cent the recurrence of the year of politics.

A Toad 1000 Years Old.

Director Hornaday of the New York Zoological Park has placed upon exhibition a toad which he believes to be not less than 1,000 years old, it having been found several months ago in a pocket of a block of limestonie in a silver mine at Butte, Mont., 500 feet below the surface of the mountain. When found the toad appeared to be dead, but upon instructions from the operator, who knew Mr. Hornaday, it was placed in a glass jar, sealed up and sent to New York. There an inspection revealed the truth that it moved sluggishly, although the eyes had long been useless and it had neither eaten nor drunk for centuries. This appears to prove the old theory that toads can live untold years in a state of suspended animation. The director believes that if he should try to feed the creature it would certainly die. It is quite plump and a perfectly formed, medium-sized toad of the spadefoot variety.

*The electoral vote of the Breckinridge-Lane ticket of the southern Democrats; the Douglas-Johnson ticket of the northern Democrats received 12.

WORK OF CONGRESS

The Senate calendar was cleared of nearly every bill upon it Thursday, and the bill to revise the criminal laws of the United States was taken up and discussed until adjournment. A complete change of front was exhibited by the majority in the House of Representatives in the consideration of the bill to codify and revise the penal laws of the United States. The pacific spirit displayed by the committee on revision of laws, toward the close of Wednesday's session, when it appeared as though the several amendments strengthening certain provisions of the bill regarding corruption in the appointment of persons to public offices would be adopted, vanished, and instead every inch of ground was fought over to keep amendments out of the bill. When adjournment was taken only six additional pages had been disposed of and but one or two verbal amendments by the committee had been inserted.

The Senate was not in session Friday. After passing a large number of pension bills the House at 1:25 p. m. adjourned until Monday. The penal code bill was not taken up.

The bill revising the criminal laws of the United States was taken up as unfinished business in the Senate Monday, and its discussion occupied the greater part of the session. A letter was received from Secretary Cortelyou explaining his delay in giving the financial figures which had been asked for. Unrestrained opportunity to express views on the immigration question was afforded members of the House by the decision, soon after convening, to take up and consider a bill appropriating $250,000 for an immigration station in Philadelphia, and so many took advantage of it that the code of laws bill, which the managers of the House had planned to take up, was also sidetracked for the day. The entire session was devoted to a consideration of the bill, which was passed.

The Senate Tuesday discussed the propriety of authorizing one of its committees to investigate the circumstances connected with the issuance of an injunction in the case of the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company versus John Mitchell, by Judge Alston G. Dayton of the United States Circuit Court of the northern district of West Virginia. Senator Culberson asked to have a resolution for that purpose adopted, and Senator Hale thought it should not harass judges in their decisions, and he did not favor such a resolution unless there was considerable ground for believing that a judge had exceeded his authority. Considerable time was spent in considering the bill to revise the criminal code. At the close of a day of excitement in the House of Representatives an amendment was added to the penal code bill making it a criminal offense for any officer or employe of the government to give out advance information regarding any crop statistics authorized by law to be prepared. The original amendment was by Mr. Barleson of Texas, who made a strong plea for its passage, but a substitute by Mr. Sherley of Kentucky, with a brief addition by Mr. Olmsted of Pennsylvania, was accepted. Earlier in the day interest attached to a tilt between Mr. Daiziel of Pennsylvania and Mr. Randell of Texas over the latter's amendments prohibiting Senators or members from being employed by public service corporations. The climax of the debate came when Mr. Clark of Missouri announced, amid thunderous Democratic applause, that William J. Bryan would be nominated at the Denver convention, while Mr. Boutell of Illinois aroused the members on his side to a high pitch of enthusiasm by stating that Speaker Cannon would be the Republican nominee.

The Senate spent over an hour Wednesday in discussing a resolution offered by Senator Hansbrough of North Dakota directing the Department of Commerce and Labor to suspend its investigation into the affairs of the International Harvester Company, which was ordered by a resolution over a year ago. During this discussion Senator Hansbrough declared that the "harvester trust" is attempting to control the selection of delegates to the next Republican national convention and is especially plotting to defeat him for re-election to the Senate. The resolution finally was referred to a committee. The criminal code bill was again considered for over two hours. Rapid progress was made in the House of Representatives in the consideration of the bill to codify and revise the penal laws of the United States. The only amendment of any importance which got through was one by Ollie James of Kentucky, making it a criminal offense, under heavy penalty, to falsify government crop statistics, the object of the amendment being to protect the cotton and tobacco growers from speculators. Over fifty pages of the bill were disposed of. Except for a political speech by Mr. Kimball of Kentucky, the proceedings were monotonous and at no time were a hundred members in their seats.

NATIONAL CAPITAL NOTES.

A free art bill was introduced in the House by Mr. Burton of Ohio. It was referred to the committee on ways and means.

Representative Mann of Chicago introduced a bill permitting railroads to give free transportation to officials and employes of other lines.

A Wonderful Record.

Many so-called "specifics" and "cures" for Rheumatism have already been brought before the public; but when Rheumatism, Neuralgia and kindred diseases have become chronic and threaten serious results, you may rest assured that they will help but very little, if any. Although not recommended as "infallible," the peculiar qualities of St. Jacobs Oil especially adapt it to those cases which may be termed "chronic," and which have previously withstood all known "specifics," as well as the prescriptions of the best physicians.

To Aim Straight Is Human.

Anthropologists have remarked that taking aim is a human characteristic that even the anthropoid apes cannot be said to share. Apes and monkeys frequently thrown nuts and sticks, sometimes with unpleasant consequences to others, but they show little or no ability to take accurate aim. The baboon is said to excel somewhat in this respect, but still it would never pass for a marksman. Accuracy of eye and the judgment of direction and distance that are involved in real aiming have been developed only by man and are among the tokens of his intellectual superiority.—St. Louis Republic.

WORN OUT WOMEN

Will Find Encouragement in Mrs. Merritt's Advice.

Mrs. W. L. Merritt, 207 S. First Ave., Anoka, Minn., says: "Last winter I began to suffer with my kidneys. I had pains in my back and hips and felt all worn out. Dizzy spells bothered me and the kidney secretions were irregular. The first box of Doan's Kidney Pills brought decided relief. I am sure they would do the same for any other woman suffering as I did."

Our Rich Uncle.

The President calls attention to the significant fact that in 1893, when the panic began, we had but $161,000,000 in gold in the government treasury, while we now have $904,000,000. Ten years ago the circulation per capita was $23.23, now it is $33.23. We had hard times then because the country was poor; now the country is rich. The United States' total stock of gold is about $1,600,000,000. There is no other government on earth that can approch this figure. Opulent Germany and prosperous France fall far behind; England is poverty stricken by comparison; Austria-Hungary has in her banks a beggarly $236,000,000.

Uncle Sam's business is thriving. Every Saturday night he locks up a comfortable profit in the safe. The money is getting to be a nuisance. If he wished, he could pay off almost the whole interest-bearing debt with yellow chunks.

We do not always get the best use of our prosperous relative's money. Our currency system was made when the wolf was howling about the front door and the old man had nothing but car fare; it gets embarrassed at the sight of real money. But the capitalists will have to hoard very hard and the grafters will have to steal industriously and the laborers must loaf a long time before they can bring about a real panic in a country which is so shamefully rich.—Success Magazine.

CUBS' FOOD.

They Thrive on Grape Nuts.

Healthy babies don't cry and the well-nourished baby that is fed on Grape-Nuts is never a crying baby. Many babies who cannot take any other food relish the perfect food, Grape-Nuts, and get well.

"My little baby was given up by three doctors who said that the condensed milk on which I had fed her had ruined the child's stomach. One of the doctors told me the only thing to do would be to try Grape-Nuts, so I got some and prepared it as follows: I soaked 1½ tablespoonfuls in one pint of cold water for half an hour, then I strained off the liquid and mixed 12 teaspoonfuls of this strained Grape-Nuts juice with six teaspoonfuls of rich milk, put in a pinch of salt and a little sugar, warmed it and gave it to baby every two hours.

"In this simple, easy way I saved baby's life and have built her up to a strong, healthy child, rosy and laughing. The food must certainly be perfect to have such a wonderful effect as this. I can truthfully say I think it is the best food in the world to raise delicate babies on and is also a delicious healthful food for grown-ups, as we have discovered in our family."

Grape-Nuts is equally valuable to the strong, healthy man or woman. It stands for the true theory of health. "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

A. CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER VI.

The revelation of the real state of the firm's finances was a terrible blow to Ezra Girdlestone. To a man of his overbearing tempestuous disposition failure and poverty were bitter things to face. All his life he had reckoned, as a matter of course, that when his father passed away he would be left almost a millionaire. A single half-hour's conversation had shattered this delusion, and left him face to face with ruin.

He proceeded to qualify himself as a dealer in diamonds. It happened that he was acquainted with one of the partners of the firm of Fugger & Stoltz, who did the largest import trade in precious stones. Through his kindness he received practical instructions in the variety and value of diamonds, and learned to detect all those little flaws and peculiarities which are only visible to the eye of an expert, and yet are of the highest importance in determining the price of a stone. With such opportunities Ezra made rapid progress, and within a few weeks there were few dealers in the trade who had a better grasp of the subject.

Early one April afternoon the major was strutting down St. James street, frock coated and kid gloved, with protuberant chest and glittering shoes which peeped out from beneath the daintiest of gaiters. Young Girdlestone, who had been on the lookout from a club window, ran across and intercepted him.

"How are you, my dear major?" he cried, advancing upon him with outstretched hand and as much show of geniality as his nature permitted.

"How d'ye do? How d'ye do?" said the other somewhat pompously. He had made up his mind that nothing was to be done with the young man, and yet he was reluctant to break entirely with one whose purse was well lined.

"I've been wishing to speak with you for some days, major," said Ezra. "I wish to speak to you quietly on a matter of business. Can you meet me at Nelson's Cafe at four o'clock? I know the manager, and he'll let us have a private room."

"I'd ask you round to me own little place," the major said, "but it's rather too far, Nelson's at four. Right you are!" It was clear to him that some service or other was expected of him, and it was obviously his game therefore to hang back and not appear to be too eager to enter into young Girdlestone's views. When he presented himself at the entrance of Nelson's Cafe the young merchant had been fuming and chafing in the sitting room for five and twenty minutes.

"I'll tell you why I wanted to have a chat with you, major," Ezra said, having first opened the door suddenly and glanced out as a precaution against eavesdroppers. "I have to be cautious because what I have to say affects the interest of the firm. I wouldn't for the world have anyone know about it except yourself. We have a difficult enterprise on which we are about to embark," Ezra said. "It is one which will need great skill and tact, though it may be made to pay well if properly managed. For this enterprise we require an agent to perform one of the principal parts. This agent must possess great ability, and, at the same time, be a man on whom we can thoroughly rely. You are prepared to put yourself at our orders on condition that you are well paid for it?"

"Not so fast, me young friend, not so fast!" said the major. "Let's hear what it is that you want me to do, and then I'm ready to say what I'll agree to."

Thus encouraged, Ezra proceeded to unfold the plan upon which the House of Girdlestone depended. Not a word did he say of ruin or danger, or the reasons which had induced this speculation. On the contrary he depicted the affairs of the firm as being in a most flourishing condition, and this venture as simply a small, insignificant offshoot from their business, undertaken as much for amusement as for any serious purpose. Still, he laid stress upon the fact that though the sum in question was a small one to the firm, yet it was a very large one in other men's eyes. As to the morality of the scheme, that was a point which Ezra omitted entirely to touch upon. Any comment upon that would, he felt, be superfluous when dealing with such a man as his companion.

"And now, major," he concluded, "provided your lend us your name and your talents to help us in our speculation the firm are prepared to meet you in a most liberal spirit in the matter of remuneration. Of course, your voyage and your expenses will be handsomely paid. You will have to travel by steamer to St. Petersburg, provided that we choose the Ural Mountains as the scene of our imaginary find. I hear that there is high play going on aboard those boats, and with your well-known skill you will no doubt be able to make the voyage a remunerative one. We calculate that at the most you will be in Russia about three months. Now, the firm thought that it would be very fair if they were to guarantee you two hundred and fifty pounds, which they would increase to five hundred in case of success; of course, by that we mean complete success such as would be likely to attend your exertions."

When the young man had finished, the major stood up with his face to the empty fireplace, his legs far apart, his chest inflated, and his body rocking ponderously backwards and forwards.

"Let me be quite sure that I understand you," he said. "You wish me to go to Russia? You have the goodness to suggest that on me way I should rook me fellow-passengers in the boat?"

"That is to say, if you think it worth your while."

"Quite so. If I think it worth me while. I am then to pretend to discover certain diamond mines, and am to give weight to me story by the fact that I am known to be a man of good birth, and also by exhibiting some rough stones which you wish me to take out with me from England."

"Quite right, major," Ezra said encouragingly.

"I am then to telegraph or write this lie to England and get it inserted in the papers?"

"That's an ugly word," Ezra remonstrated. "This 'report' we will say. A report may be either true or false, you know."

"And by this report then," the major continued, "you reckon that the market will be so affected that your father and you will be able to buy and sell in a manner that will be profitable to you, but by which you will do other people out of their money."

"You have an unpleasant way of putting it," said Ezra with a forced laugh; "but you have the idea right."

"I have another idea as well," roared the old soldier, flushing purple with passion. "I've an idea that if I was twenty years younger I'd see whether you'd fit through that window, Master Girdlestone. I'd have taught you to propose such a scheme to a man with blue blood in his veins, you scoundrel!"

Ezra fell back in his chair. He was outwardly composed, but there was a dangerous glitter in his eye, and his face had turned from a healthy olive to a dull yellow tint.

"You won't do it?" he gasped.

"Do it! D'ye think a man who's worn Her Majesty's scarlet jacket for twenty years would dirty his hands with such a trick? I tell ye, I wouldn't do it for all the money that ever was coined. Look here, Girdlestone, I know you, but you don't know me!"

The young merchant sat silently in his chair, with the same livid color upon his face and savage expression in his eyes. Major Tobias Clutterbuck stood at the end of the table, stooping forward so as to lean his hands upon it, with his eyes protuberant and his scanty grey fringe in a bristle with indignation.

"What right had you to come to me with such a proposal? I don't set up for being a saint, but I've some morals, such as they are, and I mean to stick to them. One of my rules of life has been never to know a blackguard, and so, me young friend, from this day forth you and I go on our own roads. I'm not particular, but you must draw the line somewhere. I draw it at you."

It struck the waiters at Nelson's well-known restaurant as a somewhat curious thing that their two customers should walk out with such very grave faces and in so unsociable a manner.

CHAPTER VII.

There were rejoicings in Phillimore Gardens over Tom's engagement, for the two old people were both heartily fond of Kate—"Our Kate," as they were wont proudly to call her. The physician chafed at first over the idea of keeping the matter a secret from Girdlestone. A little reflection served to show him, however, that there was nothing to be gained by informing him, while Kate's life, during the time that she was forced to remain under his roof, would be more tolerable as long as he was kept in ignorance of it.

After breakfast one morning, the doctor asked his son to step with him into the library. "You must do something to keep you from mischief, my boy," he said at last, brusquely.

"I'm ready for anything," replied Tom, "but I don't quite see what I am fitted for."

"First of all, what do you think of this?" the doctor asked abruptly, handing a letter over to his son, who opened it, and read as follows:

"Dear Sir—It has come to my knowledge through my son that your boy has abandoned the study of medicine, and that you are still uncertain as to his future career. I have long had the intention of seeking a young man who might join in our business, and relieve my old shoulders of some of the burden. Ezra urges me to write and propose that your son should become one of us. If he has any taste for business we shall be happy to advance his interest in every way. He would, of course, have to purchase a share in the concern, which would amount to seven thousand pounds, on which he would be paid interest at the rate of five per cent. By allowing this interest to accumulate, and investing also his share of the profits, he might in time absorb a large portion of the business. In case he joined us upon this footing we should have no objection to his name appearing as one of the firm.

"With kind regards to your family, and hoping that they enjoy the great blessing of health, I remain, sincerely yours,

"JOHN GIRDLESTONE."

"What d'ye think of that?" the doctor asked when his son had finished reading it.

"I hardly know," said Tom. "I should like a little time to think it over."

"Seven thousand pounds is a good round sum. It is more than half the total capital which I have invested for you. On the other hand, I have heard those who ought to know say there is not a sounder or better managed concern in London. There's no time like the present, Tom. Get your hat, and we'll go down to Fenchurch street together and look into it."

It was a proud day for the ex-medical student when he first entered the counting house of the African firm and realized that he was one of the governing powers in that busy establishment. Tom Dimsdale's mind was an intensely practical one, and although he had found the study of science an irksome matter, he was able to throw himself into business with uncommon energy and devotion. The clerks soon found that the sunburned, athletic looking young man intended to be anything but a sleeping partner, and both they and old Gilray respected him accordingly.

Girdlestone called him into the office one day, and congratulated him upon the progress which he was making. "My dear young man," he said to him in his patriarchal way, "I am delighted to hear of the way in which you identify yourself with the interests of the firm. If at first you find work allotted to you which may appear, to you to be rather menial, you must understand that that is simply due to our desire that you should master the whole business from its very foundations."

"There is nothing I desire better," said Tom.

"In addition to the routine of office work, and the superintendence of the clerks, I should wish you to have a thorough grasp of all the details of the shipping, and of the loading and unloading of our vessels, as well as of the storage of goods when landed. When any of our ships are in, I should wish you to go down to the docks and to overlook everything which is done."

In one respect Tom Dimsdale was immeasurably the gainer by his connection with the firm, for without that it is difficult to say how he could have found opportunities for breaking through the barrier which separated him from Kate. The surveillance of the merchant had become stricter of late, and all invitations from Mrs. Dimsdale or other friends who pitied the loneliness of the girl were repulsed by Girdlestone with the curt intimation that his ward's health was not such as to justify him in allowing her to incur any risk of catching a chill. She was practically a prisoner in the great stone cage in Eccleston square, and even on her walks a warder in the shape of a footman was, as we have seen, told off to guard her. Whatever John Girdlestone's reasons may have been, he had evidently come to the conclusion that it was of the highest importance that she should be kept secluded.

As it was, Tom, thanks to his position as one of the firm, was able occasionally, in spite of every precaution, to penetrate through the old man's defensive works. If a question of importance arose at Fenchurch street during the absence of the senior partner, what more natural than that Mr. Dimsdale should volunteer to walk round to Eccleston square in order to acquaint him with the fact. And if it happened that the gentleman was not to be found there, how very natural that the young man should wait half an hour for him, and that Miss Harston should take the opportunity of a chat with an old friend? Precious, precious interviews those, the more so for their rarity. They brightened the dull routine of Kate's weary life, and sent Tom back to the office full of spirit and hope. The days were at hand when the memory of them was to shine out like little rifts of light in the dark cloud of existence.

And now the time was coming when it was to be decided whether, by a last bold stroke, the credit of the house of Girdlestone was to be saved, or whether the attempt was to plunge them into deeper and more hopeless ruin. An unscrupulous agent named Langworthy had been dispatched to Russia well primed with instructions as to what to do and how to do it. He had been in the employ of an English corn merchant at Odessa, and had some knowledge of the Russian language which would be invaluable to him in his undertaking. In the character of an English gentleman of scientific tastes he was to establish himself in some convenient village among the Ural Mountains. There he was to remain some little time, so as to arouse confidence in the people before making his pretended discovery. He was then to carry his rough diamonds to Tobolsk, as the nearest large town, and to exhibit them there, backing up his assertion by the evidence of villagers who had seen him dig them up. The Girdlestones knew that that alone would be sufficient when telegraphed to England to produce a panic in the sensitive diamond market. Before any systematic inquiry could be made, Langworthy would have disappeared, and their little speculation would have come off. After that the sooner people realised that it was a hoax the better for the conspirators. In any case, there seemed to be no possibility that the origin of the rumor could be traced. Meanwhile Ezra Girdlestone had secured his passage in the Cape mail steamer Cyprian. On the night that he left he sat up some time in the library at Eccleston square talking over the matter for the last time with his father.

To Be Encouraged.

"Biggins is always repeating the things his children say."

"Well," answered Miss Cayenne, "he ought to be encouraged. I have no doubt they are much less wearisome than his original remarks would be."—Washington Star.

Philosophical.

"Beg pardon, ma'am," said the butler, "but your son has just eloped with the parlor maid."

"Oh, that isn't so bad," rejoined Mrs. Uppson. "He might have eloped with the cook—and I never could have replaced her."

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Ruth Harris, aged 7 years, when alone at home in Evansville, tried to put coal oil into a stove and was fatally burned.

Markle is endeavoring to have the quarries of building stone near that place opened, and the industry promises to be a thriving one.

Two Hungarian workmen were killed and several others were seriously wounded in a fierce free-for-all fight in a construction camp near Gary.

Mrs. Willis Hoffman, of Etna Green, fell dead while attempting to communicate with ther husband by telephone, to inform him that she had been taken ill.

Despondent, due to ill health, Henry Durscholtz, of Weisburg, aged 45 years, went to his barn and shot himself through the head. He leaves a widow and two sons.

Elbert Shirts dropped dead at his home in Noblesville, of heart trouble, aged 47. He was cashier of the Citizens' State Bank, a position he had filled for thirty years.

A. L. Anson found a snapping turtle measuring eleven inches across the back, creeping along Main street in Warsaw. It's a sure sign of an open winter, the old residents say.

John Trachsel, who has been postmaster at Larwill for eleven years, has tendered his resignation to take effect March 1. It is said that Lloyd Hartman is slated for the position.

C. D. Kingsbury, the aged proprietor of the hotel at Lima, LaGrange County, fell down a flight of stairs, receiving serious injuries. His right leg was broken, and he was hurt internally.

Gold watches, finger rings, earrings, brooches, cravat pins and other articles of solid gold are being contributed to the "string box" by members of the congregation of St. Mary's church at Richmond. The church desires a new challice and it must be of solid gold.

Ira Porter, of New Pittsburg, a farmer, says he spied a hawk in his chicken yard, and sent his wife into the house for a shotgun. When she returned she stumbled, he says. The weapon was discharged and the shot entered her head near the eye, killing her instantly.

Two aged sisters at Sedan, DeKalb County—Mrs. Mary Crane, aged 87, and Mrs. Showers, aged 86—are lying at the point of death suffering from the same disease, gangrene, which has attacked their feet. The coincidence of the sisters similarly affected is regarded as most unusual.

A sensation was created at Converse by the marriage of Miss Katherine Trook, a beautiful girl of 19 years, who has been a leader in society, and Leslie Shaw, aged 24, also of Converse, who recently fell heir to a fortune. Miss Trook was teacher in the public school, and her place has been taken temporarily by her mother.

Secreted in the chimney of a log cabin on the farm of John Reddenhaus, near Greenwood Heights, were found some interesting relics of pioneer days. One is an old-fashioned primer, published in 1837, and another is a letter written by William and Ruth Barnard to Samuel Coale and family, former occupants of the cabin. The letter tells of an epidemic that prevailed in Indiana in 1837, causing many deaths. Wheat was selling from $1.50 to $2.00 per bushel, beef at $7.00 per 100 and pork at $8.00.

William L. Krause, a farmer at Walkerton, formerly janitor for the Miles Medical Company in Elkhart, pleaded guilty before the Federal Commissioner at South Bend, to the charge of using cancelled postage stamps in sending letters to his son, Letter Carrier John Krause, of Elkhart. A rural carrier detected the offense, which was repeated a number of times in six months. Krause's bond was fixed at $200. It is assumed that he picked up the cancelled stamps while a janitor in Elkhart.

"Honk! honk!" is sweet music to the ears of T. N. Davidson, the ferryman who has the boat that plies back and forth across White river at Hazleton. Ever since the first auto crossed the river in Davidson's boat he has charged $3 a trip. Inasmuch as a farmer with two horses and a big wagon is ferried across for almost nothing, the autoists not long ago petitioned the county commissioners to regulate the ferriage fee at something like a reasonable figure. But the august authorities could not see that it was their business to say what a ferryman should charge. Now, to put an additional spike in the auto's coffin, farmers, who say they wish the public highway prohibited to autos, are arranging to petition the commissioners to make Davidson's high ferriage for autos legal. Meanwhile, Davidson is "passing rich" on $3 a trip.

Dr. R. F. Blount has retired from the presidency of the Home Telephone Company at Wabash and is succeeded by N. G. Hunter.

The Rev. Richard Haworth, of the Friends' church at Wabash, has been selected as chief of the newly-established Biblical department of Fairmount Academy.

A skillful thief with a skeleton key entered the office of Dr. F. E. Morton, dentist at Columbus, and stole refined gold valued at $40. A quantity of gold not labeled was overlooked.

Citizens of Shirley have petitioned the county commissioners to offer a reward for the apprehension of Joseph Hicks, the fugitive murderer, who shot and killed Oscar Martin some weeks ago.

Henry Hancock, 17 years old, of West Terre Haute, started for Washington to find employment, and he was struck by an Evansville & Terre Haute freight train and died soon after.

At a late hour one night recently a masked man entered the grocery store of George Bittroff at Evansville and forced the proprietor and his clerk to throw up their hands. When the clerk attempted to lower his hands the burglar shot at him, the ball grazing his knee. The thief then robbed the cash register of $150 and made his escape.

Harry Reynolds, the night manager of the Western Union telegraph office at New Castle, who was seriously stabbed by Edward Daugherty, a 15-year-old boy he was trying to eject from the office, will recover, his physicians believe. One wound near the heart and another in the throat were very near to vital spots, and for a time it was feared they would prove fatal.

Bob Davis was shot through the lung, William Gulliford was shot in the head and Ben Weaver was struck on the head with a billiard cue in a quarrel over a pool game at Marion. After being shot Davis ran two miles, when he fell exhausted from loss of blood. He may die. Gulliford was struck on the forehead by a bullet, but it glanced off, and he was not seriously hurt.

The residence of Mrs. Julius Israel, in Greendale, was partially destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of several hundred dollars. This house was built the year following the memorable flood of 1884, and has about thirty rooms. The idea was that in case of another inundation people in the lower parts of the city could find a place of refuge. It has never been needed for this purpose, however.

The Angola Monument Company, of Angola, at $32,585 was the successful bidder on the contract for furnishing and erecting the monuments and markers to be placed on the Vicksburg battlefield by the State in memory of the Hoosier soldiers who died there. The bids were opened by the Indiana Vicksburg Military Park Commission at the State House at Indianapolis and varied from $31,775 to $58,500.

The court denied the application of Mrs. Bryant for a divorce from Simeon Bryant, but instructed the husband to receive his wife at home, give her kind treatment, employ a domestic for household purposes and set aside $200 a year for use of his wife, else he would grant her a divorce and a large amount of alimony. The plaintiff and defendant are aged people, who not long ago observed their fiftieth wedding anniversary. The defendant was warned that if he did not obey the instructions of the court he would regret it.

Authorities have discovered an underground home at Muncie in habited by the family of William Truitt. The family has taken possession of an air chamber in the ruins of the old Over window glass factory which was consumed by fire. The chamber is sixteen feet below the surface of the ground. In this peculiar abode the family eats, cooks and sleeps. A cook stove does duty also as a heating stove and coal oil lamps light the interior night and day. Truitt has been out of work and sought this method of avoiding house rent. Being underground, little fuel is required.

Miss Florence E. Braselton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Braselton, of Princeton, was united in marriage to William E. Hawkins, of Dallas, Tex., by the Rev. J. C. McClung, pastor of the Presbyterian church, at Patoka. The couple were to have been married on last Christmas day, but the day before the wedding, when no word had been received from the bridegroom, the marriage was called off and the guests were notified there would be no ceremony at the church. Later the bridegroom came, explanations were made, and a second date was set for the ceremony. There was a grand family reunion held at the Braselton home in honor of the event.

"Blot Out The Saloon."

The Manufacture and Sale of Liquor is Responsible for, 70 per cent of our criminals.

50 per cent of the inmates of our insane asylums.

80 per cent of the inmates of our poor houses.

100 per cent of our tramps.

The destruction of homes.

The corruption of voters.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THE SALOON?

"Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil." Ex. 23: 2".

The man who declares that a righteous principle cannot win has turned his back upon God and has forgotten the history of humanity.—Oliver W. Stewart.

"It is a mark of wonderful progress when a state is admitted to the Union, notably as a prohibition state. It will be equally a glorious day when the whole Union of states will determine to join with the new state of Oklahoma and put its money and its people to better and nobler uses than the consumption of alcohol."—The Evening Express, Los Angeles, Cal.

The United States Supreme Court has again sustained prohibition law. On Jan. 13, several cases appealed from the Supreme Court of Kansas were decided, affirming the decisions of the latter court and upholding the prohibitory law. The legal right to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes is no longer an open question.

$1,000 license, say: "High license has been no injury to our business. In our State we think it bars out prohibition. * * * In our opinion, high license does not lessen the consumption of liquor."

"The people of the great commonwealth of Indiana, with a conviction established against the Gibraltar of rum, will see that all the devils in hell shall not save it from its doom."—Dr. John P. D. John, former President of DePauw University, at Men's Big Meeting, Indianapolis. Great applause!

Upon what does the liquor traffic depend? Upon debased manhood, wronged womanhood, and defrauded childhood. It holds a mortgage over the cradle, a deed written in heart's blood over every human life.—N. Y. Tribune.

Wine, as mentioned in the Bible is represented by two words, "Tirosh meaning always that which is beneficial and approved, and "Thekar" a drink that always condemned and prohibited. This last being generally translated in our English Bible as "strong drink." There is not an instance in the Bible where the word "Thekar" enjoys the Divine approval, nor one in which it is found keeping company with God's gracious gifts to man.

The State will not allow the saloon to open on election day. If it is bad for election day it is bad for every day.

"The people are ripe for more effective, decisive work. We must push direct organization for the right; organization, too, on a political basis for prohibiting the traffic; for the state and nation are political organizations."—A. Lincoln. 1854.

Dr. S. S. Lungren of Toledo, Ohio, an eminent physician and surgeon of over twenty-five years standing, says: "It is difficult to find any part of the beer drinking machinery that is doing its work as it should. This is why their life cords snap off like glass rods when disease or accident gives them a little blow. Beer drinking shortens life. This is not a mere opinion; it is a well settled, recognized fact. Physicians and insurance companies agree on this."

The Saloon Business.

Is responsible for more than 75 per cent of all our criminals.

It causes more than 75 per cent of all the pauperism for which the taxpayer has to pay.

It puts out the fire on the hearth and condemns wives and children to hunger and rags.

It causes more misery than words can tell.

It is hated by every true mother.

It is feared by every faithful father.

These are facts—indisputable.

Jubge Adair for Congress.

Judge Joseph W. Adair, for years on the Whitley Circuit Court bench, acknowledged throughout the State as one of the foremost jurists and ablest judges in the commonwealth, has authorized the announcement that he will seek the democratic nomination for congressman of the Twelfth District.

He arrived at this conclusion after being importuned to become a candidate by many friends, personally and through correspondence, and the announcement will not only be hailed with pleasure by democrats of this county but in all the countries of the district. Judge Adair needs no introduction to the democracy of the Twelfth district. He is already well and favorably known, both as a man and as a jurist. He has been tried and has stood the test, and when his name is mentioned in connection with the office of congressman there will be none to say he does not measure up to the standard. Judge Adair enjoys the distinction of being one of the most learned and popular judges in Northern Indiana. He has won this recognition, first, because of his profound knowledge of the law, and, second, by his uniform courtesy and genteel bearing both on the bench and in the every day affairs of life His great popularity is attested by the fact that he has been elected three times as Judge of the Thirty-third circuit in a district normally republican, and at the present time there is a strong sentiment in favor of making him a candidate for a fourth term. In this movement democrats are not alone, for many republicans are outspoken in support to him.—Whitley County News.

Rank Foolishness.

"When attacked by a cough or cold, or when your throat is sore, it is rank foolishness to take any other medicine than Dr. King's New Discovery," says C. O. Eldridge of Empire, Ga. Weak Heart Action

There are certain nerves that control the action of the heart. When they become weak, the heart action is impaired. Short breath, pain around heart, choking sensation, palpitation, fluttering, feeble or rapid pulse, and other distressing symptoms follow. Dr. Miles Heart Cure is a medicine especially adapted to the needs of these nerves and the muscular structure of the heart itself. It is a strengthening tonic that brings speedy relief. Try it.

"For years I suffered with what I thought was stomach trouble, when the doctors told me I had heart trouble. I had tried many remedies, when the Dr. Miles' almanac came into my hands, and I concluded to try Dr. Miles' Heart Cure. I have taken three bottles, and now I am not suffering at all. I am cured and this medicine did it. I write this in the hope that it will attract the attention of others who suffer as I did."

A neighbor exchange says once one of his subscribers received a dun through the post office, and it made him mad. He went to see the editor about it, and the editor showed him a few duns of his own—one for paper, one for type, one for rent and several others. "Now," said the editor, "I didn't get mad when these came, because I knew that all I had to do was to ask several reliable gentlemen like you to come and help me out, and then I could settle all of them." When the subscriber saw how it was, he repented, paid up and renewed for another year.

PAIN

Pain in the head—pain anywhere, has its cause. Pain is congestion, pain is blood pressure—nothing else usually. At least, so says Dr. Shoop, and to prove it he has created a little pink tablet. That tablet—called Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablet—coaxes blood pressure away from pain centers. Its effects charming, pleasing, delightful, gently though safely, it surely equalizes the blood circulation.

If you have a headache, it's blood pressure.

If it's painful periods with women, same cause.

If you are sleepless, restless, nervous, it's blood congestion—blood pressure. That surely is a certainty, for Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablets stop it in 20 minutes, and the tablets simply distribute the unnatural blood pressure.

Bruise your finger, and it hurts? It gets red and swell, and pain you? Of course it does. It's congestion, blood pressure. You'll find it where pain is—always. It's simply Common Sense.

We sell at 25 cents, and cheerfully recommend

In speaking of the drowning of John Shull in Otter lake a few days ago, a man at our right hand who had a trial of this kind for his life, suggests what he thinks is the only possible way to get out of the water on the ice without help. The most natural thing for one in such an exciting time is to try and climb out onto the ice face foremost, but in this way the feet naturally rise towards the surface, up against the under side of the ice, and the man falls back into the water. By turning the back to the edge of the ice, resting the elbows on the ice, and then gradually falling backwards, kicking with the feet, until the body is pushed beyond the balance, it is said one can get out if the ice does not break.—Steuben Republican.

The Popular Pulpit

HIGHER AND BETTER LIFE.

By the Rev. Dr. S. J. Niccolls.

"For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth and the flower thereof falleth away; but the word of the Lord endureth forever."—Peter 1:1.

In this passage we have a contrast between what is perishable and imperishable in this life, between the changing and the unchanging, between the glory that is seen and temporal and the glory that is not seen and eternal. We can find in it, if we will, something to assist us in our meditations at this season. It solemnly reminds us of the flight of time and of privileges and opportunities which, whether used or misused, are now gone forever. We think of the changes of the past, of the friends who have started the journey of the year with us; we recall the vicissitudes of the year, the hopes which we cherished but which were not realized, and of the losses of what seemed to us permanent gain. A sense of the incompleteness of life comes to us, and we are oppressed with a feeling of uncertainty for the future.

It is only natural that meditation at such a time should awaken pensive if not melancholy thoughts. To some it is a process so full of pain and so destructive of their peace that they carefully avoid it and give themselves with renewed energy to the enjoyment of the present. But there is a meditation which, while it chastens the soul and gives sobriety to its thoughts, at the same time strengthens it and fills it with hope and courage for the future. It is to this exercise I would, by the help of the Holy Spirit, lead you this morning.

What Peter writes so touchingly concerning the transitoriness of human life and all earthly glory is no new truth, nor is it a doctrine peculiar to the Scriptures. Call it doleful if you choose, it is nevertheless one of the sad and distracting facts of life. Poets and moralists have made it their theme through all past ages. Moses in his immortal Psalm of Life, the author of the Book of Job, Isaiah, Homer, Horace, Virgil, Dante, Milton and Tennyson, have all sung in varying strains earthly life and of the perishableness of all earthly glory.

We do not need to prove that man's life is brief and frail and that the glory of earth passes away; but we do need to realize it so that we may direct our conduct aright. It is good to live, and there is something attractive in the glory of human life. There is much in it to stimulate us to activity. Earthly rewards have their uses and he is not a wise man who affects to despise them.

There have been times when the frailty and brevity of life have been so impressed upon us that everything fell under the dark shadow of the solemn truth. We have seen fortunes disappear, and the glory that once was ours has given place to weakness and obscurity. Changes as with a shock have lifted us out of the grooves of old habits, destroyed our peace and left us sighing for that which never can come to us. Yes, we know it, "we all do fade as a leaf." This is the condition of life, and there is no escape from it. What, then, shall we say? Shall we give way to despair and mourn in anguish over what we cannot help? Shall we answer, as many have done, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die?"

Now, mark the reply which Peter gives. Yes, he says, it is true that "all flesh is as grass and all the glory of man as the flower of grass; but the word of the Lord endureth forever." That is not the language of despair and discouragement. It is an utterance of hope. Something abides and gives permanence and enduring glory and greatness to life. Peter calls it the word of the Lord. What that word reveals and testifies to is a great and abiding reality.

This view which the apostle gives us first of all delivers us from the sadness and dismay which the constant changes of life would otherwise produce. We can see, in view of God's plans, how change has its place in the world's progress. We are prone to settle down in the routine of life, and we do not like to be disturbed. Habit wears grooves in which our lives run, and it hurts to be jolted out of them. But God, in the fulfillment of His great plans, permits changes to come.

This view will give us peace in the midst of the distractions and vicissitudes of the present. All instinctively long for permanence. We want abiding good, happiness and joy that will not mock us. In the midst of change we long for the changeless. Whether we are seeking aright for it or not, we need for our happiness an abiding city, a city which hath foundation, whose maker and builder is God. We grow weary of meeting and parting, of loving and losing, of toiling and then seeing the reward taken away. If there were no hope of all this coming to an end our hearts would be sick unto death. But the word of God, which abideth forever, gives us this hope.

This view gives dignity and sobriety to life here. Without it, it is only natural that men should become frivolous and reckless. Life has no special value in their eyes; they come to its end saying, as did Dickens, "Life seems to me the saddest dream that ever was dreamed." Or they take up the cry of the old worldling, "Vanity of vanities; all is vanity and vexation of spirit." But with the word of God in mind, this heartsickness, this world of weariness, disappears.

And now, brothers, fellow travelers to eternity, you believe in the first part of the apostle's testimony concerning the frailty of our earthly life. Will you not also believe in the second part and begin to build your life on the word of God? Why should you pursue vanity and live under the influence of that which surely must fail?

Why not seek that which is best and enduring? You are standing at the threshold of a new year. Will you cross it over without a sincere and determined resolve to live by the word of God, which abideth forever?

Now is the accepted time. Now is the day of salvation. And if it is not worth while now to hear God's word, you may be assured that it will not be worth while to do so in the coming ages. If we will not live the higher life here, on this bank of time, we assuredly will not do so when we cross over the bridge and come to the other side. Our real life is always in the present, and what we are doing now determines the future. So, to-day, if you hear His voice, the voice of your Redeemer, harden not your hearts.

SHORT METER SERMONS.

The graces do not grow in gloom.

A growing faith will shatter many forms.

Dishonest thinking does not lead to holy living.

It takes a strong man to stop doing weak things.

The religion that produces no sunshine is moonshine.

A greedy hand never gathered enough to feed its needy heart.

Half of success is in seeing the significance of small things.

To set a child's face toward gladness is to incline him to God.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't wear a long face. If you really have religion you won't have to.

Don't claim too much goodness lest the devil set a trap to catch you in some wrongful act.

Don't permit ostentation of any kind in church service which should be in keeping with its purpose. Turning the church into a theater or concert hall will be only competition with the real thing.

HYMNS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

Abide with Me.

Abide with me; fast falls the eventide;
The darkness deepens; Lord, with me abide!
When other helpers fail, and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless, O, abide with me!

Not a brief glance I beg, a passing word,
But as thou dwell'st with thy disciples, Lord,
Familiar, condescending, patient, free,
Come, not to sojourn, but abide with me.

I need thy presence every passing hour;
What but thy grace can foil the tempter's power?
Who like thyself my guide and stay can be?
Thro' cloud and sunshine, O, abide with me!

Swift to its close ebbs out life's little day;
Earth's joys grow dim, its glories pass away;
Change and decay in all around I see;
O thou, who changest not, abide with me!

Come not in terrors, as the King of kings;
But kind and good, with healing in thy wings.
Tears for all woes, a heart for every plea;
Come, Friend of sinners, and abide with me!

I fear no foe, with thee at hand to bless,
Ills have no weight, and tears no bitterness;
Where is Death's sting? where Grave, thy victory?
I triumph still, if thou abide with me.

Hold thou thy cross before my closing eyes;
Shine through the gloom and point me to the skies;
Heaven's morning breaks, and earth's vain shadows flee;
In life, in death, O Lord, abide with me!

UP-TO-DATE DESIGNS FOR THE HOME DRESSMAKER

Girl's Dress.

The frock that is worn over a separate guimpe is always a pretty one, and this season it is showing certain new features that make it especially attractive. The shoulders are long and drooping, and there often is found some modification of the kimono or Mandarin sleeve. This one includes all the novelties mentioned and is graceful and attractive, while perfectly simple withal. In this case it is made of a blue wool material with lines of golden brown and is trimmed with brown ribbon frills, but it suits plain material quite as well as plaid, and fashionable colors and fashionable mixtures are exceptionally varied and exceptionally attractive.

Seven Gored Princesse Skirt.

Everything that is long and graceful, everything that gives slender lines to the figure is in the height of style at the moment, and this skirt is therefore peculiarly desirable. It extends just a few inches above the normal waist line, giving the graceful modified Empire effect, and it falls in unbroken lines from that point to the floor. In the illustration it is made of broad cloth with trimming of velvet and ornamental buttons, but it will be found desirable for velvet and for Panama cloth, indeed, for almost all seasonable materials, for even the thinner ones, such as veiling, cashmere and the like, are made after such models.

HOUSE WORK

Thousands of American women in our homes are daily sacrificing their lives to duty.

In order to keep the home neat and pretty, the children well dressed and tidy, women overdo. A female weakness or displacement is often brought on and they suffer in silence, drifting along from bad to worse, knowing well that they ought to have help to overcome the pains and aches which daily make life a burden.

It is to these faithful women that comes as a boon and a blessing, as it did to Mrs. F. Ellsworth, of Mayville, N. Y., and to Mrs. W. P. Boyd, of Beaver Falls, Pa., who say:

"I was not able to do my own work, owing to the female trouble from which I suffered. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helped me wonderfully, and I am so well that I can do as big a day's work as I ever did. I wish every sick woman would try it.

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration. Why don't you try it?

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

Grandfather's Cure for Constipation

GREAT medicine,—the Sawbuck. Two hours a day sawing wood will keep anyone's Bowels regular.

No need of pills, Cathartics, Castor Oil, nor "Physic," if you'll only work the Sawbuck regularly.

Exercise is Nature's Cure for Constipation and,—a Ten-Mile walk will do, if you haven't got a wood-pile.

But, if you will take your Exercise in an Easy Chair, there's only one way to do that, because,—there's only one kind of Artificial Exercise for the Bowels and its name is "CASCARETS."

Cascarets are the only means to exercise the Bowel Muscles without work.

They don't Purge, Gripe, nor "upset your Stomach," because they don't act like "Physics."

They don't flush out your Bowels and Intestines with a costly waste of Digestive Juice, as Salts, Castor Oil, Calomel, Jalap, or Aperient Waters always do.

No—Cascarets strengthen and stimulate the Bowel Muscles, that line the Food passages and that tighten up when food touches them, thus driving the food to its finish.

A Cascaret acts on your Bowel Muscles as if you had just sawed a cord of wood, or walked ten miles.

Cascarets move the Food Naturally, digesting it without waste of tomorrow's Gastric Juice.

CHICAGO.

The favorable developments in banking conditions this week provide an encouraging basis for early improvement in the industrial situation. Aside from the immediate effect in strengthening sentiment, there are features which testify to betterment. The volume of payments through the banks is seen to be the largest in eleven weeks, and factory operations furnish employment to an extent which rapidly reduces the idle ranks of labor.

A largely increased commercial mortality may excite comment, but this really adds to stability by the elimination of concerns suffering from organic weakness. New demands make an improving exhibit in iron and steel, and other branches are more disposed to increase production.

There is less apprehension as to advancing undertakings requiring heavy outlays in construction and building work. Railroad plans are nearer the time of initiation and much activity is probable should the cost of financing become more inviting.

Distributive trade continues of seasonable extent. Dealings in the leading retail lines bring gratifying reductions in winter stocks, and wholesale operations gather strength from an increasing presence of visiting buyers.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 47, against 36 last week and 22 a year ago. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 10, against 7 last week and 6 in 1907.—Dun's Review.

NEW YORK.

A further easing in the financial situation and very general reports of improvements in collections are the leading features this week. In trade lines, colder weather and snow have helped retail distributions somewhat, but price reduction sales are generally credited with responsibility for whatever expansion has been shown in that branch as a whole. Wholesalers and jobbers report sentiment improved, collections benefited by the return to normal in domestic money markets, but trade demands are still below the normal, and in some sections a late and small spring trade is predicted.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending Jan. 16 number 431, against 435 last week and 235 in the like week of 1907, 279 in 1906, 304 in 1905, and 266 in 1904. Canadian failures for the week number 44, as against 63 last week and 23 in this week a year ago. —Bradstreet's Report.

Standard Must Face Trial.

Judge Hazel in the United States District Court at Buffalo has handed down a decision overruling the demurrers filed by the Standard Oil Company to indictments found against it by the grand jury at Jamestown, N. Y., last July, and the company must stand trial on the indictments, of which there are seven, containing over 1,700 counts. In Chicago the United States district attorney has asked for an increase in the supersedeas bond of the Standard corporation, which has appealed from the $29,240,000 fine imposed by Judge Landis.

The General Demand

of the Well-Informed of the World has always been for a simple, pleasant and efficient liquid laxative remedy of known value; a laxative which physicians could sanction for family use because its component parts are known to them to be wholesome and truly beneficial in effect, acceptable to the system and gentle, yet prompt, in action.

In supplying that demand with its excellent combination of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, the California Fig Syrup Co. proceeds along ethical lines and relies on the merits of the laxative for its remarkable success.

That is one of many reasons why Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is given the preference by the Well-Informed. To get its beneficial effects always buy the genuine—manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., only, and for sale by all leading druggists. Price fifty cents per bottle.

Commissioner Smith vs. The Standard Oil Co.

From the Railway World, January 3, 1908.

Mr. Herbert Knox Smith, whose zeal in the cause of economic reform has been in no wise abated by the panic which he and his kind did so much to bring on, is out with an answer to President Moffett, of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana. The publication of this answer, it is officially given out, was delayed several weeks, "for business reasons," because it was not deemed advisable to further excite the public mind, which was profoundly disturbed by the crisis. Now that the storm clouds have rolled by, however, the Commissioner rushes again into the fray.

Our readers remember that the chief points in the defence of the Standard Oil Company, as presented by President Moffett, were, (1) that the rate of six cents on oil from Whiting to East St. Louis has been issued to the Standard Oil Company, as the lawful rate by employes of the Alton, (2) that the 18-cent rate on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission was a class and not a commodity rate, never being intended to apply to oil, (3) that oil was shipped in large quantities between Whiting and East St. Louis over the Chicago and Eastern Illinois at six and one-fourth cents per hundred pounds, which has been filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission as the lawful rate, and (4) that the 18-cent rate on oil was entirely out of proportion to lawful rates on other commodities between these points of a similar character, and of greater value, such, for example, as linseed oil, the lawful rate on which was eight cents. President Moffett also stated that thousands of tons of freight had been sent by other shippers between these points under substantially the same conditions as governed the shipments of the Standard Oil Company.

This defence of the Standard Oil Company was widely quoted and has undoubtedly exerted a powerful influence upon the public mind. Naturally the Administration, which has staked the success of its campaign against the "trusts" upon the result of its attack upon this company, endeavors to offset this influence, and hence the new deliverance of Commissioner Smith.

We need hardly to point out that his rebuttal argument is extremely weak, although as strong, no doubt, as the circumstances would warrant. He answers the points made by President Moffett substantially as follows: (1) The Standard Oil Company had a traffic department, and should have known that the six-cent rate had not been filed, (2) no answer, (3) the Chicago and Eastern Illinois rate was a secret rate because it read, not from Whiting, but from Dolton, which is described as "a village of about 1,500 population just outside of Chicago. Its only claim to note is that it has been for many years the point of origin for this and similar secret rates." The Commissioner admits in describing this rate that there was a note attached stating that the rate could also be used from Whiting.

The press has quite generally hailed this statement of the Commissioner of Corporations as a conclusive refutation of what is evidently recognized as the strongest rebuttal argument advanced by the Standard.

In fact, it is as weak and inconclusive as the remainder of his argument. The lines of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois do not run into Chicago. They terminate at Dolton, from which point entrance is made over the Belt Line. Whiting, where the oil freight originates, is not on the lines of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois, which receives its Whiting freight from the Belt Line at Dolton. The former practice, now discontinued, in filing tariffs was to make them read from a point on the line of the filing road, and it was also general to state on the same sheet, that the tariff would apply to other points, e. g., Whiting. The Chicago and Eastern Illinois followed this practice in filing its rate from Dolton, and making a note on the sheet that is applied to Whiting. This was in 1895 when this method of filing tariffs was in common use.

Now let us see in what way the intending shipper of oil could be misled and deceived by the fact that the Chicago and Eastern Illinois had not filed a rate reading from Whiting. Commissioner Smith contends that "concealment is the only motive for such a circuitous arrangement," i. e., that this method of filing the rate was intended to mislead intending competitors of the Standard Oil Company. Suppose such a prospective oil refiner had applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission for the rate from Chicago to East St. Louis over the Chicago and Eastern Illinois, he would have been informed that the only rate filed with the commission by this company was 6¼ cents from Dolton, and he would have been further informed, if indeed he did not know this already, that this rate applied throughout Chicago territory. So that whether he wished to locate his plant at Whiting, or anywhere else about Chicago, under an arrangement of long standing, and which applies to all the industrial towns in the neighborhood of Chicago, he could have his freight delivered over the Belt Line to the Chicago and Eastern Illinois at Dolton and transported to East St. Louis at a rate of 6¼ cents. Where then is the concealment which the Commissioner of Corporations makes so much of? Any rate—from Dolton on the Eastern Illinois or Chappell on the Alton, or Harvey on the Illinois Central, or Blue Island on the Rock Island, applies throughout Chicago territory to shipments from Whiting, as to shipments from any other point in the district. So far from the Eastern Illinois filing its rate from Dolton in order to deceive the shipper, it is the Commissioner of Corporations who either betrays his gross ignorance of transportation customs in Chicago territory or relies on the public ignorance of these customs to deceive the public too apt to accept unquestioningly every statement made by a Government official as necessarily true, although, as in the present instance, a careful examination shows these statements to be false.

The final point made by President Moffett that other commodities of a character similar to oil were carried at much lower rates than 18 cents, the Commissioner of Corporations discusses only with the remark that "the 'reasonableness' of this rate is not in question. The question is whether this rate constituted a discrimination as against other shippers of oil," and he also makes much of the failure of President Moffett to produce before the grand jury evidence of the alleged illegal acts of which the Standard Oil official said that other large shippers in the territory had been guilty. Considering the fact that these shippers included the packers and elevator men of Chicago the action of the grand jury in calling upon President Moffett to furnish evidence of their wrong-doing may be interpreted as a demand for an elaboration of the obvious; but the fact that a rate-book containing these freight rates for other shippers was offered in evidence during the trial and ruled out by Judge Landis, was kept out of sight. President Moffett would not, of course, accept the invitation of the grand jury although he might have been pardoned if he had referred them to various official investigations by the Interstate Commerce Commission and other departments of the Government.

We come back, therefore, to the conclusion of the whole matter, which is that the Standard Oil Company of Indiana was fined an amount equal to seven or eight times the value of its entire property, because its traffic department did not verify the statement of the Alton rate clerk, that the six-cent commodity rate on oil had been properly filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission. There is no evidence, and none was introduced at the trial, that any shipment of oil from Chicago territory had been interfered with by the eighteen-cent rate nor that the failure of the Alton to file its six-cent rate had resulted in any discrimination against any independent shipper,—we must take this on the word of the Commissioner of Corporations and of Judge Landis. Neither is it denied even by Mr. Smith that the "independent" shipper of oil, whom he pictures as being driven out of business by this discrimination of the Alton, could have shipped all the oil he desired to ship from Whiting via Dolton over the lines of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois to East St. Louis. In short, President Moffett's defence is still good, and we predict will be so declared by the higher court.

The Standard Oil Company has been charged with all manner of crimes and misdemeanors. Beginning with the famous Rice of Marietta, passing down to that apostle of popular liberties, Henry Demarest Lloyd, with his Wealth Against the Commonwealth, descending by easy stages to Miss Tarbell's offensive personalities, we finally reach the nether depths of unfair and baseless misrepresentation in the report of the Commissioner of Corporations. The Standard has been charged with every form of commercial piracy and with most of the crimes on the corporation calendar. After long years of strenuous attack, under the leadership of the President of the United States, the corporation is at last dragged to the bar of justice to answer for its misdoings. The whole strength of the Government is directed against it, and at last, we are told, the Standard Oil Company is to pay the penalty of its crimes, and it is finally convicted of having failed to verify the statement of a rate clerk and is forthwith fined a prodigious sum, measured by the car. Under the old criminal law, the theft of property worth more than a shilling was punishable by death. Under the interpretation of the Interstate Commerce law by Theodore Roosevelt and Judge Kenesaw Landis, a technical error of a traffic official is made the excuse for the confiscation of a vast amount of property.

COUNTY LINE.

We are one week late in reporting the work of the Farmer's Short Course this year. When we returned from LaFayette last Saturday evening Jan. 18th. We were just about wore out and we trust our friends will agree with us, that we needed some rest. We shall not attempt to give a definite outline of the program as our work at the short course prevented us from attending some of the lectures. As in former years we were employed in the corn judging rooms. Last year we were assigned to the boys' room and also this year. There were about 85 boys in this room. Five tables were arranged each containing about 15 samples of corn, 10 ears each. Prof. G. I. Christie and four assistants did the instruction work in the room and each day the boys met in this room and scored the corn. On Friday an examination and the boys were to compete for a beautiful silver trophy. The boy winning this trophy will be allowed to keep it one year and then return it to the school when it will be competed for again. Each boy winning the trophy will have his name engraved on it and the date of winning.

The room for men contained several hundred samples of corn. The men were divided in two sections by means of a red and yellow tag which they received when they registered. Sec. one or the red tag met in the corn room at a certain hour and at the same hour sec. 2 met in the stock judging pavilion to judge the hogs, horses, cattle, etc., on the different days. The work was under perfect system and anyone could take a certain line of work and follow it thru the week and get much valuable information. There were several lines of work layed out.

Five in all, corn growers, stockmen, dairymen horticulturists and home makers, or a special line of work and lectures for the ladies. The work was so divided that at some hours each of these lines of work would have a lecture at the same hour. In this way 1072 people who attended these meetings, were all taken care of with ease. The work began each morning, Jan. 13 to 18, at 8 a. m. and continued to 11:30, convening again at 1 p. m. and running until 4:30. The evening sessions began at 7:30 p. m. each evening except Saturday. The music of the evening sessions was ample pay for the trip. It cannot be told and can only be enjoyed by those who were there to hear it. There were in all 82 lectures in the different departments and three hours of Dairy Laboratory work beside the corn and stock judging which occupied several hours each day. The ladies rooms were well filled throughout the week, and they will, no doubt, ask soon for larger rooms.

In connection with this work was the State Corn Show, one of the best shows ever held in the state. 225 samples of fine corn were in competition for the large prizes in each section of the state. Some beautiful silver trophies were won by the men who deserved them. The corn show alone was well worth the time it would take one to go to Purdue. The Horticultural people also held a fruit show. Some fine fruit was on display One basket of apples sold at auction brought $15. Not quite up to L. B. Clores $250 ear of corn, however. Mr. Clore was there with the ear of corn that sold at that figure, and he was also successful in winning the State Grand Prize at that show. The annual meeting of the Indiana Corn Growers Association was held Wednesday from 10 a. m to 3:30 p. m. and also the evening session.

This is the sixth Short course held at Purdue and having attended them all we are free to say this one is the most successful of them all. Many more people were there the whole week than any other year. And the work was under such a perfect system that there was not a jar from start to finish. There is much prospect of the work being enlarged more than ever next year. The cost of attending these meetings is within the reach of all. Every session is free. No charge for any part of the work. The carfare and board with incidental expenses, tablets, pencils, etc., can and has been all paid with less than $10. There were eight counties of the state not represented this year, only four were without representatives last year. This county ought to have 50 men at the farmer's short course and 25 boys in the winter short course of Jan. 20 to Mar. 13. Why not get accquainted with an Instutition that is working for the betterment of the farmer and his home.

Very Truly Yours,
RALEIGH B. WYATT.

Dress and Mind.

Dowdiness in person expresses the mental attitude of a woman quite as clearly as the smartness of the coquette. The latter is obviously bent on pleasing, the former is certain that she cannot, and therefore refuses to enter the lists.—The World.

A Draw.

One Chicago university professor expresses the opinion that women seldom rise to any intellectual height; but as a good many women probably have formed the same opinion about Chicago university professors, the fight looks like a draw.

Canals in Ancient Times.

The idea of canal building came from Asia in ancient times. Although it occurred several thousands of years ago, it will be news to most persons that old Nebuchadnezzar built a canal tributary to Babylon as long as the Erie canal.

SUPPLEMENT TO

The St. Joe News

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 29, 1908.

Fort Wayne Elks are arranging for their seventeenth annual minstrel show to be held January 30 and 31.

J. D. Campbell of Waterloo, has launched into the general drug and wall paper business at Grabill. Mr. Campbell is a man of 24 years experience and capable of giving this town a store it need not be ashamed of.

Because he stated in a sermon that all women who danced are questionable characters Rev. Ernest Sweeton, a Holiness minister from St. Louis, was egged and clubbed in the streets of Newburg, near Evansville, on the next evening. He was knocked down with eggs and other missils and then beaten with clubs. No arrests were made.

According to City Engineer Randall's report Fort Wayne has had street, sidewalk and alley improvements this year amounting to $204,242.87; pavement built on 3½ miles of streets which gives Fort Wayne 43½ of pavement; 8.63 miles of cement side walks constructed; 2½ miles of sewer making a total length of 84 miles in the city. Of the 43½ miles of pavement, 28 are of asphalt and the rest of brick, block, etc.

The Kendallville city council has made a request of the proprietors of the two 5-cent theaters in that city to provide better exits for cases of emergency should they arise. The Kendallville News says of Harry Henry of this city, who owns one of them: "Manager Harry Henry expressed his willingness to comply with the requests of the officials. He will also enclose his machine with asbestos. He was complimented on the attractive manner in which he has arranged his place."

Fire broke out in the Christian church at Angola Wednesday night during revival services conducted by Elder Vernon Stauffer. A leakage of gasoline from the lighting plant was the cause. The minister was stopped during his discourse by the janitor who requested him to ask the congregation to retire quietly and avoid a panic. A second invitation to escape fire was not needed while just before, the elder was pouring forth words of eloquence urging his hearers to escape eternal fire and no one budged. Had the latter fire come as close as the former it too would have caused a stampede.

JOHN A. PROVINES, Trustee.

Lagrange has a dead commercial club, that is, it is dead so far as the members work as a unit for the betterment of the city. An effort is being made to restore them to business life.

Numerous towns and cities within comparitively short distance from our fair Auburn are fast in the clutches of that dread malady, grip. Auburn people are "gripped" also but nothing like those in some places.

The old historic town hall of Rome City burned Thursday morning after having stood a period of fifty years. It was Rome City's first school house stood out in a square—or block—all by itself. In 1870 or '71 a new school was built, and the town hall, for some years after, was but little used. Later however, it was put in good repair, and used for general meeting purposes—elections were held there, the band held weekly practice in its capacious room, the G. A. R. and W. R. C. held frequent overflow meetings there, and it has been of great use and benefit in recent years. The fire started after a leap year party left for their homes about midnight.

Resolutions of Respect.

Resolutions adopted by the W. H. and F. M. Society of the Lutheran church, Spencerville, Indiana, upon the decease of our late sister, Mrs. Mary H. Maurer, who departed this life Jan. 20, 1906.

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God in his infinite love and wisdom to take from us our friend and co-laborer, Mrs. Mary Maurer, and

WHEREAS, Mrs. Maurer has ever shown great interest in the advancement of the Masters Kingdom, therefore, be it

RESOLVED, That we henceforth recognize the beneficent influence of her life by more earnestly performing the Masters work, and that in the beautiful and useful life of the departed we see much worthy our imitation and

RESOLVED, That we extend to the husband and relatives who are undergoing this great sorrow, our heartfelt sympathy in this our common loss, commending them to the infinite goodness of God, who doeth all things well, and further

RESOLVED, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished to the husband and relatives and that they be made a minute of our proceedings.

Farmers Petition.

The farmer's of the vicinity of Butler have organized and are circulating the following petitition:

To the Merchants, Business Men and Citizens of the City of Butler.

We, the undersigned citizens of the vicinity of Butler and who do our trading in Butler, most heartily commend those who have given their support to the Anti-Saloon movement and we most earnestly request those who have not done so to give their support to the movement, as we desire to do our trading in a town free from the evils of the saloon.

A large number of the farmers have signed this petition. Only two out of seventy refused in Stafford township and a large majority are signing it in all the four adjoining townships.

A public meeting will likely be held by the farmers on Wednesday evening of next week when they will have a speaker especially to speak to them if such can be secured.

This petition is circulated to show that the farmers do not want saloon in a town for them to trade in, and that they are not going to go elsewhere to trade if the saloons are removed.—Butler Record.

All Egoists Now.

Egoism is a positive disease of the day. People talk incessantly of themselves, their motors, their health, their chauffeurs, their achievements at bridge, their prowess at golf, their gardens—a great hobby of the day—their speculations in the city, and so far as the world hedges them around about, so far, and no farther, are they interested in it.—Lady's Pictorial.

Faint-Hearted Modern Lovers.

The average modern young man cares only for "tame rabbit coursing." He labors under some new-fangled delusion that it is undignified to woo unless you're more than half sure of winning. Naturally the sport is dull both to pursuer and pursued. The dainty art of courtship is nearly forgotten.—Woman at Home.

Too Much of a Task.

A London professor has been counting the germs that were picked up by a woman who dragged her skirt through the street. He found 16,500,000 of them. We are authorised, however, to say that he did not take the trouble to name them all.

Girls in Odd Occupations.

Miss Louise Cheatam makes her living by raising and training native song birds near the popular winter resort of Aiken, S. C. Beagle raising is the profitable occupation of another young lady, a Miss Asch, also near Aiken.

To Test Olive Oil.

The simplest way to ascertain the purity of olive oil is to freeze it. Pure olive oil has the exclusive property of freezing at three or four degrees above zero, whereas other oils need a temperature of ten degrees below zero.

Giving Them Room.

"There's one good thing," mused the woman reminiscently, "you may keep on hearing rumors of the things your best friends are saying about you, but you don't have to sit and listen while they are saying it, so long as there is a door."

Mrs. Sam Steward of Spencerville gave their son Deloss a surprise party on last Saturday evening in memory of his 16th. birthday. About seventeen of his young friends were present and an enjoyable evening was had. A two course luncheon was served.

Mrs. S. N. Olds died at the home of John Bishop in Bluffton, Ind., Monday afternoon, of old age. The corpse will be shipped to this place today noon on No. 16 and funeral will be preached by F. A. Dressel and the Lutheran church immediately after the train arrives. Burial in Riverside Cemetry.

To Our Subscribers

If you are in arrears for THE NEWS you will have to pay up or the paper will be discontinued. This action is not through choice of the publishers but the postoffice department has made a ruling to the effect that all papers not paid for in advance or within the year, will not be accepted as second class matter, but a larger amount of postage will have to be paid, which of course the publisher could not stand. This is a radical ruling, but we have nothing to do but comply with it. The new law was effective Jan. 1st., but a reasonable length of time has been allowed the publishers to get their books straightened up. We do not desire to stop anyone's paper, but we will be compelled to do so with some if they do not respond quickly.

We will in a few days send you a statement of your account and then if not settled for we will take other means. We have until April 1 to get our matter up and those who are not paid up will be "cut off." If you want to read THE NEWS, please act accordingly.

May Reorganize.

There is a prospect that the W. R. Holden Co. may be reorganized and a new company formed with a view of making it a co operative organization with a large number of stockholders. If the deal is consummated the shares sold will be for $100 each and each shareholder will receive six per cent dividend on his investment annually. In addition to this any surplus earnings above the regular six per cent dividend after all expenses are paid, will be distributed among the shareholders in accordance with the amount purchased by said stockholder during the year. The present firm will not ask for a large number of stockholders at the start, but will endeavor to secure about twenty-five and as the business develops new stock will be issued and new members will be invited to come into the organization. Mr. Holden has been investigating the workings of these co-operative enterprises and finds them very successful in many places. The project is only in its infancy yet and may not develop at all, but in case there should be an interest manifested, the present corporation will likely be reorganized on the co-operative plan.—News.

Obituary.

Lucia Palmer was born in Mercer county, Pa., on May 5, 1833 and died at her home near Coburn's Corners on January 25, 1908, at the age of 74 years 8 months and 25 days. She was united in marriage to George W. Wilmot in Mantua, Portage county, Ohio. Jan. 13, 1852. To this union was born nine children, eight sons and one daughter, two sons and the daughter dying in early youth. She moved to DeKalb county, Indiana, in October 1864, and united with the Coburn's Corners church by letter on December 31, 1854 She leaves to mourn her departure. six sons, twenty six grand children and nine great grandchildren, one brother and one sister.

She hath done what she could. Sister Wilmot was one of the dear faithful followers of the Blessed Master. She and her faithful companion were always found in the Lord's house every Lord's day when it was possible, winding their way through the woods in the early days, meeting at the old school house with their children, always filling their place and helping in every way they could. Sister Wilmot possessed a sunny disposition, always making her home pleasant for everyone who chanced to be there. Nearly ten years ago her faithful companion left her for his heavenly home. Since then she has been cared for by her children, who were faithful in ministering to her needs. She was patient in all her sufferings during her long illness. Indeed, all who knew her can say "Blessed are the dead, who die in the Lord."

Funeral services were held at the Coburn's Corners church by Elder Thomas, last Tuesday. Int rment at Alton cemetery. Beams & Baker, undertakers.

CARD OF THANKS.

Wedding Bells.

Miss Hazel Krabill, of North of Town, and Clarence E. Wyatt, of Fairview, Married.

A pretty, but quiet wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs Jacob Krabill, about two and one-half miles north of St. Joe at 7:0 o'clock, Saturday evening, February 1st, when their daughter, Hazel G., was united in marriage to Clarence E. Wyatt, the Elder F. A. Thomas of Newville, performing the ceremony, Miss Princess Thomas playing the wedding march After congratulations, Rev. and Mrs. Thomas sang a very appropriate selection, entitled "Love Shall Guide Thee." The guests were then invited to supper and all did justice to the culinary skill of Mrs. Krabill and her mother, Mrs Mitchell The bride is the eldest daughter of Jacob Krabill and wife and her attractive personalities has won for her many friends. The groom is the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs W. H Wyatt, who live north of Fairview. He is a genial and hustling young man and has followed farming for several years. The young people will be located on the Jerry Andrews farm after March 1st., Mr. Wyatt having rented it some time ago.

Those who were in attendance at the wedding were:—Rev. F. A Thomas wife and daughter, Princess of Newville; Fred Leighty and Miss Lora Hull of St. Joe, Earl E. Beeber and wife; Elroy A. Wilderson, Miss Effie Miller, and Mrs. Louisa Wyatt of Ft. Wayne; S. P. Kosht, wife and daughter Anna; Elijah Saylor, wife and son Fred; the groom's parents and son Harry; Mrs. Mary Catlin Mitchell, the bride's grandmother; the bride's parents and daughter Garcia.

The young people were awarded many useful and beautiful presents consisting of a book, medallion, 2 fruit dishes, berry dishes, water set, towels, bread plate, silver sugar shell, butter knife, set of dining chairs, set of silver knives and forks, set silver teaspoons, gold watch and chain, set of plates, scarf for sideboard, stand cover, sugar shell, set of silver spoons, oil painting. The bride's parents gave them a horse and cow. In spite of the weather the gathering was a most enjoyable one, and will long be remembered by those present. THE NEWS joins with the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt in extending congratulations, and may their life be one of prosperity, peace and happiness.

Held Meeting.

The farmers and merchants held a meeting at Curle's store Monday evening to make arrangements for the corn institute to be held here next winter. A large crowd was in attendance and all seemed to be in favor of the plans submitted. A committee was named consisting of Rolland Hearss, Fred Jenkins, Byron Widney, Alva Coburn and D. J. Baker to make a selection of varieties of corn, which is to be used in the test for exhibition Another meeting will be held in a short time so that all further information regarding contest may be given. Look out for it.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

All Sides and Conditions of Things are Shown. Nothing Overlooked to make it Complete.

Bullets for His Babies.

William H. Meutsch, a carriage maker at 419 Armitage avenue, Chicago, Ill., shot and killed one of his daughters, 5 years old, and fatally wounded two other children. The cause of the crime is not known, but, according to the police, Meutsch had recently quarreled with his wife several times because of the children. The carriage shop was beneath the rooms in which the Meutsch family lived, and the man called Gertrude, the oldest daughter, telling her to come to the carriage shop. As she stepped through the door Meutsch fired a bullet into her abdomen, killing her instantly. He then called Jennie, 3 years old, and shot her as she entered the room. William, the 2-year-old son, was the last victim to be called, and his father shot him just above the heart as he came in. The children were taken to a nearby hospital, where it was stated that both of them will die.

$100,000 Glass Factory Fire.

The Diamond Window Glass factory at Gas City, Ind., was destroyed by fire resulting in a loss estimated at $100,000. The fire originated by the bursting of a big tank filled with molten glass material and located in the center ofthe factory. Several box cars on the Pennsylvania side track near the factory were burned. The factory had been closed since April, 1907, and preparations had been made to resume work. It was desired to begin blowing glass next week and the material was being heated with this object in view.

Burned by Night Riders.

Near Fredonia, in Montgomery County, Tennessee, two large tobacco barns on the farm of W. E. Wall were destroyed by fire. The barns contained no tobacco. Wall is not a member of the Dark Tobacco Growers' Association and last summer his general merchandise store was burned, after a number of threats had been received, warning him to join the association. His plant beds were also scraped and the indictment of several prominent citizens followed, but they were acquitted.

Young Fiend Setnenced.

John Young Phenzee, colored, assailant of Mrs. W. B. C. Hershey, white, pleaded guilty at Columbus to a charge of attempt to kill and was sentenced to fifteen years in the penitentiary. Phenzee had been indicted on two charges, the other being an attempt to commit assault, but this latter indictment was nolled upon his agreement to plead guilty to the former. He sneaked into the basement of the woman's home and brutally assaulted her.

Gould Mansion is Burned.

King's Court, a residence built at Newark, N. J., some years ago by George Gould for his son Kingdon, was destroyed by fire. The building was valued at $500,000. Since its erection it had been occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lloyd Herbert. Neither Mr. Gould nor Mr. Herbert carried any insurance.

Official Gave Away Secrets.

A dispatch from Essen, Germany, says: An official of the Krupp Gun works, whose name is not given, was arrested here on the charge of betraying military secrets. It is declared that he sold the plans of certain guns which the Krupps are building for Italy.

General John Coburn Dead.

General John Coburn, former Congressman and a life-long resident of Indianapolis, Ind., died suddenly at his home, 1518 South New Jersey street, from an attack of heart failure. He was 83 years old.

Girl Dies of Burns.

Alice Wiley, aged 19, daughter of a farmer near Bloomington, Ind., died from burns received from the explosion of a gasoline stove in the home at Jasonville, where she was visiting recently.

WORK OF CONGRESS

In the Senate Thursday Senator Stone presented statistics of government deposits in national banks to show that the distribution of money during the recent currency stringency was not "equitable," as contemplated by the law governing the Treasury Department. He declared that the West and South were discriminated against, while New York and Boston were favored. Senator Teller followed with brief comment upon the action of the Secretary of the Treasury, declaring that the placing of money in New York City during the panic was fully justified. The Senate devoted the latter part of the session to a consideration of the bill to revise the criminal code, and adjourned until Monday. The urgent deficiency appropriation bill occupied the attention of the House to the exclusion of all other business. A surprise was sprung when Chairman Tawney of the appropriations committee warned the members that the country was confronted with the certainty of a $100,000,000 deficit unless the estimates for the next fiscal year should be cut down materially. A discussion on tariff revision was injected into the proceedings, in which leaders on both sides of the House tried to commit one another to a definite announcement as to whether, if successful at the November elections, there would be tariff legislation.

-:—:-

The Senate was not in session Friday. Although the urgent deficiency bill was technically up for consideration in the House, not a word pertinent to the bill was spoken. Under the privilege of general debate several members addressed the House on a variety of subjects, but the speech which attracted most attention was a criticism by Mr. Hitchcock of Nebraska of a political forecast by Gen. Charles H. Grosvenor of Ohio. The debate brought to their feet numerous Democrats, who sprang to the defense of Mr. Bryan, while Gen. Keifer of Ohio, supported by several other Republicans, undertook to refute all the arguments concerning Mr. Bryan's two campaigns. Adjournment was taken until Monday.

-:—:-

Greatly to the surprise of every one the subject of slavery was introduced in the Senate Monday. Secretary Taft was directly charged with having a knowledge of slavery in the Philippine Islands. The debate was made pertinent by the sections of the bill revising the criminal code of the United States, which provide penalties for dealing in slaves. Mr. Hale asserted that such provisions should be stricken out. Senator Heyburn declared that not only is there immoral traffic in white slaves, but that actual human slavery is still maintained in the Philippine Islands. The street railway systems of the District of Columbia and the financial question occupied the time of the House of Representatives. The latter subject was discussed by Mr. Fowler, chairman of the committee on banking and currency, in an exhaustive speech, in which he opposed bond-secured currency and the proposition looking to the establishment of a central bank.

-:—:-

The Senate Tuesday disposed of a large number of minor bills on the calendar, and resumed consideration of the bill to revise the criminal code of the United States. Senator Heyburn was anxious to continue consideration of the code bill, of which he is in charge, until more progress should be made, but adjournment was taken. National politics, international marriages and government expenditures formed the themes of discussion in the House. Incidentally it was the longest sitting of the House this session. The urgent deficiency bill was up for consideration, but in several instances it was ignored under the license of general debate. The presence of William J. Bryan in the lobby of the House furnished inspiration to Mr. Wallace of Arkansas for a vigorous speech. International marriages of American heiresses to titled foreigners were denounced by Mr. McGavin of Illinois.

-:—:-

The Senate was entertained Wednesday by a series of animated comments on the method adopted by Secretary of the Treasury Cortelyou in placing before the Senate his reply to the resolution calling for information relative to the operations of the Treasury Department in connection with the financial disturbance. The Secretary had had the introductory part of his reply printed and copies of the pamphlet were on the desks of all Senators, which was declared by Democratic Senators to be without precedent. The Senate devoted considerable time to passing minor bills on the calendar. The need of an American merchant marine as an auxiliary to the navy formed the principal topic of discussion in the House of Representatives during the consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. The debate was participated in by Mr. Littlefield of Maine, who questioned the legality of the provision of the bill appropriating $1,000,000 to supply a deficiency for coal for the navy caused by the transfer of the battle ship fleet from the Atlantic to the Pacific. He criticised Congress for its failure to make appropriations for a merchant marine. His remarks elicited from Mr. Fitzgerald, New York, the charge that the Republican party was responsible for that condition, while Mr. Sherley, Kentucky, maintained that the lack of a merchant marine, "a national disgrace," was due to Republican policies. The bill was still under consideration when the House adjourned.

PANAMA CANAL COST CAN'T BE ESTIMATED

Amount First Considered Necessary Has Been Increased and May Need Stretching Again.

IT'S ONLY A ROUGH GUESS NOW.

Colonel Goethals Expects to Make Forecast Next Year—Unknown Difficulties May Be Met.

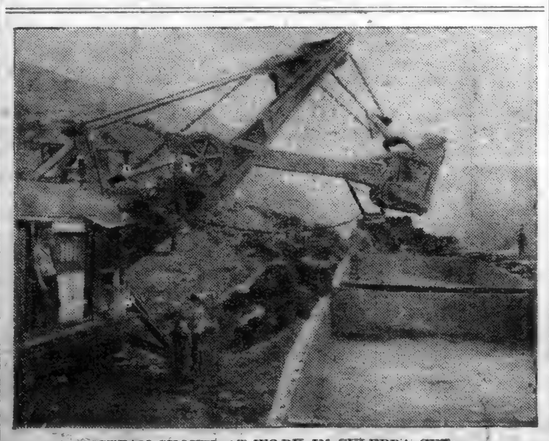
Washington correspondence:

The wonder is growing among Senators and Representatives on what basis the original estimators fixed the probable cost of the Panama Canal. There is a halfway suspicion that the first estimators didn't know their business or were afraid to give out a truth that they thought might be appalling. With the characteristic bluntness of a soldier Colonel George W. Goethals has said that he can only guess at the total cost of the canal, but that he believes it will not exceed $250,000,000, excluding the original purchase price.

As another has put it, "the estimated cost of the Panama Canal keeps pace in the ascending scale with the cost of living. Every year the price the United States will have to pay for the water way is marked up." First estimates put it as low as $140,000,000. Then came what was called an authentic estimate to the effect that the country would have to expend $184,000,000 before the canal could be completed. Colonel Goethals' guess is $300,000,000, and he is frank to say that the limit may have to be raised at least once again.

Has Appropriated Eighty Millions.

Up to the present about $80,000,000 has been appropriated by Congress for the canal work. July 1, 1907, $31,000,000 of the sum remained unexpended. When Colonel Goethals succeeded Mr. Stevens last March as engineer in charge he found that circumstances warranted an increase of the working force and an enlargement of the plan of the work. It was in August that the soldier-engineer told the Secretary of War that if the work was to be pushed at the rate at which it has been pushed since the army took charge the appropriation which had been made for the year ending June 30, 1908, would be used up by the first of the calendar year.



STEAM SHOVEL AT WORK IN CULEBRA CUT.

This bit of information, which was cheering to those who hoped for a speedy completion of the canal work, was given to President Roosevelt, who at once ordered Colonel Goethals not to stay his hand, but to go ahead at the same labor rate and incur a deficiency. The Colonel, like a good soldier, obeyed orders, and now the appropriation made last year, which supposedly was large enough to provide for the continuation of the work until July 1, 1908, is exhausted and an urgent deficiency bill calling for $11,000,000 is pending in the House.

The Secretary of War has told the Senate committee on interoceanic canals that the work was kept going at high speed and that the deficiency was incurred because it was his belief there was greater economy in going ahead than in lagging.

Of the increased cost of the canal over the original estimates the Secretary of War has said: "The widening of the locks in accordance with the request of the Navy Department has been approved, and it means an additional cost of about 10 per cent in the construction of the locks. The locks themselves as now projected will cost $52,000,000, and this means an addition of $5,000,000 to the price."

NEARLY BURIED ALIVE.

Man in Burial Casket for Twenty-Four Hours Now Getting Well.

William Young of Savannah, Mo., barely escaped being buried alive, regaining consciousness only an hour before the time set for the funeral. Young had been ill a long time, and a few days ago he apparently died. A physician was at his bedside, and he said the man was dead. The body was prepared for burial by an undertaker and placed in a casket.

Friends of the dead man went to the house to express their sympathy to the family, among the visitors being Rev. J. E. McLaughlin, pastor of the church to which the Youngs belong.

The mourners had assembled for the burial, and the time was only an hour distant when Rev. Mr. McLaughlin went into the room where the corpse lay to take a last look at his lifelong friend. While gazing at the face he thought he detected the twitching of a muscle. He looked again, and for the second time was sure he could see a slight movement.

The body of Young had been lying in the casket 24 hours and was cold. The minister feared that he had been mistaken, and not desiring to cause excitement among the people assembled for the funeral, went quietly out and summoned a physician, who soon found that Young was still alive. Then the preacher went out and announced that the funeral would be postponed. At that time Young was sitting up in his coffin and was seen by some of those in the next room. They fled from the uncanny sight.

Young was removed from the coffin and placed on a bed, and it is believed that he will fully recover.

Russian Reformer Reports.

Before the New York Civic Forum and a great audience at Carnegie Hall, over which Bishop Potter presided, Prof Paul Milyukoff delivered a message to the American people from the Constitutional Democratic party of Russia. Prof. Milyukoff, who is a leader of that party and a member for St. Petersburg in the present Duma, gave it as his candid opinion that instead of the establishment of a Douma having been the beginning of a rapid movement toward free forms of government, it had been in reality the high tide, and that there had been actual retrogression ever since. The Radicals had tried to rush matters only to meet crushing defeat from the government by the use of the military power. His party aimed at parliamentary power to limit that of the Czar. The liberties of the manifesto had never been recognized by the government, and in the two years since it was issued 18,274 persons had been condemned for political offenses, of which 2,217 were sentenced to death. The revolution had now become a battle of classes—the landholding classes against the peasants and workmen. A majority of the present Douma were elected by 19,000 landlords. Prof. Milyukoff came all the way from the Russian capital to make this one speech and had to start back in two days. He made a hasty trip to Washington to meet prominent Congressmen at a dinner given by Mr. Parsons of New York.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

The stand taken by the Chicago School Board forbidding the members of secret fraternities to take part in literary or athletic contests has now been upheld by the Appellate Court.

Because the faculty of Washington University, St. Louis, had expelled J. A. Allen, editor of the college paper, on account of an editorial scoring the professors, the student body voted to discontinue all college work in case their demand for the reinstatement of Allen was not acceded to.

The third great athletic stadium to be built by American universities has just been completed at Syracuse. It is 670 feet long, covers six and one-third acres and will seat 20,000 spectators comfortably. It is constructed of concrete and is modeled after the old Roman and Greek arenas.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Trade conditions in the Chicago district are summarized in the weekly review issued by R. G. Dun & Co. as follows:

In view of the effort to strengthen credits and the severe test from which business generally is emerging, it is not surprising that the commercial mortality again exhibits a comparatively large ratio. It is an indication, however, that the weak concerns no longer remain to disturb confidence. Other factors are mainly most encouraging and add to further revival in activity. Dealings at the banks now make the closest approach to those at this time last year, heavy settlements proceed smoothly, and the legitimate needs of borrowers are more readily extended. The discount rate is much easier, but the offerings of paper reflect no undue pressure to obtain funds.

Some further gain appears in the machinery and labor employed in manufacturing, although the effort to advance production is made slowly, but the indications constantly improve in iron, wood and leather branches. Prices bear a firmer tone in the principal raw materials, particularly hides, lumber and minor metals, and more inquiry from consumers is thought to mean an early addition to furnaces operated.

Developments in construction and building are not yet notably interesting, but the indications become brighter, and with receipts unusually light and yard stocks small, the market for lumber becomes more encouraging, especially for factory needs. Carshops run low on forward orders, but shipbuilding engages more help, and there is steady running in footwear, clothing, foundry and electric lines.

Weather conditions have favored sustained absorption of winter merchandise, and seasonable dealings appear in the leading retail and jobbing branches, with larger numbers of visiting buyers operating in the principal staples.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 39, against 47 last week and 24 a year ago. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 10, against 19 last week and 8 in 1907.

NEW YORK.

Trade and industry are still quiet, commodity prices have quite generally moved downward, collections are backward, an increased quantity of railroad equipment is reported idle, less satisfactory reports as to demand come from the iron and steel and coal industries and an increased disposition is noted to discuss wage reductions as an offset to restricting production.

Wholesale trade as a whole is slow to open, though heavy cuts in cotton goods by western jobbers, equaled or exceeded by eastern houses, have aroused interest and attracted buying in these kindred lines. Travelers on the road report buying to be of a filling-in character, sufficient merely to replace broken stocks, and a slow and late opening of spring trade is looked for.

Business failures for the week ending Jan. 23 number 408, against 431 last week, 252 in the like week of 1907, 276 in 1906, 228 in 1905 and 242 in 1904. Canadian failures for the week number 51, as against 44 last week and 18 in this week a year ago.—Bradstreet's Report.

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

CHAPTER VII.—(Continued.)

The old man was pale and nervous. The one weak point in his character was his affection for his son, an affection which he strove to hide under an austere manner, but which was none the less genuine. He had never before parted with him for any length of time, and he felt the wrench keenly. As to Ezra, he was flushed and excited at the thought of the new scenes which lay before him and the daring speculation in which he was about to embark. He flung himself into a chair and stretched his thick, muscular limbs out in front of him.

"I know as much about stones," he said exultantly, "as any man in London. I was pricing a bag of rough ones at Van Helmer's to-day, and he is reckoned a good judge. He said that no expert could have done it better."

"You deserve great credit for your quickness and perseverance," replied his father. "Your knowledge will be invaluable to you when you are at the fields. You will promise to be careful and to avoid quarrels and bloodshed."

"I won't get into any rows if I can help it," his son answered. "That's not my game."

"But if you think that there is no mistake, if your opponent is undoubtedly about to proceed to extremities, shoot him down at once, my dear lad, before he has time to draw. I have heard those who have been out there say that in such cases everything depends upon getting the first shot. I am anxious about you, and shall not be easy until I see you again."

"Blessed if he hasn't tears in his eyes!" Ezra exclaimed to himself, much astonished at this unprecedented occurrence.

"When do you go?" his father asked.

"My train leaves in an hour or so. I reach the steamer at Southampton about three in the morning, and she starts with the full tide at six. Well, good-by," said the young man, rising up and holding out his hand. "Keep your eye on Dimsdale and don't trust him."

"Good-by, my son, good-by!"

The old merchant was honestly moved, and his voice quivered as he spoke. He stood motionless for a minute or so until the heavy door slammed, and then he threw open the window and gazed sorrowfully down the street at the disappearing cab. His whole attitude expressed such dejection that his ward, who had just entered the room, felt more drawn towards him than she had ever done before. Slipping up to him, she placed her warm, tender hand upon his sympathetically.

"He will soon come back, dear Mr. Girdlestone," she said. "You must not be uneasy about him."

As she stood beside him in her white dress, with a single red ribbon round her neck and a band of the same color round her waist, she was as fair a specimen of English girlhood as could have been found in all London. The merchant's features softened as he looked down at her fresh young face, and he put out his hand as though to caress her, but some unpleasant thought must have crossed his mind, for he assumed suddenly a darker look and turned away from her without a word. More than once that night she recalled that strange spasmodic expression of something akin to horror which had passed over her guardian's features as he gazed at her.

CHAPTER VIII.

The anxious father had not very long to wait bfore he heard tidings of his son. Finally there came a long epistle from Kimberley, the capital of the mining district, in which the young man described his eight hundred miles drive up country and all the adventures which overtook him on the way.

"This place, Kimberley," he said in his letter, "has grown into a fair-sized town, though a few years ago it was just a camp. Now there are churches, banks, and a club in it. There are a sprinkling of well-dressed people in the streets, but the majority are grimy-looking chaps from the diggings, with slouched hats and colored shirts, rough fellows to look at, though quiet enough as a rule. Though Kimberley is the capital of the mining fields, it is not there that the actual mining is done. That goes on in a lot of little camps, which are dotted along the Vaal river for fifty or sixty miles. The stones are generally bought at the camp immediately after they have been found, and are paid for by checks on banks in Kimberley. I have, therefore, transferred our money to the South African bank here. Keep your eyes on that fellow Dimsdale, and let him know nothing of what is going on."

He wrote again about a fortnight afterwards, and his letter, as it crossed the Atlantic, passed the outward mail, which bore the news of the wonderful diamond find made by an English geologist among the Ural Mountains.

"I am now on a tour among the camps," he said. "To-morrow I push on to Delparte's Hope and Larkin's Flat. I am well received wherever I go, except by the dealers. They hear that I am a London capitalist, and fear that I may send up the prices. They little know I bought stones all the way along, but not very valuable ones, for we must husband our resources."

One day news arrived of the great discovery of diamonds among the Ural Mountains. The first intimation was received through the Central News Agency in the form of the following telegram:

"Moscow, August 22.—It is reported from Tobolsk that an important discovery of diamond fields has been made amongst the spurs of the Ural Mountains, at a point not very far from that city. They are said to have been found by an English geologist, who has exhibited many magnificent gems in proof of his assertion. These stones have been examined at Tobolsk, and are pronounced to be equal, if not superior, in quality to any found elsewhere. A company has been already formed for the purpose of purchasing the land and working the mines."

The crisis at the African fields was even more acute than had been anticipated by the conspirators. Nothing approaching to it had ever been known in South Africa before. Diamonds went steadily down in value until they were selling at a price which no dealer would have believed possible, and the sale of claims reached such a climax that men were glad to get rid of them for the mere price of the plant and machinery erected at them. The offices of the various dealers at Kimberley were besieged night and day by an importunate crowd of miners who were willing to sell at any price in order to save something from the general ruin which they imagined was about to come upon the industry. Some, more long-headed or more desperate than their neighbors, continued to work their claims and to keep the stones which they found until prices might be better. As fresh mails came from the Cape, however, each confirming and amplifying the ominous news, these independent workers grew fewer and more faint-hearted, for their boys had to be paid each week, and where was the money to come from with which to pay them? The dealers, too, began to take the alarm, and the most tempting offers would hardly induce them to give hard cash in exchange for stones which might prove to be a drug on the market. Everywhere there was misery and stagnation.

Ezra Griddlestone was not slow to take advantage of this state of things, but he was too cunning to do so in amanner which migh call attention to himself or his movements. In his wanderings he had come across an outcast named Farintosh, a man who had once been a clergyman and a master of arts of Trinity College, Dublin, but who was now a broken-down gambler with a slender purse and a still more slender conscience. He still retained a plausible manner and an engaging address and these qualities first recommended him to the notice of the young merchant. A couple of days after the receipt of the news from Europe, Ezra sent for this fellow and sat with him for some time on the verandah of the hotel talking over the situation.

"You see," said Ezra, "I have the name here of having a long purse and of knowing which way the wind blows. If I were to be seen buying, others would follow my lead, and prices would soon be as high as ever. Now what I purpose is to work through you, d'ye see? You can go the round of the camps and buy in stones on the quiet without attracting much attention. Beat them down as low as you can, and give this hotel as your address. When they call here they shall be paid, which is better than having you carrying the money round with you."

The clergyman scowled as though he thought it was anything but better. He did not make any remark, however.

"You can get one or two fellows to help you," said Ezra. "You know who would be likely men. I can't expect you to work all the camps yourself. Of course, if you offer more for a stone than I care to give, that's your lookout, but if you do your work well you shall not be the loser. You shall have a percentage on business done and a weekly salary as well."

"How much money do you care to invest?" asked Farintosh.

"I'm not particular," Ezra answered. "If I do a thing I like to do it well. I'll go the length of thirty thousand pounds."

Farintosh was so astonished at the magnitude of the sum that he sank back in his chair in bewilderment. "Why, sir," he said, "I think just at present you could buy the country for that."

Ezra laughed. "We'll make it go as far as we can," he said. "Of course you may buy claims as well as stones."

"And I have carte blanche to that amount?"

"Certainly."

"All right, I'll begin this evening," said the ex-parson, and picking up his slouched hat, which he still wore somewhat broader in the brim than his comrades, in deference to old associations, he departed upon his mission.

Farintosh was a clever man, and soon chose two active suordinates. These were a navvy, named Burt, and Williams, a young Welshman, who had disappeared from home behind a cloud of forged checks, and having changed his name had made a fresh start in life to the south of the equator. These three worked day and night buying in stones from the more needy and impecunious miners, to whom ready money was a matter of absolute necessity. Farintosh bought in the stock, too, of several small dealers whose nerves had been shaken by the panic. In this way bag after bag was filled with diamonds by Ezra.

He was becoming somewhat uneasy in his mind as to how long the delusion would be kept up, or how soon news might come from the Cape that the Ural find had been examined into and proved to be a myth. In any case, he thought that he would be free from suspicion. Still, it might be as well for him by that time to be upon his homeward journey, for he knew that if by any chance the truth leaked out there would be no hope of mercy from the furious diggers. Hence he incited Farintosh to greater speed, and that worthy divine with his two agents worked so energetically that in less than a week there was little left of five and thirty thousand pounds.

Ezra Girdlestone had shown his power of reading character when he chose the ex-clergyman as his subordinate. It is possible, however, that the young man's judgment had been inferior to his powers of observation. A clever man as a trusty ally is a valuable article, but when the said cleverness may be turned against his employer the advantage becomes a questionable one.

It was perfectly evident to Farintosh that though a stray capitalist might risk a thousand pounds or so on a speculation of this sort, Rothschild himself would hardly care to invest such a sum as had passed through his hands without having some ground on which to go. Having formed this conclusion, and having also turned over in his mind the remarkable coincidence that the news of this discovery in Russia should follow so very rapidly upon the visit of the junior partner of the House of Girdlestone, the astute clergyman began to have some dim perception of the truth. Hence, he brooded a good deal as he went about his work, and cogitated deeply in a manner which was once again distinctly undesirable in so very intelligent a subordinate.

These broodings and cogitations culminated in a meeting, which was held by him with his two sub-agents in the private parlor of the Digger's Retreat. It was a low-roofed, smoke-stained room. Round a solid, old-fashioned table in the center of this apartment sat Ezra's staff of assistants, the parson thoughtful, but self-satisfied, the others sullen and inquisitive. Farintosh had convened the meeting, and his comrades had an idea that there was something in the wind. They waited for him to speak.

"Well," the ex-clergyman said at last, "the game is nearly over, and we'll not be wanted any more. Girdlestone's off to England in a day or two."

Burt and Williams groaned sympathetically. Work was scarce in the diggings during the crisis, and their agencies had been paying them well.

"Yes, he's off," Farintosh went on, glancing keenly at his companions, "and he takes wth him five and thirty thousand pounds' worth of diamonds that we bought for him. We have to do the work, and then are thrown aside as you would throw your pick aside when you are done with it. When he sells out in London and makes his pile, it won't much matter to him that the three men who helped him are starving in Griqualand."

"Won't he give us somethin' at partin'?" asked Burt, the navvy. He was a savage looking, hairy man, with a brick-colored face and overhanging eyebrows. "Won't he give us nothing to remember him by?"

"Give you something!" Farintosh said with a sneer. "Why, man, he says you are too well paid already."

"Does he, though?" cried the navvy, flushing even redder than nature had made him. "Is that the way he speaks after we makes him? It ain't on the square. I likes to see things honest an' above board betwixt man an' man, and this pitchin' of them as has helps ye over ain't that."

Farintosh lowered his voice and bent further over the table. His companions involuntarily imitated his movement, until the three cunning, cruel faces were looking closely into one another's eyes.

"Nobody knows that he holds those stones," said Farintosh. "He's too smart to let it out to any one by ourselves."

"Where does he keep 'em?" asked the Welshman.

"In a safe in his room. This," said Farintosh, taking a small key from his pocket, "is a duplicate, and will open the safe. I took a moulding from his key while I was speaking to him."

The navvy laughed hoarsely. "If that don't lick creation for smartness!" he cried. "And how are we to get to this safe? It would serve him right if we collar the lot. It'll teach him that if he ain't honest by nature he's got to be when he deals with the like of us. I like straightness, and I'll have it!" He brought his great fist down upon the table to emphasize this commendable sentiment.

"It's not an easy matter," Farintosh said thoughtfully. "When he goes out he locks his door and there's no getting in at the window. There's only one chance for us that I can see. His room is a bit cut off from the rest of the hotel. There's a gallery of twenty feet or more that leads to it. Now, I was thinking that if the three of us were to visit him some evening, just to wish him luck on his journey, as it were, and if, while we were in the room something sudden was to happen which would knock him silly for a minute or two, we might walk off with the stones and be clean gone before he could raise an alarm."

"And what would knock him silly?" asked Williams. He was an unhealthy, scorbutic-looking youth, and his pallid complexion had assumed a greenish tinge of fear as he listened to the clergyman's words. He had the makings in him of a mean and dangerous criminal, but not of a violent one—belonging to the jackal tribe rather than to the tiger.

Burt brought his great fist down upon the table and laughed again in his bushy red beard. "You can leave that to me, mate," he said.

"Meet here at eight o'clock to-morrow night," said the leader. "We can get it over by nine, and we will have the night for our escape. I'll have the horses ready, and it will be strange if we don't get such a start as will puzzle them."

So having arranged all the details of their little plan, these three gentlemen departed in different directions, Farintosh to the Oriental Hotel to give Ezra his evening report, and the others to the mining camps, which were the scenes of their labors.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Christian Epple was scalded to death at the Blount Plow Works in Evansville by the bursting of a steam pipe.

At Evansville, William York, a young farmer, was accidentally killed while hunting by the discharge of his gun.

Frank Harlen, a young man near Warsaw, was sentenced to one hour in jail and fined $13 for stealing clover-seed.

The Hailey City Laundry at Madison was placed in the hands of a receiver. Assets, $4,000; liabilities, $3,000.

The body of Charles E. Johnson, of Muncie, has been found in the White river, near Indianapolis. He disappeared two weeks ago.

Tony Berger, aged 67 years, one of the best known carpenters of Jasper, fell from a scaffold recently and died several hours afterwards.

John Millikan, said to have been the oldest Odd Fellow in Indiana, is dead at Crown Point at the age of 94 years. He joined the Odd Fellows at Laporte in 1847.

Mrs. Matthew Tuttle, 65 years old, was fatally burned at Noblesville, her dress catching fire from the explosion of a coal oil lamp. She lived but a few hours after the accident.

Prof. W. S. Brown, head of the department of botany and horticulture at Winona Agricultural Institute, has tendered his resignation, to take effect March 1. He will go to his farm at Olean, N. Y.

The 3-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Kendle, living near Princeton, is in a serious condition as the result of a grain of corn lodging in the windpipe. The family will not submit to an operation.

Made desperate because of lack of work, 100 men, women and children raided the railroad yards at South Bend and, with baskets and sacks, carried away 15 tons of coal before they were routed by the police.

The city of South Bend has opened a municipal soup house, where the unemployed are served with hot soup, crackers, boiled potatoes, bread and frankfurts free of charge. A policeman is in charge of the soup house.

Merrill Lewis, the 12-year-old son of James C. Lewis, a barber, was drowned while skating at Fountain Park. Lorin Courtright, one of his companions, of the same age, dived after him, but the body was not found for nearly an hour.

The Bengal tiger that has been terrorizing citizens in several counties in the southern part of the State was seen three miles north of Evansville recently by Allen Goldsmith, a farmer, who shot at the animal several times but missed.

The will of Benjamin Dake, which was filed for probate at Shelbyville, gives all his estate, valued at $100,000, to his six children. To his daughter Hattie he gives $100 to be used in keeping the graves of his wife and himself green.

Charles Hoffman, formerly a saloonkeeper, is dead at his home in Evansville. The death is attributed to a wound inflicted several months ago by Warren Sibrel, who is now serving a term in the Indiana Reformatory because of the crime. Sibrel, while intoxicated, walked into Hoffman's saloon and shot him.

Harry Russell, 17 years old, living near Patoka, loaded his father's old musket with an extra large charge of powder and went out to hunt a panther which is said to be lurking in the swamp at Snyder's Gulch. His dog scared up something in the woods and young Russell fired, thinking the panther was upon him. The gun burst and the young man was knocked to the ground. His face was badly powder burned and a piece of the hammer of the gun struck him squarely between the eyes, bruising the flesh and cutting a gash two inches long. His hands were also bruised and torn.

On the farm of William Thomas, near Logansport, there is a well that is attracting attention. At certain times in the night and day, roaring sounds come from the well, seemingly from the very bowels of the earth. The sounds are weird and at night the people give that neighborhood a wide berth. Many timid people would prefer passing a cemetery at night to going by this well at the same hour. The cause is a mystery. The well was dug twenty-five years ago, and the story runs that Seth Powers, a farm laborer, was accidentally killed nearby while the well was being drilled. Superstitious farm folks say that the sound is the cry of Seth. Some inexplicable freak of nature, however, is really set down as the cause. The sounds were first heard four years ago. They continued for a month and more and then died away till recently. Now they are heard night and day.

The hotel building at South Milford was partially destroyed by fire recently.

Charles H. Trippeer, well known pioneer farmer, is dead at his home east of Peru.

Earl Watson, the 7-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Watson, of Muncie, ate heartily of popcorn and developed appendicitis, which ended his life.

The Hudson meat market at Linton was recently robbed of 200 pounds of meat and $28 in cash, the spoils being carried out of the front door and carted away.

The Merchants' Hotel at Elkhart, operated by William H. Riblet, has been placed under the care of a receiver on pentition of Brusman & Holdeman, creditors. O. H. Sewitzer is in charge.

George Gribbin, carrier on a rural route out of Martinsville, clipped a branch from a blackberry bush that was almost in leaf. The buds were swelling and bursting. The warm weather had fooled nature.

Christian Born, well known Whitley County man, is dead at Columbia City as the result of injuries sustained some days ago when he fractured his skull in a fall from a load of hay. Later double pneumonia developed.

An employment bureau has been opened by the Charity Organization in Elwood, and communication is being had with large cities, where contractors may have need of common labor. There are 2,000 idle men now in the city.

Freddie Colby, the 9-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Colby, while playing in the school yard at Sheridan, where the boys were putting the shot, was hit in the shoulder with the ball. The shoulder was crushed and his collar bone was broken.

Mrs. Elizabeth Stafford, 72 years old, wife of Sydney Cornelius Stafford, 75 years old, is suing Mrs. Margaret Orr, 62 years old, claiming $5,000 damages for alienation of her husband's affections. Mr. and Mrs. Stafford were married six years ago. All live in Milan.

The late James Randall Meriweather of Fort Wayne, burned to death in his cottage at Rome City recently, carried $20,000 life insurance, besides two accident policies giving his widow $10,000, while one of his policies also guarantees her $10 a week during life.

Charles E. Wright, accused of stealing hogs from William and Edmond Coyner, near Clarkshill, has been found guilty. The accused is a member of a prominent family, and his father, Gil A. Wright, called as a witness during the trial, was so prostrated by the revelations that he had to be removed to his home.

James B. Compton, superintendent of the "D" shovel handle factory at Newcastle, was seriously injured while directing the unloading of logs. He was struck by a log, which fell across his head and chest. His right jawbone was broken, his face bruised, and it is feared he is injured internally. Compton is well known in Knights of Pythias circles.

While Harry Culbertson, of Morocco, was working in his repair shop, there was an explosion of gasoline, followed by a fire, greatly damaging the building and contents. Culbertson had an open can with a large amount of gasolife in his hand at the time of the explosion, but the gasoline was not ignited, and he escaped to the open air. Claude Graves, Elmer Padgelt and Charles Gorman, firemen, were injured while putting out the fire, but not seriously.

Unseasonable freaks are now more surprisingly numerous than in any previous season in the history of the county. Frogs have been heard croaking for several weeks; meadow-larks were heard in the meadows recently and some fruit trees are putting forth buds. J. O. Carpenter, of Brazil, killed a large black snake which he found crawling in the public road near his home south of the city. Staunton reports that flies swarmed in the homes and on the porches of that place.

An Old Fiddlers' contest was an event at Clifford, under the auspices of the Modern Woodmen, in which James Collins, of Clifford, won the honors. Collins is 90 years old, but when the award of the judges was made he was so overjoyed that he executed a jig in front of the surprised audience, and then waving his fiddle over his head, he emitted several whoops which would have done credit to a grand opera singer. Mr. Collins says that he aided in laying the foundation for the first State Capitol at Indianapolis. The fiddlers were limited in selections to "The Song of the Wild Horse," "The Irish Washerwoman," "Jim in the Rag Weed Patch," "Sally Waters," and "The Cross-Eyed Dog."

The Mother's Appeal

Mother—
O, Mr. Saloonkeeper,
I beg you don't sell
The stuff to my boy
That may send him to hell,
Remember how dear
To my heart he must be,
And let him tonight
Return sober to me.

Saloonkeeper—
They licensed me, madam,
To sell him the stuff,
The fool ought to know
When he's taken enough.
You can't expect me
To refuse all who come,
My business is to sell
Drinkers their rum.

Mother—
O, Mr. Saloonkeeper,
I beg of you think,
How much it may mean
If you sell him the drink.
His soul is in peril
Don't wreck it for gain.
Don't make it another
Young life you have slain.

Saloonkeeper—
Go yonder, and talk
To the men who have said
I may sell—to the voters
Who stand at the head
Of the Churches where you pray,
Don't be whining away
In this place they have licensed—
Go yonder, I say!

Mother—
O, Mr. Saloonkeeper,
They say you may sell,
But whose is the sin,
If you send him to hell?
He buys at your bar
What must bring him to shame,
For all that may follow,
God holds you to blame.

Saloonkeeper—
No, Madam, the sin
Is not mine at the first,
Nor for it shall I be
The only man cursed;
The men who permit me
To sell are the ones
To settle with God,
If I ruin their sons.

Something Worth Knowing.

Alcohol is a poison. It is claimed by some that it is a food. If so, it is a deadly food. The daily, regular use of alcohol, even in moderation, will lead to chronic alcoholism. One is poisoned less rapidly by the constant use of beer than by drinking wine, gin, whisky and brandy, for there is a smaller per cent of alcohol in beer than in the other intoxicants named.

Alcohol is one of most common causes of insanity, epilepsy, paralysis, diseases of the liver, kidneys and stomach, and dropsy and tuberculosis.

A father and mother who drink alcoholic beverages will have weak children born to them, often dying in infancy. And if they grow up they are liable to become victims to nerve disorders, such as St. Vitus' dance and epilepsy.

Prohibition in Georgia.

Georgia's new perpetual lid was slammed down January 1st. Here is the police court record of Atlanta for a single day, January 4th:

Cases tried for drunkenness, Jan. 4, 1907, 323.

Cases tried for drunkenness, Jan. 4, 1908, none.

The Atlanta Constitution, which led the fight against the prohibition law, says on January 5th:

"It was a transferred Decatur street which Atlantans saw yesterday afternoon and last night. The change was not so apparent in the number of people on the street, but was found in the fact that it was a sober people intent upon business and legitimate amusement who walked up and down this busy thoroughfare. Not a single person white or negro, was seen under the influence of intoxicants.

"At police headquarters the officers declared that the afternoon and night reminded them of former Sundays rather than Saturday night, so few were the occasions for making arrests.

"Up to midnight (Sunday morning) the last arrest for drunkenness was made last Thursday night.

Neglected Colds Threaten Life

(From the Chicago Tribune)

"Don't trifle with a cold," is good advice for prudent men and women. It may be vital in the case of a child. Proper food, good ventilation, and dry, warm clothing are the proper safeguards against colds. If they are maintained through the changeable weather of autumn, winter and spring, the chances of a surprise from ordinary colds will be slight. But the ordinary light cold will become severe if neglected and a well established ripe cold is to the germs of diphtheria what honey is to the bee. The greatest menace to child life at this season of the year is the "neglected cold." Whether it is a child or adult, the cold slight or severe, the very best treatment that can be adopted is to give Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is safe and sure. The great popularity and immense sale of this preparation has been attained by its remarkable cures of this ailment. A cold never results in pneumonia when it is given. For sale by H. Milliman, St. Joe; F. R. Bowman, Spencerville.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy a Favorite.

"We prefer Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to any other for our children," says Mr. L. J. Woodbury of Twining, Mich. "It has also done the work for us in hard colds and croup, and we take pleasure in recommending it." For sale by H. Milliman, St. Joe; F. R. Bowman, Spencerville.

Masterly! The audience was pleased with apt illustrations and anecdotes. His stories possessed what most lecture anecdotes lack—newness and freshness.—Amsterdam Evening Record. Widney's Opera House, Feb. 7. Admission 25c.

Greatest Lumber Cut.

40 per cent, while that of white oak has fallen off more than 38 per cent. To day yellow pine leads all other woods in amount cut, while Douglas fir—and this will be a surprise to many—comes second. Since 1889 the cut of Douglas fir has increased 186 per cent. Louisiana is the foremost yellow pine State, with Texas, Mississippi, and Arkansas following in order. Washington produces by far the greatest amount of Douglas fir.

A comparison of the lumber-producing States shows that since 1899 there have been many changes in their relative rank. Washington, which in 1899 stood sixth, while Wisconsin, which eight years ago led all others, is now third. In the same period Oregon, Louisiana, Mississippi, Idaho, and California made great strides as lumber-producing States, though, on the other hand, the amount produced in Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Georgia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Indiana, and Ohio fell off anywhere from 29 to 54 per cent.

The highest-priced native woods are walnut, hickory, and ash, and the cheapest are larch and white fir. From the fact, however, that since 1899 the average increase in the price of lumber has been 40 per cent, it will not be long before cheap woods are few and far between.

Figures upon the lumber cut of the United States are contained in Circular 122 of the Forest Service, which can be had upon application to the Forester, U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Cough Caution

Never, positively never poison your lungs. If you cough—even from a simple cold only—you should always heal, soothe, and ease the irritated bronchial tubes. Don't blindly suppress it with a congesting poison. It's strange how some things finally come about. For twenty years Dr. Shoop has constantly warned people not to take cough mixtures or prescriptions containing Opium, Chloroform, or similar poisons. And now—little by little though—Congress says "Put it on the label, if poisons are in your Cough Mixture." Good! Very good! Hereafter for this very reason mothers, and others, should insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. No poison marks on Dr. Shoop's label—and none in the medicine, else it must by law be on the label. And it's not only safe, but it is said to be by those that know it best, a truly reliable cough remedy. Take no chance then, particularly with your children. Insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Compare carefully the Dr. Shoop package with others and note the differences. No poison marks there! You can always be on the safe side by demanding

"ALL DEALERS"

Are You Sick?

Much sickness is due to a weak nervous system. Yours may be. If it is, you cannot get well until you restore nerve strength. Your nervous system is nature's power house; the organs of your body get their power from it. If the power is not there, the action of the organs is weak, and disease (sickness) follows. Dr. Miles' Nervine cures the sick because it soothes the irritated and tired nerves and gives the system a chance to recuperate. Try it, and see if you do not quickly feel its beneficial effect.

"I was given up to die by a leading doctor. Got one of Dr. Miles' books and found that Dr. Miles' Nervine fit my case. From the very first dose I took I got better. I am better now than I have been for years, and do all my own work on the farm. That's what Dr. Miles' Nervine has done for me, and I am glad to recommend it to others."

MORTUARY RECORD.

By request of Simeon H. Maurer.

Mary Barbara, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Baltz, was born at Orangeville, DeKalb County, Indiana, March 23rd, 1870, and departed this life at Mary Thompson Hospital, Chicago, Ill., January 20th, 1908, aged 37 years, 9 months and 27 days. When a year old she moved with her parents to a farm near Hurshtown, Allen County, Indiana, where they resided until 1882, when they moved to Spencerville. Here she became acquainted with S. H. Maurer, to whom she was united in marriage on December 31st, 1891, Rev. J. S. Nelson performing the ceremony. The affliction which was indirectly the cause of her death was of long duration, at times the pain would be very severe and almost unbearable. She could suffer and endure, however, and never complain, such was her indomitable courage. Indeed, her outward expressions would hardly credit the belief she was so ill. She was the "Cloud" to herself—we saw but the "Silver Lining." With a philosophical view she looked at death, the pale boatman, to her, had no terrors. The love and kindly ministries of relatives and friends and the best of medical science that could be procured by her husband could not bame death. To her, if it was the will of the Supreme Physician she should live it was well, if otherwise it was well. To her, we have grounded reasons for believing, that death was a release, a victory.

That she would accept the sting of death rather than the sting of this mortal flesh, that she would rather be in the presence of a merciful Christ, "where pain shall be no more," is self evident to her nearest relatives and husband, for she had chosen her funeral songs—songs, as she said, "Would not make sadness sadder." She requested that the same pall-bearer who bore a late beloved aunt to a final resting place should bear her form also.

And realizing that her husband had never spared time nor money that she might be well again, she requested that her funeral expenses might be as inexpensive as possible. All this is indicative to us that all she expected that would be returned to the home of a sad and faithful husband, would be a lifeless and pain racked body and that her soul, which pain cannot destroy, would take its silent flight to the home of a merciful God.

When a mere infant she was baptized, Rev. J. G. Kissell administering. On December 25th, 1884, under the pastorate of Rev. John F. Winter, she united with the German Reformed Church a few miles southeast of this place. On April 10th, 1887, she transferred her membership to the Evangelical Lutheran Church of this place under the pastorate of Rev. J. S. Nelson, where she retained her membership until after her marriage, when she wished to enjoy a church home with her husband and likewise she joined the Hopewell U. B. Church, near their former home. Upon removing with her husband to Spencerville in 1904, she, with her husband, joined the Evangelical Lutheran Church under the pastorate of Rev. W. M. Habey, where she remained a faithful member until death.

She leaves a husband, father, mother, two sisters, a brother and many friends and relatives to mourn her departure.

The text was Jeremiah 15:9—"Her sun is gone down while it is yet day."

The funeral services were held at the Lutheran Church of Spencerville on January 24th, by her pastor, Rev. F. A. Dressel, assisted by Rev. E. W. Brick and Rev. Sweeney. Interment was made in Spencerville cemetery.

Dies Suddenly.

Early Wednesday morning the people of Butler were shocked by the sad intelligence that Mrs. Addison Kline, one of our city's most highly respected women, had passed away at her home on Broadway.

On Sunday, Jan. 19, Mrs. Kline gave birth to twin babies—a boy and a girl the latter living only a few hours. The boy survived until last Sunday morning.

Mrs. Kline was seemingly recovering from the shock of her sad misfortune and all had hopes of her speedy recovery. But early Wednesday morning she suddenly grew worse, her husband being awakened about 4:00 a. m. by her heavy breathing. A physician was hurriedly summoned and an effort was made to revive her, but the condition of her heart was such that no good could be done. She passed away peacefully, retaining all her faculties until the final dissolution.

Mrs. Kline's maiden name was Hattie Grill, and she first saw the light of day at Spencerville, Ind., being united in marriage to Addison Kline about fifteen years ago. They lived for some years in Spencerville and Auburn, moving to Butler nearly three years ago, having during this time conducted a restaurant at this place. The deceased endeared herself to all by her charming personality and ladylike ways. She had all the virtues of a pure woman, and will be sadly mourned by the husband and daughter, Maud, and the great host of sympathizing friends in the community.

Had she lived until Friday she would have attained her thirty-fifth birthday.

The funeral will be held at her late home Friday at 2 p. m. conducted by G. H. Myers. Interment at Auburn. —Butler Record.

Greatest Lumber Cut

More lumber was cut in the United States last year than in any other year in its history. The enormous amount of 37,550,736 board feet was produced, and the mill value of this was $621,151,888 In addition, there were produced 11,858,260,000 shingles, valued at $24,155 555, and 3,812,807,000 lath, valued at $11,490,570. On the whole, it is safe to say that the present annual lumber cut of the United States approximates 40 billion feet, and that the total mill value of the lumber, lath, and shingles each year produced is not less than $700,000,000. These figures give some idea of how vast is the lumber industry and how great is the demand for its products.

A glance at the kinds of lumber produced shows very clearly the passing of white pine and oak, one the greatest softwood and the other the greatest hardwood which the forest has ever grown. Since 1899 the cut of white pine has fallen off more than

An Old Odd Fellow Passes Away.

Benjamin C. True, the oldest member of the Odd Fellow lodge of the state of Ohio, died at the home of his niece, Mrs. Harriett Metzger, near Harlan, Ind., Saturday. He was aged ninety-nine years and was nearly blind at the time of his death. He was prominent in Odd Fellow circles, having in 1843 been a member of the grand lodge of New York, and in 1844 and 1845 of the supreme grand lodge of the United States, and was for many years the only surviving charter member of Eagle lodge No. 100 I. O. O. F. He was also a prominent Mason. Mr. True was justice of the city of Cincinatti for twelve years and practiced law for a time.

He comes of a family noted for longevity, his mother and a sister having attained the age of ninety-six. One of his ancestors was condemned to death in 1692 for being a witch. His grandfather stood sentry over Major Andree, at the time of the latter's execution.

At the time of the Chicago fire, in 1871, Mr. True was instrumental in inaugurating a relief, in the city of Cincinnati, to aid the sufferers, and also in the same year when the northern part of Michigan was devastated by fire. He kept a general store in Fostoria, O., from 1864 up to 1886, when he moved to Allen county, Ind. where he has since resided.

More proof that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound saves woman from surgical operations.

Mrs. S. A. Williams, of Gardiner, Maine, writes:

"I was a great sufferer from female troubles, and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound restored me to health in three months, after my physician declared that an operation was absolutely necessary."

Mrs. Alvina Sperling, of 154 Cleybourne Ave., Chicago, Ill., writes:

"I suffered from female troubles, a tumor and much inflammation. Two of the best doctors in Chicago decided that an operation was necessary to save my life. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound entirely cured me without an operation."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

Why don't you try it?

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

Strange Fog Signal.

When fogs prevail in Boston harbor, the attention of passengers on the Nantasket Beach line of steamers is attracted by a faint metallic sound which might be mistaken for the sound of a bell. But it is not the clanging of a bell which the passengers hear. Suddenly through the mist there appears ahead, like a specter, a large tripod, from the apex of which is suspended a big steel triangle. It is this which causes the strange sound and signals vessels as to how to guide their course through the difficult channel of the fog.

Popular Pulpit

AGNOSTICISM IS COWARDLY.

By Rev. Dr. D. C. Garrett.

"For I know whom I have believed."

Knowledge of God is as tangible as that of time and space. God does not have to be proven. He is the condition of every thought.

The subtle skepticism of to-day assumes the attitude of agnosticism. In its popular but superficial form it has affected numbers, who find thereby an easy escape from thinking about spiritual truths, a release from all religious responsibilities.

As a matter of philosophy, agnosticism is the doctrine of the unknowable. All knowledge, it is said, is relative. We can only know an object by its lacking what something else possesses or possessing what some other lacks. As the infinite or absolute cannot be thus limited, it is unthinkable, and therefore unknowable. The agnostic professes to believe only phenomena or appearances; he will not admit the reality of anything behind or through appearances. That which cannot be proven by strict inductive reasoning must be relegated to the realm of the unknowable.

I would have you notice in the first place that there is a reverent, even a religious, kind of agnosticism. Indeed, the origin of this philosophy lay in the attempt to strengthen faith. If God is unknowable, there is all the more reason for reliance upon testimonies in the shape of belief. It has been a remarkable transition of agnostic philosophy from Mansel and Sir William Hamilton to Herbert Spencer. Even Spencer postulates a great creative energy.

The first answer to aggressive agnosticism is that it is a cowardly compromise.

Another stand Christianity takes against the new skepticism is that it is philosophically contradictory, and, judged at the bar of reason, is condemned as false. To say that the absolute or God is unknowable and in the same breath to hold that one may know the unknown is unknowable is an absurdity.

To hold that an object is unknown; that is, to some persons or at a certain point of time or growth, or as regards all of its characteristics, is logical; but to declare it is unknowable is the grossest dogmatism, contradicted by reason and experience.

Still another reply to unbelieving agnosticism is that it is scientifically untrue and practically untenable. It is flatly contradicted by facts of everyday life. Against the assumption of not believing what one does not know is the whole progress of mankind. The man of business believes what he does not know when he buys a certain stock of goods on faith that they will bring a certain profit. The business world would be paralyzed if for a single day there was universal doubt as to ordinary credit, personal honor and integrity.

The man of science believes what he does not know, and there has not been a single discovery or invention in the line of natural sciences that has not been based on belief in not the unknowable, but the unknown.

Columbus believed what he did not know when he set sail for the unknown world.

Finally, Christianity challenges agnosticism by proclaiming man's need of religion and showing how the religion of Christ, not exclusively, but in the highest and fullest form, answers this need. Frederick Harrison, not a Christian, but a positivist, which makes the argument all the stronger, has given agnosticism the worst drubbing it has ever received in language which, if coming from the pulpit, might be considered intolerant.

Says Mr. Harrison, one of the ablest thinkers of his day: "Agnosticism says to the churches that it declines to believe in your religion. But the necessity for some religion remains, just as it did before. And until agnosticism has told us what religion we are to believe, or why religion is henceforth superfluous, it will remain the private opinion of isolated and cultivated minds in more or less comfortable surroundings. This explains the mysterious fact that, in spite of the hailstorm of criticism which is incessantly poured into every bastion, fort and outwork of the churches, they still continue to reply to the fire of the enemy, and are still full of enthusiastic defenders. He only destroys who can replace. And the agnostic position ex hypothesi is a pure negation. The profound instinct of all healthy spirits recognizes that a state of no religion, of deliberate acquiescence in negation, or non-interest on principle in these dominant questions, is weak, unworthy and even immoral."

But there are other phenomena that appeal to the animal senses. How about religious phenomena? It is too late to scout the experience of countless intelligent and noble-hearted persons. It is futile to deny the reality of moral and spiritual phenomena. While thought transference, telepathy and other psychological phenomena attest the reality of a force other than that material, religious phenomena prove the existence of a logos, or mind that looks with its thousand eyes through nature and finds a repose in a logos within us.

There is a knowledge of God, not absolute, for we know in part, but a knowledge as sure as that we have of space and time. God does not have to be proven. He is the very condition of all thought, the necessary premise to any knowledge of self or nature.

We know God, too, by appearances. The phenomena attending the life of Jesus Christ furnish incontrovertible proof. On the basis of the conceded genuineness of portions of the New Testament narrative, we know enough of God to make it possible to call Him Father. It is not enough to believe. We can also know. The highest philosophy of to-day says we do know God by immediate perception. And the man who does not try to cultivate this spiritual faculty by which God is known has no right to deny the power to others. If a man is blind or deaf, let him not go around bragging about it. Let him rather be ashamed and keep still.

LIFE THROUGH FRIENDSHIP.

By Henry F. Cope.

"Greater love hath no man than this that a man lay down his life for his friends."—John xv., 13.

It often seems that the laying down of life is a particularly attractive theme to people who have no lives worth laying down. They like to talk of the cross and the shame and the shedding of blood, and they succeed in satisfying their impulse for doing these things by simply describing them.

Yet the great voices of almost all religions speak of the laying down and pouring out of a life as the price of the salvation of the world. In every one of us there is something that answers and thrills to the thought of sacrifice; the great have been those who have given themselves gloriously.

Every normal man desires the salvation of the world, that is, the realization of its highest possibilities, its perfection on the pathway of progress, and he asks, What does this mean, this laying down of a life for the lifting up of the world?

The salvation of the world is simply the salvation of the people in the world. If natural objects are defiled we have defiled them; if society is deranged it is people, persons, who have deranged it. The new heaven will not come by letting down golden streets; it must come by lifting up the people to golden ideals.

We do well to labor incessantly for better conditions; but not to forget that conditions spring out of character. What measure of civic or national rightness we may demand depends on the standards of rightness already within us. Every problem we have goes back to persons; every improvement we make grows out of personality.

The need of the world is not laws, nor logic, but life. If you would lift it you must give a life, must pour out life. Without the shedding of blood there is no putting away of the things that debase and hinder; there is no salvation for humanity without the putting of our blood and bone and sinew into its service.

Life is the only power that can make life. The new life of society can come only by vital processes. Our lives, the deep inner lives, are creating other lives. We owe our moral lives to the gift of life from friends, from those who come nearest to us. Friendship is the vehicle for transmitting the higher life.

The best thing you can give the world is a good life. It adds more to the world's wealth than any other thing. What we are is our actual eternal contribution to society. Every right life means that humanity has so much more vitality and spiritual health with which to live; every evil life means so much disease, so much of a drag on the world.

The living of a true life is in itself the giving of that life to the world, the outgoing of all good qualities in ourselves and their importation to others. The contact and infusion with character we cannot escape. They who live lay down their lives for their fellows as well and as truly as they who die. Death, even the martyr's and the hero's, is only an incident in the course of this outgiving life.

Most of all men need the grip of the hand of a fellow and the nearness of a life on which they can draw. To be true friend to any man is to give him the greatest gift we have to impart. To walk in comradeship with our fellows, being true always to the best in ourselves, is to help them best to that which is great and true. To walk ourselves in friendship with things infinite and holy is to find eternal life.

Boy's Shirt Waist.

Every boy requires shirt waists, and usually a generous number is found necessary for his happiness and well being. Here is a model that can so easily and readily be made at home that it is quite certain to win approval. The tucks at the front give quite the effect of a grown man's shirt, while the box plaits at the back relieve the severity at that point. Again, it allows a choice of the attached collar that is rolled over, leaving a slightly open

Over Blouse or Jumper.

Each new variation of the over blouse seems a bit more attractive than the last, and each one is certain to find a place in the wardrobe. This one is novel in many of its features and is graceful and becoming, yet by no means extreme. The modified kimono sleeves give breadth, while they are shapely and becoming, and the tucks are so ar-

GROOMING COUNTS

But it cannot make a Fair Skin or a Glossy Coat.

Women with good complexions cannot be homely. Creams, lotions, washes and powders cannot make a fair skin. Every horseman knows that the satin coat of his thoroughbred comes from the animal's "all-right" condition.

Let the horse get "off his feed" and his coat turns dull. Currying, brushing and rubbing will give him a clean coat, but cannot produce the coveted smoothness and gloss of the horse's skin, which is his complexion. The ladies will see the point.

LICE IN POULTRY

Borax Spray a Safe Preventive—Simple, Cheap, Harmless to Fowls.

"20 Mule Team" Borax was a good thing to rid poultry of lice. I had used so much inflammable Lice killers that my Poultry Houses were regular fire traps. I gave my S. C. W. Leghorn house a good spraying just two months ago. Since I have caught several hens and I found no lice. I am rid of lice and shall continue to use "20 Mule Team" Borax as a spray, also as a wash.

FEARFUL BURNING SORES.

Boy in Misery 12 Years—Eczema in Rough Scales, Itching and Inflamed—Cured by Cuticura.

"Cuticura has put a stop to twelve years of misery I passed with my son. As an infant I noticed on his body a red spot and treated same with different remedies for about five years, but when the spot began to get larger I put him under the care of doctors. Under their treatment the disease spread to four different parts of his body. During the day it would get rough and form like scales. At night it would be cracked, inflamed and badly swollen, with terrible burning and itching. One doctor told me that my son's eczema was incurable, and gave it up. I decided to give Cuticura a trial. When I had used the first box of Cuticura Ointment there was a great improvement, and by the time I had used the second set of Cuticura Remedies my child was cured. He is now twelve years old, and his skin is as fine and smooth as silk. Michael Steinman, 7 Sumner Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., April 16, 1905."

PANTRY CLEANED.

A Way Some People Have.

A doctor said:—

"Before marriage my wife observed in summer and country homes, coming in touch with families of varied means, culture, tastes and discriminating tendencies, that the families using Postum seemed to average better than those using coffee.

"When we were married two years ago, Postum was among our first order of groceries. We also put in some coffee and tea for guests, but after both had stood around the pantry about a year untouched, they were thrown away, and Postum used only.

"Up to the age of 28 I had been accustomed to drink coffee as a routine habit and suffered constantly from indigestion and all its relative disorders. Since using Postum all the old complaints have completely left me and I sometimes wonder if I ever had them."

You can adopt or defeat the policies of presidents, curb the ambition of the demagogue, and in the last analysis you can declare war or peace, punish monopoly, reward patriotic endeavor, and almost change the face of the world! You are an American sovereign in your own right, and you know it!"

"It's a durned lie!" indignantly answered the honest old farmer. "I'm the only greenbacker in the whole township, and I hain't got influence enough to wad a popgun!"—Chicago Tribune.

Nothing Too Good For the American People

There is NOTHING TOO GOOD for the American people—that's why we started to make Cascarets Candy Cathartic. The first box made its appearance in 1896, and the enthusiastic endorsement of the people has been bestowed upon Cascarets ever since.

The sale today is at the rate of OVER A MILLION BOXES A MONTH, proving that the American people recognize, that what is BEST FOR THEM is none too good.

Why this enormous patronage?

The answer is simple: Cascarets are pure, clean, sweet, mild, fragrant, harmless but effective little tablets for the treatment and cure of Constipation and all Bowel Troubles. They are put up in neat little enamel boxes, easy to buy, easy to carry (in vest-pocket or purse), easy to take and easy of action, always reliable, always the same, they "work while you sleep" and wake you up feeling fine in the morning.

They not only regulate the movement and stimulate the muscular walls of the bowels, but they keep the ENTIRE CANAL CLEAN and antiseptic, forcing out and destroying all disease germs that breed in the accumulated filth unless promptly and regularly discharged. Therefore, they are a great preventive of disease, and may be taken continuously as a precautionary measure.

The new Pure Drugs Act, adopted by Congress on June 30, 1906, and in effect January 1, 1907, is a GOOD LAW and means better and PURER drugs for the American People. We endorse it and will live up to it in SPIRIT and LETTER,—an easy task, as we have always been actuated by the same principles and no changes are required in our formula or package.

We adopted OUR OWN PURE DRUG LAW in 1896 when the first box of Cascarets came on the market and have lived and worked and produced under it ever since.

To-day, after a record of nearly 100,000,000 boxes sold, Cascarets STAND the greater in PURITY, QUALITY and MEDICINAL MERIT than any other preparation for Bowel trouble in all the world.

This should be a great argument for any one, to try Cascarets AT ONCE, and be healthier and happier for it. Some people have CHRONIC CONSTIPATION with all the horrors derived from it; others have HABITUAL CONSTIPATION from carelessness and neglect, but nearly EVERYBODY has OCCASIONAL CONSTIPATION, which, if not promptly taken care of is liable to result in its degeneration into the worse forms and cause great suffering and perhaps death.

Cascarets, if taken patiently and regularly, will remedy all of these awful troubles, but if taken promptly at the very first sign of an irregularity of the Bowels, will act as the FINEST PREVENTIVE ever discovered and will keep all the machinery running in good order. 733

We advise you to get a little 10c box of Cascarets TO-DAY and carry it in your purse or vest pocket. Take one when you feel anything unusual about your bowels. Your own druggist will sell you the little box, under GUARANTY of satisfaction or money refunded. All druggists, 10c, 25c, 50c.

George Baker and wife will occupy the house vacated by Wm. Keeler.

Little Andry Wilson, who has been quite sick with the croup, is some better.

Will Keeler will move on the Sherer place, west of Fairview, in the near future.

Mrs. Mary E. Baker and daughters called on Mrs. Merritt Baker, Thursday afternoon.

ROY KINSEY.

Sunday was a very bad day to be sleigh-riding especially if you would up set, if you don't believe this ask Dr. Neighswander.

Sam Moor and family of Michigan but formerly of this place have returned here to live. They are living on his mother's place and it is understood Mrs. Moor will live with her children for the present and Grover will leave this week, to learn telegraphy. We wish him success.

He is a master of oratory of unusual ability. Seldom have we listened to such an eloquent and forceful speaker. He kept his audience in rapt enjoyment and deep thought.—Daily Northwestern, Oshkosh, Wis. At Widney Opera House, Feb. 7.

The Jumping Off Place.

Consumption had me in its grasp; and I had almost reached the jumping off place when I was advised to try Dr. King's New Discovery; and I want to say right now, it saved my life. Improvement began with the first bottle, and after taking one dozen bottles I was a well and happy man again," says George Moore of Grimesland, N. C. As a remedy for coughs and colds and healer of weak, sore, lungs and for preventing pneumonia New Discovery is supreme. 50c and $1.00 at H. Milliman's druggist. Trial bottle free.

Caught at Last.

Returns last night from Woodburn with copious notes of evidence volunteered by people of the village who were afraid to talk before and with assurances by large numbers of citizens of the little city of their belief that the right men have been arrested for the murder of Columbus Croy, the town marshal. Prosecutor Albert E. Thomas last night decided to make public the fact that Fred LaDuke, one of the four men in custody, has made a complete confession, incriminating the other three prisoners, Miller, Stout, and Baker, and wholly corroborating evidence previously gathered by the officers.—Saturday's Gazette.

Garrett and Butler "Drys" Win Out.

The hardest saloon fight ever known in this county came to an end last Friday night at eleven o'clock when the "drys" of Garrett filed their remonstrances in wards 1 and 2 of that city by a safe majority. In ward 1 out of a total of 264 voters they have 143 signers. In ward 2 out of a total of 234 voters they have 153 signers. The Anti-Saloon workers are quite elated over the fact that they have 35 over the needed majority of 118.

Butler remonstrances were filed late in the afternoon. Ward 1 having a a majority of seven voters and in ward 2 a like majority.

The matter will be brought before the commissioners during the February session, and as yesterday was liquor day it was probably introduced then. It is thought that an effort to produce flaws in the remonstrances will be made. If none are found Garrett and Butler are dry towns.

We would like to see every town and city in the county go dry before the close of the year 1908 and present indications point to this.

Isaac Meese has been very sick with pneumonia the past week.

Grippe is sweeping the country. Stop it with Preventics, before it gets deeply seated. To check early colds with these little Candy Colds Cure Tablets is surely sensible and safe. Preventics contain no Quinine, no laxative, nothing harsh or sickening. Pneumonia would never appear if early colds were promptly broken. Also good for feverish children. Large box 48 tablets, 25 cents. Vest pocket boxes 5 cents. Sold by all dealers.

COUNTY LINE.

Mrs. Solomon Goldsmith is convalescent at this writing.

4 degrees below zero and a stormy day, worst winter day of the season.

Manees Daube and wife are visiting the latter's brother, Henry Rakestraw and wife.

Will McCann has been seriously ill for the past week but is improving at this writing.

Protracted meeting at Hopewell church is progressing nicely and with good results.

Ground hog day was clear and there was no time during the day that the old groundhog could not have seen a shadow.

Rev. and Mrs Barten went to Fort Wayne Thursday. Rev. Barton expects to take work in the conference, this year.

W. T. Wyatt and wife spent a few hours with Milton Simanton at St. Joseph hospital. Milton seems to be gaining rapidly.

Protracted meeting at Mt. Olive is well attended and much good work is being done. Rev. Hornaday is earnestly working for the salvation of souls.

Master Walter Cook was accidentally scalded Saturday. Dr. Shook of Spencerville was called. His injuries are not serious, but will be painful for some time.

Capt. Wm. Hollopeter and wife returned from Illinois, where they have been spending a few weeks with their daughter Grace and family, Mr. and Mrs. Don Rundals.

Mrs. Simanton spent last week with her husband at the St. Joseph hospital. There is good hopes of his recovery, and we trust that he may return to his home in a few weeks.

Guss Kistler's house burned Sunday evening shortly after dark. Fire caught from chimney. The household goods were all saved. Doors and windows were taken off. Goods all taken to the home of his father.

R. R. Wyatt returned from Knox, Stark county, Ind., Saturday evening. The day was very stormy and the corn show was small and only a few could attend. 62 samples of boys' corn was shown. The quality was only fair for this season. We spent Sunday with G. W. Burtner of Butler Center, and called on Milton Simanton in the evening and found him cheerful and feeling much improved.

Farmers in this neighborhood are short on corn and long on stock, W. P. Johnston, Dan Moore, Grover Moore, W. H. Rennecker, and others buying corn last week.

Mrs. Roy White is much improved at this writing and expects to be out in a few days. Her brothers, Wesley and Warner Bradfield of Garrett and Lima, Ind., visited her last week.

An oyster supper was given at the home of Frank Siebert last Sunday night. Those present were Chas. O. Krise, Dessie Muhn, Bolly Muhn, Sherd Platner and family. A fine time was enjoyed by all.

We wish all to know that it takes much worse weather than we had last Sunday night to prevent the pastor of this church from coming to fulfill his duty. We think if he is so earnest in his work, so interested in our welfare, we ought surely to be interested enough to come and help him by our presence when possible.

The prediction last week came true Saturday night at six o'clock when Clarence Wyatt and Hazel G. Krabill of this place were united in marriage at the home of the bride's parents. From a personal acquaintance of about ten years with both, we can say without flattery, that no more respected and worthy young couple can be found in this community and they deserve the good wishes of all who know them, which cannot be justly said of many.

Bessie Bartlett was a visitor with friends here, Sunday.

The fourth number of our lecture course will be given at the Widney Opera House, next Friday night, Feb. 7. This number will be a lecture by S. A. Long, on the subject "Lightning and Toothpicks." Mr. Long is a speaker of great ability and pleases wherever he appears. His speech will be full of wit, wisdom, and eloquence. Don't miss this opportunity of hearing one of the greatest orators on the platform. Admission 25 cents.

"Health Coffee" is really the closest Coffee Imitation ever yet produced. This, the finest Coffee Substitute ever made, has recently been produced by Dr. Shoop of Racine, Wis. Mrs. A. Vanzile is very poorly at this writing.

F. B. Bowman and wife spent Sunday in St. Joe.

Mr. John Beams has been seriously ill, but better at this writing.

A sled load of young people attended service at Hopewell Saturday evening.

Quarterly meeting convened at the Methodist church Sunday and Monday.

Mr. Wilson, wife and children spent Sunday with their mother, Lydia Jane Steward.

W. P. Steward spent Sunday at home. He has a fine position as assistant barber in Butler.

The ice will all be harvested this week and the crop is much better than last year being about eight in.

Mrs. Geo. Benninghoff and daughter Mildred and husband took dinner with Mrs. Jack Beams. Before going home they bought their stove and furnishings, expecting to go to housekeeping one half mile from her mothers, Thursday.

In our lecture course a few years ago, Ora Samuel Gray lectured here on the subject "Three P's in a Pod" and created such a favorable impression that the committee secured him for the fourth number of this season's course, which came Tuesday evening of last week. He gave a charming lecture on "Three C's in a circle" He has a force of expression and the gift of natural eloquence, that at once captivates his audience, his faith in God and man makes him see the sunny side. And being intensely eager to promote the reign of righteousness his lecture appealed to the good. In his hearers, especially the young, for them, surely, because of his coming, life will be richer and hope brighter, and a firmer resolve to get more out of life than a mere existence. Mr. Gray will be heartily welcomed here, should he ever return. He also complimented the committee in being so fortunate in securing the "Temple Quartette" which will be our next and last number Feb. 18, being one of the finest quartette in the Lyceum Bureau and would be a rare treat, long to be remembered, by those who would be fortunate enough to hear them.

Benninghoff and daughter, Letha Enzor, Millie Enzor, Ova Enzor, Bird Enzor, Rev. and Mrs. F. E. Thomas and Howard Beuninghoff, partook of a bountiful dinner. The same guests attended the infare at the home of W. H. Engor the following day. Mr. and Mrs. Enzor were the recipients of many costly and beautiful presents.—Newville Correspondent to Auburn Dispatch.

Entertained.

One of the pleasant social events of the winter occured at the home of H. M. Widney on Saturday evening, Feb. 9th. When friends and neighbors numbering fifty-four gathered at their spacious home, northeast of town.

Some of the merry makers came "en masque" this feature of the program being to perpetrate a surprise upon the host, it being intended to make him guess the identity of each one so disguised. But Mr. Widney anticipated this surprise in advance and was enshrouded in a make-up that made the best costume of the maskers look like "thirty cents."

Much merriment was aroused over the various costumes however, also concerning the identity of those with in them and after this had subsided the make-ups were removed. Games and music then occupied the attention of the guests until eleven o'clock, when the hostess ushered them to the dining room where they sat down to a sumptious repast consisting of oysters and other delicacies. Supper having been served, the guests for a short time engaged in social conversation and then repaired to their various homes feeling that they had indeed spent an enjoyable evening and conceeding the host and hostess to be entertainers of the first rank.

A GUEST.

Obituary.

Vincent L. Dilley was born in Guernsey Co., Ohio, May 5, 1848 and departed this earth life. Feb. 7, 1908, aged 59 years, 9 months and 2 days.

He came to DeKalb county, Ind., with his parents in the fall of 1855 He was married to Sarah A. Maurer, June 6, 1869. To this union were born four daughters and two sons, all of whom remain to mourn his departure.

He was a faithful consistent member of the Lutheran church of St. Joe, being an elder of the church at the time of his death. He was truly a good man in all walks of life. A devoted wife, four daughters, two sons, an aged father, one brother, three sisters and many friends remain to mourn their loss.

Moses Hilterbrand was born in Littlepark, York Co. Pa., October 19. 1820, and died near Coburn's Corners February 6, 1908, aged 87 years, 3 months and 17 days When 13 years old he came with his family to Ashland Co., Ohio, where he grew to manhood. He was united in marriage to Maria Zieglers, Dec. 7, 1848. To them were born eight children, one son and seven daughters. In 1854 he moved to DeKalb county, Ind., on a farm one mile south of Concord where they lived untill nineteen years ago, when he moved to Coburn's Corners, where he spent the remainder of his days Seven years ago he came to make his home with his daughter Sarah and her family. At the age of eighteen he united with the Lutheran church, of which he remained a member until he came to this county when he joined the Methodist Protestant church at Concord, from which he never severed his connection. He leaves to mourn his death, one son, four daughters, twenty-four grand children and five great grand children. Three daughters and his beloved wife preceded him to the better world. May they finally all meet where separation never takes place.

Funeral services were held at the Coburn's Corners church, Rev. S. Heininger officiating. Beams & Baker, undertakers.

Sad Accident.

Friday afternoon about one o'clock, the residents of St. Joe and vicinity were startled by the news that Vincent Dilley, living on the Swineford farm north of town, had been struck by No. 7, the fast train going west on the B. & O, crossing in the west part of town. As soon as possible a number of people were upon the scene, a sled secured quickly and the injured man removed to Dr. Bowman's office when, as they were carrying him in, he breathed his last. His wife was notified of the sad accident and in a short time he was removed to his home.

Mr. Dilley was on his way to town on business and it is supposed that he did not hear the train until it was too late. Indications shows that the horse saw the train when nearing the track, and, whirling, started up the the track. The rig was entirely demolished and Mr. Dilley carried about 50 feet while the horse laid over 100 feet from where it was struck.

The funeral services were held in the Lutheran church Tuesday forenoon, Rev. Dressel preaching the funeral, assisted by Rev. S. Heininger of this place, and Rev. Hill, and burial at Spencerville. Beams & Baker, funeral directors. This was beyond a doubt, the largest funeral ever in St. Joe. Mr. Dilley was an upright, truthful and honest man and was known by many people.

Dr. Bowman and son Ray had a narrow escape for their lives Monday evening. They had been called to David Roper's and when they were about to cross the railroad near the grist mill and they stopped to see if a train was coming Not seeing any they started across. As the horse was over the track they noticed No. 6 coming and the horse wheeled around upsetting the buggy and throwing them out. The horse stopped immediately and no further damage was done.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

All Sides and Conditions of Things are Shown. Nothing Overlooked to make it Complete.

Dr. Keene's Life in Danger.

Dr. T. Victor Keene, of Indianapolis, Ind., former State Bacteriologist, who has lately made a specialty of hydrophobia treatment, is himself inoculated with a deadly poisonous virus that came from a brain of a mad dog. For two weeks Dr. Keene has been taking daily treatment from two physicians, who have been injecting serum into his blood in the hope of counteracting the effects of the poison. Dr. Keene became inoculated in an unusual way. While making some experiments with the brain of a dog that that died of rabies he punctured the flesh of his hand. He was handling a sharp bone and the point of the bone penetrated his flesh through the rubber gloves he was wearing.

Demented Woman Kills Children.

Mrs. Elizabeth Stevens, of Haverhill, Mass., killed her daughter, aged 10, and her son, aged 3, cutting their throats with a razor. When arrested Mrs. Stevens declared she thought it was for the best that the children should die. Mrs. Stevens was at one time in an asylum for the insane and the police believe she had a sudden recurrence of the old mental trouble.

Sleeping Girl Wakes Up and Weds.

Miss Maud Snow, the noted sleeping girl of Kokomo, Ind., who lay thirteen weeks in a trance, has married Oliver Ulsefer. Miss Snow was the puzzle of the medical fraternity, having no known disease and being fed while she slept. She has never had a recurrence of the mysterious condition.

THAW IS DECLARED NOT GUILTY BUT CRAZY

Second Trial of Young Pittsburg Millionaire Ends in His Acquittal by Jury.

PRISONER SENT TO A MADHOUSE

Close of the Famous Case Which Has Long Interested Two Continents.

"Not guilty—on the ground that he was insane at the time of the commission of the act charged in the indictment."

This was the verdict in the Thaw case. Justice Dowling immediately ordered the young Pittsburg millionaire committed to the Matteawan asylum for the criminal insane until he can convince a lunacy commission that his discharge would not imperil the public safety.

When the words "Not Guilty" fell from the lips of the foreman of the jury, the most dramatic scene ever witnessed in a New York court room was enacted. Thaw, who had sat all through the trial, apparently wholly indifferent to what was going on, leaped from his seat. He could not restrain his emotions and tears streamed down his cheeks as he shook the hands of his counsel and thanked them over and over again.

The prominence of the Thaw family, socially and financially, the circumstances surrounding Harry Thaw's marriage to Evelyn Nesbit, artists' model and chorus girl, and the tragic climax when he fired the bullets into the breast of the man he declared wronged his wife, all tended to attract great interest to the events following the tragedy, and from one end of the country to the other the proceedings of both trials have been watched with unabated interest.

Comparison of the two trials shows a notable difference in the conduct of each. In the first trial Thaw's chief counsel was Delphin M. Delmas, noted criminal lawyer from California. Delmas made his defense the "unwritten law" and insanity. District Attorney Jerome introduced at first only such witnesses as were necessary to prove that Thaw killed White.

The defense then urged that Thaw was insane at the time of the killing, and offered Evelyn Thaw's testimony to show that the story she told Thaw of her treatment by White drove her husband temporarily insane and caused him to kill White.

The defense also introduced the testimony of alienists, two of whom swore Thaw was suffering from a "brain storm" when he fired the fatal shot.

Jerome during rebuttal caused a sensation by declaring he believed Thaw was then insane. He got the court to appoint a lunacy commission. This body decided Thaw was sane, and the trial then proceeded to its conclusion.

In the trial just closed the line of defense was altogether different. Martin W. Littleton, who replaced Delmas as chief counsel for Thaw, based the defense solely on insanity. The trial began on Jan. 6 and the testimony ended Jan. 28.

WORK OF CONGRESS

The reading of the President's message concerning the employers' liability act, the granting of injunctions in labor cases and other matters of a general nature concerning corporations was the chief feature of the Senate proceedings Friday. The message received careful attention. The Senate ordered 10,000 copies printed. The remainder of the day was devoted to routine business and a further consideration of the bill to revise the criminal laws of the United States. The first reading of the bill was concluded. The Senate adjourned until Monday. An unusual and almost unprecedented scene was enacted in the House of Representatives as the result of the reading of a special message to Congress by the President, urging additional legislation in the matter of relations of labor and capital and of corporations and the public. The vigorous language of the document brought forth storms of applause, first on the Democratic side of the House, then on the Republican, and culminating in a general demonstration by the entire body. After passing 288 pension bills, the Indian appropriation bill was discussed. Its consideration had not been completed when the House adjourned until Monday.

-:—:-

Senator Piles of Washington Monday delivered an eloquent appeal in favor of an appropriation by Congress of $700,000 for a government exhibit at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition, to be held in Seattle next year. The day in the Senate was chiefly devoted to a consideration of bills on the calendar, several of which were passed. Three of the giants of the House had their innings Monday. Technically the Indian appropriation bill was under discussion, but legislation was relegated to the background while national politics occupied the stage. Before the political question cropped out the House, with next to the largest attendance of the session present, with but one dissenting voice, passed a general widows' pension bill granting a flat pension of $12 a month to the widows of all honorably discharged soldiers of the United States who have not heretofore received the benefits of the pension law and an increase of $4 a month for those who have under the act of June 27, 1890. The bill involves the expenditure of more than $12,000,000 annually. The political debate was opened by Mr. Townsend of Michigan, who, in a prepared speech, claimed for the Republican party credit for all national legislation in the last fifty years of vital interest to the public. In this he was vigorously disputed by Mr. Cockran of New York. Mr. Hepburn followed, defending the President's message, and said that condemnation of it had come only from the great malefactors of the age "and the gentleman from Ohio," meaning Senator Foraker.

The Senate Tuesday passed the urgent deficiency bill, carrying an appropriation of over $24,000,000. The large deficiency appropriation for the navy brought out considerable discussion on the subject of executive departments making expenditures not provided for in appropriations. Deficiency appropriations for the Panama canal gave rise to Democratic criticism of the publication of a paper by the Canal Commission at Panama, and incidentally Senator Teller declared that he believed the lock canal at Panama would some day be declared a failure, and that a sea level canal would take its place. The Senate devoted two hours to consideration of the criminal code bill.

President Roosevelt's recent message to Congress on the relations of capital and labor and of corporations and the public again was the theme of discussion in the House of Representatives. So great was the demand for time that general debate on the Indian appropriation bill, which is the pending business, was extended for four hours. Interest in the proceedings centered in a speech by John Sharp Williams, the minority leader, who, while lauding the President for some of his sentiments, expressed the belief that others were dangerous. Mr. Williams spoke for nearly two hours. His remarks on the financial question prompted a lengthy discussion of that subject by McHill, of Connecticut, in which he opposed the Aldrich financial bill. Other speakers were Messrs. Bonygne, of Colorado, Nye, of Minnesota, and Macon, of Arkansas, the latter urging the passage of his bill prohibiting dealings in futures in agricultural products.

Senator Beveridge of Indiana delivered an appeal to the Senate Wednesday to adopt his bill providing for a nonpartisan tariff commission, a plan which he declared conformed to modern and business ideas on this subject. Several Democratic Senators spoke briefly on the general subject of the tariff. Tariff revision and the President's recent special message to Congress again were the main topics of discussion in the House. As has been the case for nearly a week, the Indian appropriation bill ostensibly was before the House, but no word was spoken in regard to it. A long speech by Sereno Payne of New York, the majority leader, was considered important because of his assurances that a tariff revision plank would be incorporated in the Republican national platform of this year. He credited Mr. Bryan with going about the country accusing President Roosevelt of grand or petit larceny in purloining his ideas. Other speakers were Messrs. Thomas of North Carolina, Cox of Indiana, Hardy of Texas and Nelson of Wisconsin.

ROOSEVELT WARNS OF NATIONAL PERIL

Special Message Declares Attempt Is Being Made in High Places to Block Legislation.

BAND TO DEFEAT REFORMS.

President Replies to Those Individuals and Corporations Who Have Attacked the Administration.

An organized effort by certain wealthy men to discredit the administration in its crusade against unlawful methods of trusts is charged by President Roosevelt in a special message sent to Congress. The President says the purpose of these men is to cause a reaction of sentiment and prevent the legislation needed to carry out the reforms sought. "The only way to counteract the movement," says the message, "is to make clear to the public just what they [the men referred to] have done in the past and what they are seeking to accomplish in the present."

As if to give point to these statements the President refers to the recent heavy fines inflicted on the Standard Oil Company and the Santa Fe Railroad Company for rebating and then discusses at length the statements issued by both concerns denouncing the action of the courts, which were scattered broadcast. Answer is made to the criticism that fines are inflicted against wealthy individuals and corporations instead of prison sentences. The President says the wrong-doer is sent to prison where it is possible to do so. He refers to the Gaynor and Greene case and "the misapplication of funds in connection with certain great banks in Chicago," where this has been done.

In reply to the cry that his policy hurts business, Mr. Roosevelt says: "The business that is hurt by the movement for honesty is the kind of business it pays the country to have hurt."

In discussing remedies for corporation abuses the President says the common law is not enough and the national and State governments must work together to attain the results needed. He asserts that the apologists and defenders of corporate wrong-doing who oppose Federal action are proving false to the people and laying up a day of wrath for the interests they seek to protect.

On the subject of railroad rates and control of interstate commerce, the President urges that authority be given the Interstate Commerce Commission to pass upon rates of its own initiative and to stop a proposed advance in rates pending an investigation. The remedy for stock watering the President sees in a law giving the Federal government supervision over the issuing of stock.

A suggestion beyond anything the President formerly made is that the Federal government should assume control over the physical operation of railways to the extent of fixing schedules for perishable commodities. While these reforms are asked in the interest of the public and the shipping, the message says the restrictions proposed should not prevent capital from paying liberal returns. Amendment of the Sherman law on a comprehensive plan to include the operations of other concerns than railroads doing an interstate business is recommended.

The first part of the message is devoted to the relations of capital and labor, chief attention being given to the employers' liability law and labor injunctions. A new employers' liability bill to avoid the defects of the law recently declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court is urged. In this connection the President recommends the passage of a comprehensive act providing for compensation by the government to employes who are injured on duty. Suits to compel payment of damages, the message says, should be unnecessary.

Abuses of labor injunctions are discussed by the President, who takes the position that while abolishing the process of injunction would be unwise the "heedless and unjust" use of such court orders occasionally works wrong and Congress should give careful study to the subject with a view to amending the law.

Paragraphs from the Message.

Even though it were possible, I should consider it most unwise to abolish the use of the process of injunction.

The "business" which is hurt by the movement for honesty is the kind of business which, in the long run, it pays the country to hurt.

Apologists for great corporations that oppose federal action are false to the people and are laying up a day of wrath for the corporations themselves.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

While the month just closed was conspicuous for drastic measures in restoring credit and reducing merchandise to safe proportions, the process of readjustment has been attended with less trouble than feared and conditions generally now make a better basis for future operations in commerce. The week has seen new demands in manufacturing come forward slowly, but the exhibit is an improving one, and there is broader activity in the distributive lines. Low temperature augmented the buying in leading retail lines, particularly of heavyweight apparel and household furnishings. Interior buyers appeared in greater numbers.

Advices indicate seasonable headway in disposing of country stocks, these being now brought down comfortably, and road salesmen report less difficulty in booking orders for forward delivery.

Improved financial conditions are reflected in a wider circulation of currency throughout the agricultural sections, and this has made mercantile collections easier, although more than a normal number of trading defaults is again in evidence and extensions are frequently asked. The banking position shows steady recovery, there being increase in both deposits and discount operations, with money cheaper, although not yet sufficiently inviting to attract new enterprises.

Production in the leading industries is not expected to disclose notable changes, but there is moderate increase over a month ago in iron, steel, wood and leather working, and idle forces are smaller than in last week. Important considerations as to costs of supplies and labor and the yet limited flow of fresh orders prolong the feeling of caution which prevails in many quarters. Some factory outputs still lag and only slightly renewed activity may appear in these branches before the spring months. Receipts of the raw materials continue restricted in lumber, wool and in minor metals, but have gained over last year in hides and live stock.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 37, against 39 last week and 26 a year ago. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 10, against 16 last week and 13 in 1907.—Dun's Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Trade and financial developments have been of a rather irregular character, but, on the whole, in the direction of future improvement at the larger centers. Conservativism in ordering is noted as a country-wide condition, but recent price reductions have unquestionably stimulated interest. The suspension of four banks at the metropolis was, after all, only negatively unfavorable, these being the aftermath of last autumn's financial storm. Underlying financial conditions are certainly no less favorable, money shows increasing ease not only in this country, but all over the world, and improvement in collections, which are still slow as a whole, is in many cases the result of easing money making it possible to remit on past-due accounts. The week's failure total is the smallest for a month past. Business failures in the United States for the week ending Jan. 30 number 359, against 408 last week, 211 in the like week of 1907, 228 in 1906, 239 in 1905 and 216 in 1904. There were forty-four failures in Canada this week, against fifty-one last week and twenty-six in this week a year ago.—Bradstreet's Report.

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

CHAPTER VIII.—(Continued.)

The meeting just described took place upon a Tuesday, early in November. On the Saturday Ezra Girdlestone had fully made up his mind to turn his back upon the diggings and begin his homeward journey. He was pining for the pleasures of his old London life, and was weary of the perpetual glare of the South African sun. His task was done, too, and it would be well for him to be at a distance before the diggers discovered the manner in which they had been hoaxed. He began to pack his boxes, therefore, and to make every preparation for his departure.

He was busily engaged in this employment upon the Wednesday evening when there was a tap at the door and Farintosh walked in, accompanied by Burt and Williams. Girdlestone glanced up at them, and greeted them briefly. He was not surprised at their visit, for they had come together several times before to report progress or make arrangements. Farintosh bowed as he entered the room, Burt nodded, and Williams rubbed his hands together and looked amiably bilious.

"We looked in, Mr. Griddlestone," Farintosh began, "to learn if you had any commands for us."

"I told you before that I had not," Ezra said curtly. "I am going on Saturday. I have made a mistake in speculating on those diamonds. Prices are sinking lower and lower."

"I am sorry to hear that," said Farintosh, sympathetically. "Maybe the market will take a turn."

"Let us hope so," the merchant answered. "It doesn't look like it."

Quick as a flash Burt sprang upon him and struck him down with a life-preserver. With a gasping cry and a heavy thud Ezra fell face downwards upon the floor, a great gash in his head.

"Very neat—very pretty indeed!" cried the ex-parson, in a quiet tone of critical satisfaction, as a connoisseur might speak of a specimen which interested him. He was already busy at the door of the safe.

"Well done, Mr. Burt, well done!" cried Williams in a quivering voice.

"Here are the stones," said Farintosh, in the same quiet voice. "Here are some notes and gold. We may as well have them, too. Now, tie the bag carefully. That's the way. If we meet any one on the stairs, take it coolly. Turn that lamp out, Williams, so that if any one looks in he'll see nothin. Come along!" The guilty trio stole out of the room, bearing their plunder with them, and walked down the stairs of the hotel unmolested and unharmed.

The moon as it rose over the veldt that night shone on three horsemen spurring it along the Capetown road as though their very lives depended upon their speed. Its calm, clear rays streamed over the silent roofs of Kimberley and in through a particular window of the Oriental Hotel, throwing silvery patches upon the carpet and casting strange shadows from the figure which lay as it had fallen huddled in an ungainly heap upon the floor.

CHAPTER IX.

Ezra was endowed with rare vitality, which enabled him not only to shake off the effects of his mishap, but to do so in an extraordinary short space of time. There was a groan from the prostrate figure, then a feeble movement, then another and a louder groan. Gradually raising himself upon his elbow, he looked around him in a bewildered way, with his other hand pressed to the wound at the back of his head, from which a few narrow little rivulets of blood were still meandering. His glance wandered vaguely over the table and the chairs and the walls, until it rested upon the safe. He could see in the moonlight that it was open, and empty. In a moment the whole circumstances of the case came back to him, and he staggered to the bell with a hoarse cry of rage and of despair.

Whatever Ezra's faults may have been, irresolution or want of courage were not among them. In a moment he grasped the situation, and realized that it was absolutely essential that he should act, and at once. The stones must be recovered, or utter and irretrievable ruin stared him in the face. At his cries and ringing the landlord and several attendants, white and black, came rushing into the room.

"I've been robbed and assaulted," Ezra said, steadying himself against the mantelpiece, for he was still weak and giddy. "Don't all start cackling, but do what I ask you. Light the lamp!"

The lamp was lit, and there was a murmur from the little knot of employes, reenforced by some late loungers at the bar, as they saw the disordered room and the great crimson patch upon the carpet.

"The thieves called at nine," said Ezra, talking rapidly, but collectedly. "Their names were Farintosh, Burt and Williams. It is now half-past ten, so they have no very great start. You, Jamieson, and you Van Muller, run out and find if three men have been seen getting away. Perhaps they took a buggy. Go up and down, and ask all you see. You, Jones, go as hard as you can to Inspector Ainslie. Tell him there has been robbery and attempted murder, and say that I want half a dozen of his best mounted men—not his best men, you understand, but his best horses. I shall see that he is no loser if he is smart. Where's my servant? Pete, get my horse saddled and bring her round. She ought to be able to catch anything in Griqualand."

As Ezra gave his orders the men hurried off in different directions to carry them out. He, himself, commenced to arrange his dress, and tied a handkerchief tightly round his head.

"Surely you are not going, sir?" the landlord said. "You are not fit."

"Fit or not, I am going," Ezra said resolutely. "If I have to be strapped to my horse I'll go."

A great concourse of people had assembled by this time, attracted by the report of the robbery. The whole square in front of the hotel was crowded with diggers and storekeepers and innumerable Kaffirs, all pressing up to the portico in the hope of hearding some fresh details. There was a buzz of excitement among the crowd when Ezra appeared on the steps of the hotel, looking as white as a sheet, with a handkerchief bound round his head and his collar all crusted with blood. As he mounted his horse one of his emissaries rushed to him.

"If you please, sir," he said, "they have taken the Capetown road. A dozen people saw them. Their horses were not up to much, for I know the man they got them from. You are sure to catch them."

A smile played over Ezra's pale face, which boded little good for the fugitives. "Those police," he cried, "are they never going to come!"

"Here they are!" said the landlord, and sure enough, with a jingling of arms and a clatter of hoofs, half a dozen of the Cape Mounted police trotted through the crowd and drew up in front of the steps. They were smart, active young fellows, armed with carbine and saber, and their horses were tough brutes, uncomely to look at, but with wonderful staying power. Ezra noted the fact with satisfaction as he rode up to the grizzled sergeant in command.

"There's not a moment to be lost, sergeant," he said. "They have an hour and a half's start, but their cattle are not up to much. Come on! It's the Capetown road. A hundred pounds if we catch them!"

For the first few miles the party galloped in silence. The moon was still shining brilliantly, and they could see the white line of the road stretching out in front of them and winding away over the undulating veldt. To right and left spread a broad expanse of wiry grass stretching to the horizon, with low bushes and scrub scattered over it in patches.

Out once more upon the Capetown road it was a clear race between the pursuers and the pursued. The former knew that the fugitives, were it daytime, would possibly be within sight of them, and the thought gave them additional ardor. The sergeant having a fresh horse rode in front, his head down and his body forward, getting every possible inch of pace out of the animal. At his heels came Ezra, on his gallant grey, the blood-stained handkerchief fluttering from his head. He was sitting very straight in his saddle with a set, stern smile upon his lips. In his right hand he held a cocked revolver. A hundred yards or so behind them the two remaining troopers came toiling along upon their weary nags, working hard with whip and spur to stimulate them to further exertions. Away in the east a long rosy streak law low upon the horizon, which showed that dawn was approaching, and a grey light stole over the landscape. Suddenly the sergeant pulled his horse up. "There's some one coming towards us," he cried.

Ezra and the troopers halted their panting steeds. Through the uncertain light they saw a solitary horseman riding down the road. At first they had thought that it might possibly be one of the fugitives who had turned, but as he came nearer they perceived that it was a stranger. His clothes were so dusty and his horse so foam-flecked and weary that it was evident that he also had left many a long mile of road behind him.

"Have you seen three men on horseback?" cried Ezra, as he approached.

"I spoke to them," the traveler answered. "They are about half a mile ahead."

"Come on! Come on!" Ezra shouted.

"I am bringing news from Jagersfontein——" the man said.

"Come on!" Ezra interrupted, furiously, and the horses stretched their stiff limbs into a feeble, lumbering gallop. Ezra and the sergeant shot to the front, and the others followed as best they might. Suddenly in the stillness they heard far away a dull rattling sound like the clatter of distant castanets. "It's their horses' hoofs!" cried Ezra, and the troopers behind raised a cheer to show that they, too, understood the significance of the sound.

It was a wild, lonely spot, where the plain was bare even of the scanty foliage which usually covered it. Here and there great granite rocks protruded from the brown soil as though Nature's covering had in bygone days been rent until her gaunt bones protruded through the wound. As Ezra and the sergeant swept round a sharp turn in the road they saw some little way ahead of them the three fugitives, enveloped in a cloud of dust. Almost at the same moment they heard a shout and crash behind them, and, looking round, saw a confused heap upon the ground. The horse of the leading trooper had fallen from pure fatigue, and had rolled over upon its rider. The other trooper had dismounted, and was endeavoring to extricate his companion.

"Let us see if he is hurt," the sergeant cried.

"On! on!" shouted Ezra, whose passion was increased by the sight of the thieves. "Not a foot back."

"He may have broken his neck," grumbled the sergeant, unslinging his carbine. "Have your pistol ready, sir. We shall be up with them in a few minutes, and they may show fight."

They were up with them rather sooner than the policeman expected. Farintosh, finding that speed was of no avail, and that the number of his pursuers was now reduced to two, had recourse to strategy. There was a sharp turn in the road a hundred yards ahead, and on reaching it the three flung themselves off their horses and lay down behind cover. As Ezra and the sergeant, the grey horse and the bay, came thundering round the curve, there was a fierce splutter of pistol shots from amongst the bushes, and the grey sank down upon its knees with a sobbing moan, struck mortally in the head. Ezra sprang to his feet, and rushed at the ambuscade, while the sergeant, who had been grazed on the cheek by the first volley, jumped from his horse and followed him. Burt and Farintosh met them foot to foot with all the Saxon gallantry which underlies the Saxon brutality. Burt stabbed at the sergeant and struck him through the muscle of the neck. Farintosh fired at the policeman, and was himself shot down by Ezra. Burt, seeing his companion fall, sprang past his two assailants with a vicious side blow at the merchant, and throwing himself upon the sergeant's horse, regardless of a bullet from the latter's carbine, he galloped away and was speedily out of range. As to Williams, from the beginning of the skirmish, he had lain face downwards upon the ground, twisting his thin limbs about in an agony of fear, and howling for mercy.

"He's gone," Ezra said, ruefully, gazing after the fugitive. "We have nothing to go after him with."

"I'm well nigh gone myself," said the policeman, mopping up the blood from his stab, which was more painful than dangerous. "He has given me a nasty prod."

"Never mind, my friend, you shall not be the loser. Get up"—this to Williams, who was still writhing himself into the most extraordinary attitudes.

"Oh, please, Mr. Girdlestone," he cried, clutching at Ezra's boots with his long, thin fingers, "it wasn't me that hit you. It was Mr. Burt. I had nothing to do with robbing you, either. That was Mr. Farintosh. I wouldn't have gone with him only I knew that he was a clergyman, so I expected no harm. I am surprised at you, Mr. Farintosh, I really am. I'm very glad that Mr. Girdlestone has shot you."

The ex-parson was sitting with his back against a gnarled stump, which gave him some support. He had his hand to his chest, and as he breathed a ghastly whistling sound came from the wound, and spurts of blood rushed from his mouth. His glazed eyes were fixed upon the man who had shot him, and a curious smile played about his thin lips.

"Come here, Mr. Girdlestone," he crooked, "come here."

Ezra strode over to him with a face as inexorable as fate.

"You've done for me," said Farintosh faintly. "It's a queer end for the best man of his year at Trinity—master of arts, sir, and Jacksonian prizeman. Not much worth now, is it? Who'd have thought then that I should have died like a dog in this wilderness? What's the odds how a man dies, though? If I had kept myself straight I should have gone off a few years later in a feather bed as the Dean of St. Patrick's maybe. What will that matter? I've enjoyed myself"—the dying man's eyes glistened at the thought of past dissipations. "If I had my time to do over again," he continued, "I'd enjoy myself the same way. I'm not penitent, sir. No deathbed snivveling about me, or short cuts into heaven. That's not what I wanted to say, though. I have a choking in the throat, but I daresay you can hear what I am driving at. You met a man driving towards Jacobsdal, did you not?"

Ezra nodded sullenly.

"You didn't speak to him? Too busy trying to catch yours truly, eh? Will you have your stones back, for they are in the bag by my side, but they'll not be very much good to you. The little spec won't come off this time. You don't know what the news was that the man was bringing?"

A vague feeling of impending misfortune stole over Ezra. He shook his head.

"His news was," said Farintosh, leaning up upon his hand, "that fresh diamond fields have been discovered at Jagrafontein, in the Orange Free State. So Russia or no Russia, stones will not rise. Ha! ha! will not rise. Look at his face! It's whiter than mine. Ha! ha! ha!" With the laugh upon his lips, a great flow of blood stopped the clergyman's utterance, and he rolled slowly over upon his side, a dead man.

Love Is Deaf.

"And you mean to say that football player kissed you?" exclaimed the irate mother.

"Yes, ma," replied the blushing daughter.

"Why, the idea! Didn't I tell you if he tried to kiss you to yell 'Stop!' as loud as you could?"

"I—I did, ma, but he had on his ear guards and couldn't hear me."

Proved Correct.

Miggles—There's more truth than poetry in that old saw, "Where there is smoke there is fire."

Wiggles—What do you know about it?

Hog Cholera.

THE greatest drawback to the hog industry which breeders in this country have to contend with is what is known as "hog cholera" and "swine plague."

Hog cholera is a highly contagious disease and unless checked is liable to carry off a great number of hogs in a very short time.

Mr. A. P. Williams, of Burnetts Creek, Ind., tells of an experience which he had with some hogs that had the cholera. "Five years ago," says Mr. Williams, "I was in the employ of Mr. J. D. Richardson, Lafayette, Ind., as his barn foreman. Some fine hogs that I was feeding took the cholera. I gave them Sloan's Liniment and did not lose a hog. Some were so bad they would not drink sweet milk and I was compelled to drench them. I have tried it at every opportunity since and always find it O. K."

WOMAN'S RELIEF

Mrs. Sarah G. Butts, of White Plains, Va., writes: "Cardui is certainly a panacea for suffering women. I was sunk in despair. Death is no worse than the pains I suffered periodically. Nothing relieved me, until I took Cardui. Now the pains have gone, and I am stronger than in 15 years." Try it for your troubles.

Indigestion

Stomach trouble is but a symptom of, and not in itself a true disease. We think of Dyspepsia, Heartburn, and Indigestion as real diseases, yet they are symptoms only of a certain specific nerve sluggish—nothing else.

It was this fact that first correctly led Dr. Shoop in the creation of that now very popular Stomach Remedy—Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Going direct to the stomach nerves, along brought that success and favor to Dr. Shoop and his Restorative. Without that original and highly vital principle, no such lasting accomplishments were ever to be had.

For stomach distress, bloating, biliousness, bad breath and sallow complexion, try Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—and see for yourself what it can and will do. We sell and cheerfully recommend Prohibition Column.

Prohibitory Laws Educational.

The laws of a country should and do express the highest conception of right and justice. They ought always to be in advance of the people. Although written in the language of Prohibition, their highest purpose is preventative, but educational. By defining the wrong they give force and emphasis to the right and become as a national conscience. Every prohibitory law must be relatively ideal and will to some extent be unenforced but from the legislative recognition of the principle involved there goes forth a forceful and purifying influence Statutory prohibition would, at least, define the crime, rob it of respectability and redeem the national self-respect.—Rev. Louis O. Lehman.

The liquor traffic is a cancer in society, eating out its vitals and threatening destruction, and all attempts to regulate it will aggravate the evil. There must be no attempts to regulate the cancer, it must be eradicated, not a root must be left behind, for until this is done, all classes must remain in danger of becoming victims of strong drink.—Abraham Lincoln.

No earnest, honest effort in a good cause can fail. It may not be crowned with applause of men. It may not seem to touch the goal of immediate worldly success, but it is not lost. It helps to strengthen the weak with new virtue—to arm the irresolute with proper knowledge—to animate all with devotion, which in the end conquers all.—Charles Sumner.

B. & O. General Notice.

The following notice has been posted conspicuously about the Baltimore and Ohio station at Garrett. It is dated at Baltimore January first.

For the protection of life and property and the good of the service, the rigid enforcement of the company's rules against the use of intoxicants is operative.

Officers and employes will take notice that there will not be employed, or permitted to remain in the service, in the capacity of Trainmaster, Dispatcher, Operator, Engineer Fireman or Trainmaster, Yardman, Block or other signalman Watchman, or in other positions where in any way charged with the direction or operation of trains, persons who use intoxicants, either while ON or OFF duty.

Under no circumstances will exceptions be made.

Signed, G. L. POTTER,
Third Vice-President.

The claim that Maine assumed to make men sober by law is most absurd. Prohibition aims to prevent people from being made drunkards by law. Men are naturally sober. It takes the saloon and the hotel bar and other forms of liquor selling to make them drunkards. These places shall not exist, says the prohibitory law.

A petition has been filed with the Constitutional Convention of Michigan, now in session, to prohibit the sale of liquor in the cities of Ann Arbor, Kalamazoo, Ypsilanti, Marquette and Mt. Pleasant. These cities are the seats of the state schools of Michigan.

License.

There are very few people outside those engaged in the liquor trade and its allied interests, who now regard high license or low license with any favor, for it has been proved again and again that liquor license laws are ineffectual as temperance measures. The experience of Chicago is the experience of all communities where license and high license have had a trial. The Chicago license fee of five hundred dollars was raised to one thousand dollars, and it is well to note the results, as chronicled by the Chicago Tribune after nine months' trial. "Out of the total of 7,350 saloons in Chicago only 122 have failed to secure a new permit at the highest figure. Neither the increase in the license fee nor the new law relating to the proportion of saloons to the population has accomplished that weeding out of conditions which many of the friends of restriction have looked for. It is sufficient comment to know that the increased revenues are to be used largely for the support of the 1,100 new policemen required for the better protection of person and property, the dangers to which are in a great degree due to the influences which radiate from the saloon as a center."

Neglected Colds Threaten Life.

(From the Chicago Tribune)

"Don't trifle with a cold,' is good advise for prudent men and women. It may be vital in the case of a child. Proper food, good ventilation, and dry, warm clothing are the proper safeguards against colds. If they are maintained through the changeable weather of autumn, winter and spring, the chances of a surprise from ordinary colds will be slight. But the ordinary light cold will become severe if neglected and a well established ripe cold is to the germs of diphtheria what honey is to the bee. The greatest menace to child life at this season of the year is the neglected cold." Whether it is a child or adult, the cold slight or severe, the very best treatment that can be adopted is to give Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is safe and sure. The great popularity and immense sale of this preparation has been attained by its remarkable cures of this ailment. A cold never results in pneumonia when it is given. For sale by H. Milliman, St. Joe; F. R. Bowman, Spencerville.

Lutheran Pastor Dead

Rev. D. F. Kain, pastor of the Lutheran church at Albion, died Monday morning at 6:30 as a result of paralysis extending over a period of several weeks. Rev. Kain was well known by the older residents of Auburn residing here in the eighties being pastor of the Lutheran church and also interested in the manufacture of a two wheeled cart. He preceded Rev. Brosy as pastor of the church. Mrs. Jolliff and Mrs. Harry Bateman of this city are nieces of the deceased. Funeral was held at Albion Wednesday at 2:30.—Dispatch. Rev. Kain was pastor at Harlan for several years, and at different times preached at this place.

Postal Rule.

Postmaster D. J. Baker desires to call attention to the practice of some patrons of rural delivery of placing coins in their boxes each time they desire to dispatch letters instead of supplying themselves with postage in advance of their needs.

This practice imposes undue hardship on rural carriers in removing loose coins from boxes and delays them on the service of their routes.

The postmaster, therefore, urgently requests that patrons of rural delivery provide themselves and keep on hand a supply of stamps consistent with and in advance of their needs. It is also very desirable that rural patrons place in their mail boxes small detachable cups of wood or tin in which to place coins, when necessary, in purchasing supplies of stamps.

Pain Weakens

Headache, rheumatism, neuralgia, or pains of any nature weaken the system—they are a strain upon the nerves. Almost instant relief can be obtained by taking Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills, and without any bad after-effects. Take one on first indication of an attack—it will ward it off. They are a pleasant little tablet, sold by druggists everywhere, 25 doses 25 cents; never sold in bulk.

"I was subject to constant headaches for a period of four years. At times I was almost unfitted for the work in which I am engaged, that of station agent. Through the advice of a friend I tried Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills, and the result has been that I have entirely eradicated my system of those continuous headaches that follow a continual mental strain. They have done for me all that is claimed for them."

Democratic State Convention.

At the meeting of the democratic state committee at Indianapolis last week, it was decided to hold the democratic state convention on March 25 and 26. It was thought best to hold a two days' convention as considerable business is booked for that time and it is predicted that the convention will be a "hummer."

At the committee meeting all the candidates for governor were present except Mr. Marshall of Columbia City, and a big crowd of democrats from all over the state. It is thought that an inheritance tax plank will form an important part in the platform, as well as a strong local option plank, which is looked upon very favorably by the democrats.

Disastrous Fire at Waterloo.

Early last Thursday evening fire was discovered in the Beyer Bros. poultry establishment at Waterloo. The origin of the fire is nknown save the supposition that it caught from a live wire, as the manager had carefully looked over everything before he left, about twenty minutes before the discovery of the fire, when the flames had gained such an ascendency that it was found impossible to save the building. A part of the contents, including the books of the firm were saved. The building was a three story affair with a basement, and was comparatively new, having been built about two years ago. At the time of the fire, it contained a car load of dressed chickens, car load of eggs and one of egg crates. The loss is supposed to have been covered by insurance.

If the building is not rebuilt a number of Waterloo men will be thrown out of employment.

The President's message of a few days ago caused considerable comment among the big men and others. Chris Curie says that there is nothing new in the message, that it contained the same as those he had read thirty-five or forty years ago, only it was put in more vigorous language. He thinks the president would make a A-1 democrat because he advocates democratic principles. Shortly after Mr. Curie made the above remarks to us we noticed a piece in our exchange which is of the same opinion. Below we reproduce.

"The opinion among many, both democrats and republicans that the special message of President Roosevelt to congress is a reproduction of many of the principles which have heretofore been advocated by the democrats, especially those championed by W. J. Bryan, in other words, the president has stolen the thunder of the democrats in order to boom Taft, his favorite candidate for the republican presidential nomination, or, as some think, to force his own nomination, despite his declarations that he will not accept it."

Parents should be cautious about giving their children permission to stay out of school. Every day out is a day lost to the school work—they cannot make it up. They will soon be behind and want to stop school—find fault with the teacher—say she is partial, etc., when all the time the parent is to blame.

The lecure last Friday evening on "Lightning and Toothpicks" by S. A. Long, was an immense success. The lecturer held the attention of the entire audience from start to finish and to say that they were well pleased with it would be but mild praise. The next and last number on the course this winter will be given by S. Platt Jones on March 14.

James D. Mortimer, the new general manager and receiver for the Toledo & Chicago Interurban company, was interviewed at Kendallville by the News of that city, and stated that under the receivership of which he has already taken charge and under which the road is now operating, all the claims against the company will be adjusted as rapidly as possible, the big ones first and the little ones next. No one, he stated, would lose anything. The company has been laboring under unfavorable conditions and it is surprising—what they have accomplished. Mr. Perkins, former general manager of the Co. will act as vice president.

The impression is general here in Auburn that now, since their victory at Garrett and Butler, the state workers of the anti-saloon league will begin immediately a similar crusade here in Auburn. Such does not appear to be the case, at least no move in that direction has yet been made. The state workers only go where they are called. They wait until the people of the particular locality desire to take initiatory action and call on them for assistance. The Courier understands that no such initiatory steps have been taken. Neither have such steps been taken at Waterloo. Hence the people in both of these cities—those who have been wondering "what they would do about it" when these wet and dry petition cards were presented to them can rest easily, for awhile yet, anyhow.—Courier.

Monroe Bros. have been using their spare time lately in working upon a heavy buggy automobile and by the assistance of J. M. Seevers have perfected a machine which has been thoroughly tested and works perfectly. The new machine is a two seated buggy pattern with a fifteen horse power engine fully equipped with all modern improvements and is a success in every particular. Monroe Brothers have a contract for another machine and say they could sell all they could manufacture. If there is a demand for those machines there is no reason why they should not be manufactured here on a large scale. Hicksville needs an enterprise of this kind and we believe a company could be formed with sufficient capital to put these machines on the market in any quantity necessary to supply the demand.—News.

Dog Tax.

The late decision of the supreme court in regard to dog tax, will probably get away with some of our dogs Not a dog will escape this decision. Under the law the owner of a pup is not liable to taxes until the pup reaches the age of three months. On that day, the owner or person who harbors him, must pay $1, no matter what time of the year, and then again on March 1, another dollar is due.

Dog tax is not transferable. When a dog is sold, the new owner must pay tax, even if the old owner has paid it. If a dog has a dozen owners during the year, each must pay $1 tax.

Again, the assessor has, by law, to call but once for dog tax, and if not paid then, when his work is done, turns the delinquents over to the trustee, whose only duty is to turn them over to the prosecutor for action. If you receive a notice that your dog tax is delinquent, you have the trustee to thank for being saved additional expense, for he is not compelled to do this

A family living in one house is considered as one. If different members of the family own dogs, the head of the house is responsible for the tax on all of them, and the additional tax for owning or harboring more than one dog is added.

Walter S. Dickinson

Making a Great Hit In South as "The Yankee Rube."

The Dispatch contained the following article regarding the success of Walter Dickinson, as a star comedian, which we are pleased to give to our readers. He is a brother of Mrs. James White of this place and Mrs Ora Quance of east of Spencerville.

"It may not be generally known that DeKalb county has a star character comedian on the vaudeville stage today. Such is true. Walter S. Dickinson, son of Sherman S. Dickinson of this city is making a big hit as "Senator Stebbins, the Yankee Rube." He is also a pleasing soloist. In writing to his father he says: "I am having better success in vaudeville than I ever did in dramatic business, in fact I expect to distinguish myself as a rube comedian. I expect to go to New York in a few weeks to accept one week's engagement at one of the most famous vaudeville theaters in the world, Tony Pastors 14th street theater. If I can make a hit there my fortune is just as good as made for I will surely play all the big circuits and there is no limit to salary if they like you. I am studying all the time lately on my act. Managers in the south say my prospects are just as good or better than Ezra Kendall's ever dared be and that is saying a good deal. I am now preparing to go to New York. It will be at least six weeks yet before I will be ready. I intend to work a circuit of towns through Ohio, Indiana and Pennsylvania on my way. I may get near enough Auburn to drop off a week and come home. I am playing a small circuit here in the south, at present being booked by Manager Sol Dan out of Memphis, Tenn."

During the past two weeks he has played at Springfield, Mo., Joplin, Mo., Muskogee, Okla., Parsons, Kan., Lake Charles, La., Galveston, Texas, San Antonio, Texas, Dallas, Texas, South McAllister, Okla., and Fort Smith, Arkansas.

In form of recommendation, W. B. Russel, manager of Lyric Theater Co says: "The Yankee Rube has been the hit of the show this week. His act is the most original and realistic of its kind that has played in my house and I can heartily recommend his act to make good. It has been the talk of the town."

HELPFUL ADVICE

You won't tell your family doctor the whole story about your private illness—you are too modest. You need not be afraid to tell Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., the things you could not explain to the doctor. Your letter will be held in the strictest confidence. From her vast correspondence with sick women during the past thirty years she may have gained the very knowledge that will help your case. Such letters as the following, from grateful women, establish beyond a doubt the power of to conquer all female diseases.

Mrs. Norman R. Barndt, of Allentown, Pa., writes:

"Ever since I was sixteen years of age I had suffered from an organic derangement and female weakness; in consequence I had dreadful headaches and was extremely nervous. My physician said I must go through an operation to get well. A friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I took it and wrote you for advice, following your directions carefully, and thanks to you I am today a well woman, and I am telling all my friends of my experience."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration.

The farmer's son looked up from the sporting page.

"By heck," he said, "I wish we had one o' them there hossless carriages."

"We have," returned the farmer, "and now that you mention it, you might jest as well git it and fetch up a load o' turnips from the three acre lot."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

PURE FOOD.

No Food Commissioner of Any State Has Ever Attacked the Absolute Purity of Grape-Nuts.

Every analysis undertaken shows this food to be made strictly of Wheat and Barley, treated by our processes to partially transform the starch parts into a form of Sugar, and therefore much easier to digest.

Our claim that it is a "Food for Brain and Nerve Centers" is based upon the fact that certain parts of Wheat and Barley (which we use) contain Nature's brain- and nerve-building ingredients, viz., Phosphate of Potash, and the way we prepare the food makes it easy to digest and assimilate.

Dr. Geo. W. Carey in his book on "The Biochemic System of Medicine" says:

"When the medical profession fully understands the nature and range of the phosphate of potassium, insane asylums will no longer be needed.

"The gray matter of the brain is controlled entirely by the inorganic cell-salt, potassium phosphate.

"This salt unites with albumen, and by the addition of oxygen creates nerve-fluid, or the gray matter of the brain.

"Of course, there is a trace of other salts and other organic matter in nerve-fluid, but potassium phosphate is the chief factor, and has the power within itself to attract, by its own law of affinity, all things needed to manufacture the elixir of life. Therefore, when nervous symptoms arise, due to the fact that the nerve-fluid has been exhausted from any cause, the phosphate of potassium is the only true remedy, because nothing else can possibly supply the deficiency.

"The ills arising from too rapidly consuming the gray matter of the brain cannot be overestimated.

"Phosphate of Potash is to my mind the most wonderful curative agent ever discovered by man, and the blessings it has already conferred on the race are many. But what shall the harvest be' when physicians everywhere fully understand the part this wonderful salt plays in the processes of life? It will do as much as can be done through physiology to make a heaven on earth.

"Let the overworked business man take it and go home good-tempered. Let the weary wife, nerves unstrung from attending to sick children or entertaining company, take it and note how quickly the equilibrium will be restored and calm and reason assert her throne. No 'provings' are required here. We find this potassium salt largely predominates in nerve-fluid, and that a deficiency produces well-defined symptoms. The beginning and end of the matter is to supply the lacking principle, and in molecular form, exactly as nature furnishes it in vegetables, fruits and grain. To supply deficiencies—this is the only law of cure."

Please observe that Phosphate of Potash is not properly of the drug-shop variety, but is best prepared by "Old Mother Nature" and stored in the grains ready for use by mankind. Those who have been helped to better health by the use of Grape-Nuts are legion.

"There's a Reason."

BRAIN POWER

Increased by Proper Feeding.

A lady writer who not only has done good literary work, but reared a family, found in Grape-Nuts the ideal food for brain work and to develop healthy children. She writes:

"I am an enthusiastic proclaimer of Grape-Nuts as a regular diet. I formerly had no appetite in the morning and for 3 years while nursing my four children, had insufficient nourishment for them.

"Unable to eat breakfast I felt faint later, and would go to the pantry and eat cold chops, sausage, cookies, doughnuts or anything I happened to find. Being a writer, at times my head felt heavy and my brain asleep.

"When I read of Grape-Nuts I began eating it every morning, also gave it to the children, including my 10 months old baby, who soon grew as fat as a little pig, good natured and contented.

"I wrote evenings and feeling the need of sustained brain power, began eating a small saucer of Grape-Nuts with milk, instead of my usual indigestible hot pudding, pie, or cake for dessert at night.

"I grew plump, nerves strong, and when I wrote my brain was active and clear; indeed, the dull head pain never returned."

AN OLD TIME VALENTINE.

I found it in a drawer to-day,
With half-forgotten, old-time things,
Holding within a ring of gold
A Cupid with close-folded wings.
And greeting traced in faded ink,
Signed with a name that once could stir
Each languid pulse to swiftest beat—
Ah, me, how sweet those old days were!

We little dreamed the time would come
When seas and continents would be
The least of all the mighty bars
Between the path you tread and me.
What cruel wind of circumstance
Was it that blew across our way,
Till all Hope's cloud-capped palaces
In shattered ruins, round us lay!

What matter—since a memory
Alone unites our lives to-day;
Since I am sitting here alone,
And you are wandering far away?
I would not turn Time's chariot back,
E'en if the power was given to me;
I know the dream was sweet—who knows
If the fulfilment sweet would be

If I could know that you to-day
Remembered once this faded scroll,
And wondered if, in time to come
When soul goes seeking kindred soul,
Our souls might meet across the space
With understanding, death bestowed—
The lagging years would seem to me
But milestones on a pleasant road.

Flora and Hannah.

BY MARY E. WILKINS.

It happened a number of years ago, when valentines were made more account of than they are now. Why, in those days some valentines were almost as good as an offer of marriage. I am sure Jonty's was. He meant it for one, and I know he did. Jonty—his name was Jonathan, but we always called him Jonty—was my husband's youngest brother, and he had lived with me ever since his father died, when he wasn't much more than a baby.

He was twenty years younger than my husband, and we both of us, since we didn't have any children of our own, looked upon him as a son. My husband just set his eyes by his little brother, and he was a pretty boy, the reddest cheeks and the curliest light hair, and he was just as good as he could be, always ready to run errands, get a pail of water and bring in kindling wood, starting the minute he was told, and goin' laughin' as if he was tickled to death at havin' a chance to do somethin' for somebody. The way he used to wait on Grandma Page, find her glasses for her and hold her yarn, was really wonderful in a boy. Grandma Page was his and Caleb's, my husband's, great grandmother. She was pretty old when Jonty came to live with us, and when that happened about the valentine she was near ninety, but one of the prettiest old ladies you ever saw, cheeks as pink as a girl's, and her white hair all wavy, and she wore the nicest white caps, with lavender ribbons on them. We were proud of Grandma Page, and she was one of those little gentle, delicate, clinging creatures that everybody loves and pets. People used to say she didn't have much force, and couldn't do anything but knit and look peaceful and pretty, but she wasn't half the care that most old people are. When my husband died Jonty was most twenty-five years old, and it was the greatest comfort to me that I had him and Grandma Page. Jonty he took hold and run the farm just as smart, and we got along well, and had plenty of everything, though I was sad enough sometimes.

I felt dreadful sober when Jonty came to me that afternoon about the valentine. It made me think of the time when Caleb sent me a valentine for one thing, and then I couldn't help feeling a little sad that Jonty should be thinkin' of some other woman beside his grandma and me, though I knew it was for the best if he got a good wife and helpmeet.

But I tried to look as cheerful as I could. Jonty didn't act half as silly and ashamed in asking me as some boys would have acted. He was always real honest and simple and outspoken, and never seemed to see any reason for being ashamed of anything that was right. He never colored up a mite, though his cheeks were always like roses, as bright as a girl's, and he laughed kind of sweet and pleasant when he showed me the little sheet of gilt-edged paper with a bunch of rosebuds in the corner, that was to go with the handsomest valentine I ever laid my eyes on. There was paper cut somehow so you could lift it up in a sort of spiral twist and see underneath a couple seated in an arbor all covered with roses. What Jonty wanted was a little poem written on that sheet of paper.

"Can't you do it, Aunt Jane?" said he, in his coaxing way. He always called me aunt, though I was really his sister-in-law.

"Why, my land, Jonty, I don't believe I can," said I. "I'm afraid I'll spoil this beautiful paper."

"Oh, no, you won't," said he. "Do, Aunt Jane."

Now I have really had quite a name for writing poetry, and once a piece on the death of Deacon Brigg's wife was published in the paper, but I have written mostly in albums, for people on the deaths of relatives and friends, and then they would keep them in their family Bibles. Why, there was one spell when it seemed to me that nobody died that I wasn't called upon to write a poem about it. But I hadn't never written a valentine in my life, and I was dreadful doubtful. I was afraid of spoiling that handsome paper. But I wrote it all off on a slate first and finally I wrote quite a good piece, though I do say so, and Jonty he copied it, and signed his name.

"I s'pose I know who it's goin' to," said I.

"Yes, it's Flora," said Jonty, laughing, but just as honest as if he was a child. Grandma Page was knittin' in the corner, and she hadn't paid any attention to what was going on. She had grown so dreadful hard of hearin' within a year, we had to shout to make her hear anything.

I knew well enough that the valentine was going to Flora before I asked Jonty. She was the prettiest girl in the town, and all the young men were wild about her. Nobody looked at her sister Hannah, though she was a nice girl. Sometimes I used to think maybe she would be full as nice to get along with as Flora, though she did have a dull skin, and dull color of hair and a homely nose. Hannah hadn't a good feature in her face except her eyes, which were as brown and honest as a good dog's. Flora, beside her, looked all shine and pink and white and gold. She was tall and of a fine shape, too, and Hannah was under size. Both girls used to be in our house a good deal, and grandma and I thought a lot of them. Grandma used to say that Flora was a pretty creatur.

Well, after Jonty's valentine was finished we left it on the sitting room table and went out to see a man who had come to ask about some wood, and I went out in the kitchen to bake some cake. Pretty soon I saw Grandma Page with her big gray shawl on and her white hood, kind of rockin' down the front walk in a way she had. She was quite stout. I thought to myself I guessed she was goin' to run into Mrs. Atkins'. She used to do that quite often; it was only a step down the street, and she wasn't feeble at all.

In a little while Jonty came through the kitchen on his way to the sitting room to get his valentine. Then he come runnin' back.

"Why, where is it, Aunt Jane?" said he.

"Why, ain't it there on the table where you left it?" said I.

"No, it ain't," said he.

"Why, that's dreadful funny," said I. I wiped the flour off my hands and went in to look, but there was no valentine there. We searched everywhere, but we couldn't find it. When grandma came back we questioned her, then the mystery was solved, as we supposed. She said, in her little, soft, innocent way, like an old baby's, that she had been down to the postoffice thinking there might be a letter from Edward. Edward was her son out west, and she had posted the valentine. Well, there wasn't anything so strange about it. The postoffice was next door to Mrs. Atkins. Grandma often went there, and often posted letters, but it did seem a little odd that she should have taken the valentine. However, Jonty thanked her in his sweet way, and we supposed everything was all right.

After supper that night Hannah came in. Grandma had gone to bed, and Jonty had run down to the store on an errand. I saw in a minute that something had happened. Hannah didn't look like herself. Her dull cheeks were pink, her eyes shone, and she looked almost pretty.

"Oh, Aunt Jane," she said—she always called me Aunt Jane—"I saw him go past and knew he wasn't here, or I wouldn't have come."

"What do you mean—what is the matter, child?" said I, for she was laughing and crying all together.

"I had to tell somebody, I was so happy," said she; "and Flora has got Mark Williams calling on her, and mother is away, and——"

"Why, what is it, what has happened?" said I.

"Oh, don't you, don't you know?" said she.

"No, I don't," said I.

"Jonty has sent me a valentine," she whispered, then down her head went on my lap, and she cried and cried for pure joy. "Oh, Aunt Jane," she sobbed out, "I never thought anybody would love me. I thought it would always be Flora and now it's me, and—I've always thought Jonty was better than anybody else. Oh, Aunt Jane, I'm not half good enough for him. I wish I was pretty like Flora, but I do love Jonty, and I will try to make him happy."

I was so bewildered I didn't know what to do. I put my hand on the girl's head and tried to hush her, and then I heard a noise, and looked up, and there was Jonty standing in the door, and he had heard every word. And Hannah looked up and saw him, and sprang to her feet and ran straight to him, and was sobbing on his shoulder.

I shall never forget Jonty's face as he looked at me over her head. He was so kind and gentle that in all his bewilderment his arm had gone round the poor little thing, and he was stroking her head as if she had been a lost kitten. And I shall never forget the sound of my own voice, it was so queer and faint, as I said to him:

"Hannah says she's got a valentine from you, Jonty."

Well, Jonty soothed and coaxed her, and took her home, and when he came back his face was as white as a sheet. He sat down opposite me and looked at me, and I at him.

"What be you goin' to do, Jonty?" said I.

"I ain't goin' to break that poor little thing's heart, and Mark Williams is over there with Flora, and—I don't believe she has ever had much choice betwixt us, and—and—she ain't never acted as if she thought so much of me as this."

"You ain't goin' to marry Hannah, when it's Flora you want?" said I, for I thought he was carryin' it too far.

"Yes, I be; unless I see that Flora is goin' to be upset over it," said he.

And he did. Mark Williams married Flora, but I always suspected she would full as soon have had Jonty, but she was never a girl to cry for one fiddle when she could get another, and Jonty married Hannah. Hannah has made him a splendid wife, and there ain't been a happier family in the village than ours.

But one thing always puzzles Jonty and me, though we never said a word to Hannah about it. We could not understand how Jonty ever happened to direct that valentine envelope to Hannah instead of Flora. He said he could almost take his Bible oath that he hadn't. He used often to talk to me about it, and say that he knew now that Hannah was the wife for him, and made him happier than Flora could ever have done, but he couldn't understand about that valentine. "Hannah has got it, and I have seen it," said he, "but she took it out of the envelope and made a little silk case for it, with two doves and a sprig of myrtle embroidered on the outside, like one her cousin had, and the envelope is gone, but I must have written Hannah instead of Flora. Sometimes it seems supernatural when I look at Hannah and see what a dear, good wife I've got," said Jonty.

Well, we never discovered the mystery of that valentine till grandma died two years after Jonty and Hannah were married. She had a shock and lost her speech, and lay so five days before she died. One day, about a week after the funeral, Jonty was lookin' at her old Bible, the one she always kept in her room on the little stand by her bed, and he gave a great start. "What is it, Jonty?" said I. Hannah was out in the kitchen getting supper, and we were in the sitting room.

"Look here, Aunt Jane," said Jonty.

And I looked, and there in grandma's Bible, pinned to the chapter of Proverbs where it says that—"The heart of her husband can safely trust in her"—was the envelope of the old valentine, directed to Flora.—People's Home Journal.

Rhymes Attributed to Lincoln.

An old friend of mine named Cabaniss recently told me that Abraham Lincoln worked for his father in 1832. At that time a great rise occurred in the Sangamon river, and a steamboat, taking advantage of the high water, came up the stream. My friend was then a child, and the whistling of the boat frightened him. Lincoln, then a tall, angular young man, took him in his arms and carried him aboard the boat. After the departure of the craft Lincoln wrote some rhymes about the incident, one verse of which the Cabaniss family preserved. It ran thus:

The Illinois suckers, green and raw,
Collected on the Sangamaw
To see a boat come up the stream;
They surely thought it was a dream.

For this doggerel he invented a melody, and he and others sang it. The song never found its way into print. The elder Cabaniss always told his children that the amiable, kindly Lincoln would develop into a great man.—San Antonio (Texas) Letter.

Raw Potatoes as "Fruit."

John Hay, assistant secretary to President Lincoln, is authority for the statement that Mr. Lincoln "ate his meals mechanically," never seeming to take much interest in eating. That the great President was not brought up as an epicure is indicated by an account of a visit to the home of Thomas Lincoln, his father, by an old lady of Indiana. This woman said that when she, with other visitors, was seated in the Lincoln cabin a plate was passed around containing raw potatoes, neatly peeled. Not having been accustomed to eating this kind of "fruit," she waited for the others to give her a cue. They proceeded to eat the potatoes as one eats apples, biting out mouthfuls.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Fire at Angola a few days ago ruined the haberdashery stock of Joe Brokaw, causing a loss of about $3,000.

Truman Neher, 10 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Neher, of Delphi, by a fall from a tree, injured his neck so badly that convulsions developed and he will die.

James H. Smith, aged 68, and his daughter, Mrs. Mattie Halpin, aged 31, were fatally burned in a fire which destroyed the home of H. W. Smith at Irvington, near Indianapolis.

William Johnson, aged 31, tried to break into the storage rooms of the Evansville Electric Railway Company, and falling into a large manhole, was unable to make his escape and the officers arrested him in this position.

The damage suit of John Pruitt against Curt Goff at Frankfort, growing out of a fight in which Goff used a knife, has been compromised and dismissed, Pruitt receiving nearly $2,000. Prosecution for assault and battery will be dropped.

Erastus M. Zent, 30 years old, was killed at the grain elevator of Hauk & Knox, at Connersville. He was working near a corn sheller when his clothing was caught in a chain belt and he was drawn into the machine, his body stopping the machinery of the elevator before his predicament was discovered.

A stranger, giving his name as Gurne Baldwin, of Meadville, Pa., died at Washington. While alighting from a train he fell beneath the wheels and both of his feet were crushed, requiring amputation. He refused to give his correct name and address. He was 40 years old and belonged to the Order of Maccabees.

Emmet Ambler, lineman in the employ of the Home Telephone Company at Fort Wayne, was killed by an electric shock. While working with the wires he grasped one with both hands, and instantly hung lifeless from the pole. The shock was due to contact with a traction company wire by a Home telephone wire.

Carl Hale, 20 years old, son of Isaac Hale, near Jeffersonville, was shot in the abdomen and seriously if not fatally wounded, by Arthur Ryan, son of a neighbor. The weapon was fired by accident in a friendly scuffle. Several young men were in the crowd, and it is not known who held the revolver at the time it was discharged.

Frank H. Kincade, 40 years old and yardmaster of the Big Four railway yards in Marion, died after suffering almost incessant pains in his head for three months. The peculiar affliction baffled the skill of physicians and the theory had been advanced that the noise of trains had wrought upon Kincade's nervous system.

An association of old soldiers around Lincolnville and Dora, in Wabash County, have erected a monument to the memory of their dead comrades at the cemetery near Lincolnville. This monument will be dedicated May 30, Memorial Day, and Dr. C. H. Good, of Warren, has been invited to deliver the address on the occasion.

William G. Ratts, farmer, near New Washington, recently died, and his estate is being administered upon. Miss Ollie Ratts and her brother George remain in charge of the homestead, and upon ripping off the top of a stool they found two sacks of gold coin, each containing $400. There is a supposition that other concealed treasure will yet be found.

Mrs. Harry Drake, of Shelbyville, whose husband was convicted of forgery on his own confession and was transferred to the Indiana Reformatory, has paid to the First National Bank $610, squaring her husband's account so far as the bank is concerned. She says that a full settlement will be made of all indebtedness contracted by her husband.

Fifty pounds of dynamite stored in a shanty in the shale pit of the Indiana Paving Brick Company at Brazil exploded as John Weaver, of Perth, was driving nearby. Mr. Weaver was hurled fifty feet away and badly hurt, while his horse was tumbled into a ditch and fatally crippled, soon dying. The shanty was torn to splinters, and a barrel of oil was thrown many yards distant. The dynamite is thought to have exploded by a spark from the stove in the room.

Miss Alice Wiley, the 19-year-old daughter of a well-known farmer of Bloomington, died of burns received by the explosion of a gasoline stove while she was visiting at the home of her sister at Jasonville. Miss Wiley and her sister, Mrs. Elmer Gerguson, were both attempting to light the stove when the explosion came, and both were enveloped in flames. Mrs. Ferguson escaped without injury, save that her hands were burned while trying to rescue her sister.

Mrs. Thomas Eisle, of Logansport, found her two-months-old babe dead in its cradle.

Neil T. Byroad, of Lebanon, 81 years old, wants a divorce from his bride of four months, aged 57 years. He alleges ill treatment.

Mrs. George Gideon was stricken with paralysis and she can neither eat nor drink. She is the wife of a wealthy farmer of Petersburg.

Philip Koch, proprietor of a jewelry store in New Albany for many years, attempted to commit suicide at his home by cutting his throat and the arteries in both wrists. It is thought he will recover.

A bald eagle was captured by two farmers near Noblesville which measured nine feet from tip to tip of wings. The bird was sold to Will Mabee at a fancy price but later thieves entered Mabee's shop and stole it.

Creditors of the Indiana National Bank, of Elkhart, which failed in 1903, will receive another 5 per cent. of their claims. Another $31,000 has been uncovered, making a total of $280,000 or 45 per cent. altogether.

Cleophas Lehman, 35, a young farmer residing southeast of Berne, fell from a shade tree which he was trimming a few days ago and alighted on his head and shoulder. He was seriously injured, but may recover.

John P. Walker, of Evansville, former county treasurer, accused of embezzling $63,000 of county funds and afterward acquitted, is preparing to move to California, where he owns an orange farm, now conducted by his father.

The merchants and professional men have organized what is known as the Business Men's Association of Marion, and a banquet will be given on the night of February 21, at which time Judge Frank S. Roby, of the Appellate Court, will deliver an address.

Guy Bash 23 years old, employed as a waiter in a restaurant at Warsaw, committed suicide in his room, tieing a towel saturated with chloroform about his face and turning on the gas in his room. His lifeless body was discovered the following afternoon. He was the son of A. J. Bash, of Goshen, and it is presumed that the suicide was the result of a disappointment in love.

The boiler in the rear of the Tremont Hotel at Wabash, used in furnishing heat and power for the hotel, exploded recently, partly wrecking the building in which it stood, but injuring no person except Will Hudson. He was sleeping in an upper room in the hotel, was awakened by the concussion, and in jumping from his bed struck an electric light, to his slight injury.

The city of Alexandria enters on the new year with more than $41,000 to its credit in its home depositories, according to the annual report of City Treasurer James Wales. Of this sum more than $15,000 is in the general fund, the remainder being in special funds which have been provided to meet bonded indebtedness not yet due. The city recently completed new public buildings at a cost of more than $20,000, paying for them in cash.

As a result of swallowing medicine intended for the mother, the 3-year-old son of Ray Hanna, of Bloomington, is dead, and Fred, the 5-year-old son, is in a critical condition. The mother had left some tablets containing arsenic on the top of a folding bed, and the children climbed on a chair and got them. The youngest child ate three tablets, each containing half a grain of arsenic, while the elder took one. The younger boy died in half an hour. Antidotes were given the older child, and he may recover.

The 5-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. T. King, of Logansport, ate her first bite of solid food in three weeks. As the result of a sudden shock, three weeks ago, she was deprived of the power of speech, as well as the ability to swallow, and since then she has been fed by means of a silver tube, the muscles and nerves of the throat apparently being paralyzed. Recently the power to eat and drink was suddenly restored, but the child is not yet able to talk, although it is now thought she will soon be fully recovered.

The Modern Woodmen of Hazleton have been presented with a sword which John Lucas scraped from the bottom while hunting for pearls in the Tippecanoe river, three years ago. The guard and hilt of the old weapon are practically rusted away, and a considerable part of the edge has also been eaten by the rust, but still the sword shows the good steel of which it was made. The weapon is supposed to have been lots during the campaign against the Indians in 1811. It has been hung on the wall of the lodge-room.

NO RELIEF FROM ECZEMA

For Over Two Years—Patent Medicines, Quack Cures and Doctors Fail—Cuticura Succeeds.

"I was very badly afflicted with eczema for more than two years. The parts affected were my limbs below the knees. I tried all the physicians in the town and some in the surrounding towns, and I also tried all the patent remedies that I heard of, besides all the cures advised by old women and quacks, and found no relief whatever until I commenced using the Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, and Cuticura Resolvent. In the Cuticura Remedies I found immediate relief, and was soon sound and well. C. V. Beltz, Tippecanoe, Ind., Nov. 15, '05."

Arabian Hypocrisy.

Writes a traveler: "The noblest and the basest Arabs are agreed that to obtain as quickly as possible all the available cash they can lay their hands on is by no means degrading. But even here subtle dialectic comes into play. The Arab must always have right on his side, for in studied and complex hypocrisy he has nothing to learn from us. If an Arab would rob his guest—I am speaking from personal experience—he will first talk at length on the subject of honor, hospitality, and so forth. He will gradually work the matter round as to why you are traveling, throw out suggestions that spies, enemies and intruders cannot claim hospitality, suggest that he himself is poor, question himself as to whether he ought not to detain you as a prisoner, again state that he is in want, and thus shift from blackmail to cajolery until he has extorted the sum of money which in his curious brain he might describe as the least he could accept with honor or the most he could extract without danger to himself."

Millions in Oats and Barley.

Nothing will pay you better for 1908 than to sow a plenty of big yielding oats and barley with oats at 40c to 50c a bu. (Salzer's new Emperor William Oats averaged 50 bu. per acre more than any other variety in 1907) would pay immensely, while Salzer's Silver King Barley, which proved itself the biggest yielder at the Wisconsin Agricultural Station during 1907 if you had planted 50 acres would have given you in 1907 just $3,500.00 on 50 acres. It is an enormous yielder.

JUST SEND THIS NOTICE AND 10c to the John A. Salzer Seed Co., La Crosse, Wis., and we will mail you the only original seed catalog published in America, with samples of Emperor William Oats, Silver King Barley, Billion Dollar Grass, which produces 12 tons per acre. Sainfoin, the dry soil luxuriator, etc., etc., and if you send 14c we add a package of new farm seeds never before seen by you. C. N. U.

Pedigree.

"Well," said the statistical boarder, leaning back in his chair, "we have at this meal the representatives of two widely separated generations."

"How is that?" asked the inquisitive boarder.

"The hen we have been trying to eat was in all probability the great-grandmother of this omelet."—Chicago Tribune.

Not Incapable.

"Do you believe that Mrs. Bradley was incapable of choosing between right and wrong?"

"Nope; she chose wrong unerringly every time."—Houston Post.

The Mind's Eye.

It will probably be news to most people to hear that rudimentary traces of third eye exist among all vertebrates, including man. In the human race the third eye forms part of the pineal gland, a small mass about the size of a pea in almost the very center of the brain. Possibly, therefore, there was more actual truth in the well known expression "the mind's eye" than its originator dreamed of.

Eating on the Trains in Spain.

As even express trains seldom attain a higher rate of speed than twenty-five miles per hour, travel is slow and tedious, though fairly comfortable, and to enjoy Spain one must assume the leisurely indifference of the Spaniard to whom mamma is always the chosen time. He is wise who carries his own luncheons, and never are dainty tea baskets more indispensable than on these long journeys. Spanish etiquette demands that the traveler before partaking of his food must politely offer it to those who share the compartment with him. It may either be graciously accepted or declined. In no country is it so difficult to travel and to secure information, as but little English is spoken even by important officials.—Travel Magazine.

A weak Stomach means weak Stomach nerves, always. And this is true also of the Heart and Kidneys. Its a pity that sick ones continue to drug the stomach or stimulate the Heart and Kidneys. The weak nerves, not the organs themselves, need this help. This explains why Dr. Shoop's Restorative has and is promptly helping so many sick ones. It goes direct to the cause of these diseases. Test this vital truth, and see. All dealers.

Communal Interest.

The following editorial was written by Lee O. Tustison, of the South Whitley News. There is more truth than poetry in this article and it may be made applicable to St. Joe as well as South Whitley.

A recent conversation brought forth the remark that the American people are too busy to say "thank you" and "if you please." A sorry state when mankind is so engrossed with business affairs as to lack time to be polite. It were nearer true to say that the commercial world to-day is too selfish to be reasonably concerned about the general good. Keen competition calls upon all the resources of an individual to make his business successful, and in this day of rapid commercial activity it is not safe to count on assistance from those not directly interested. Each individual independently seeks his own course, often to the exclusion of domestic, social and spiritual things. It is not to be presumed that the average person is so inconsiderate of his fellowman that he purposely neglects to maintain the proper social relation, but he is so absorbed with the present condition and future possibilities of his own affairs that he unconsciously fails to be interested in the general welfare of mankind.

There is nothing that so reveals the largeness of the human heart as that consideration of man which springs from a deeper feeling than mere sentiment—a feeling of genuine brotherly interest. Let it be said that the happiest man is the one who is to some extent interested in his neighbor's welfare and ready to assist in promoting any cause that will be for the common good. This "communal interest" as it may be called, is responsible for many prosperous localities, filled with comfortable homes and flourishing institutions. Communities where the individual does not live for self alone but assists in the promotion of any project that promises good to many. Such communities are drawing profitable institutions their way, and are always alert and ready to make needed internal improvements.

It is quite likely that the people of South Whitley fail to realize the possibilities of their home town is small that no growing institutions can profitably thrive here; others are too much engrossed with their own affair to give much thought to the possibilities that are here; still others are looking for larger things than they can find at home, and another class is content to live peaceful and quiet so long as everything is "as good as it is." There are some optimists however in every locality. Individuals who believe in themselves and their fellowmen—men and women freed from the narrow domain of selfishness, who can see beautiful possibilities all about them.

Were some man or set of men able and willing to forward a scheme whereby all the brain and brawn of South Whitley were employed in this little city would become famous the world over. Here are men and women skilled in various crafts,—individuals with talents sufficient to move the minds of others, which if once at work would cause surrounding communities to "sit up and take notice." All that is needed to bring about larger things is more of a community interest— a willingness to grasp and push those things that are certain to prove of benefit to the majority. The citizens should cherish and help to maintain any growing institutions which spring up in their midst, and should also aim to bring in other institutions. This means that more of the laboring class will reside here; it means that the merchants who provide the necessaries of life are prosperous; it is the means of making this town a better trade center; it means better schools and flourishing churches: it leads property holders to beautify their residence property thus stimulating the price of real estate; in fact there is no end to the possibilities of a town where every citizen gets to work for the common good.

This is but a sweeping glance at the possibilities were every citizen enthused with a pride in this city and willing to cooperate in making it a place of which all could justly be proud. Many cities have already learned the value of cooperative movement and carefully consider any opportunity to improve their condition, thus benefiting the inhabitants. The ideal city life is an exemplification of charity; not only in social life but in business relations. Smaller cities are thus making themselves ideal homes for business men setting the pace that must sooner or later be followed by the larger metropolises.

Pythian Sisters Observe Heart Day.

Last Tuesday evening the Pythian sisters observed Heart's day in a most delightful manner. After the regular session of lodge, two contests were indulged in, which had been carefully prepared by the entertaining committee, Sisters Lizzie Milliman and Daisy DeLong. The first contest was a penny contest in which Miss Vera Copp won first prize and Mrs. Nelson Thomas, the booby prize. The second contest was the contest of hearts which was very exciting. The first prize was awarded to Mrs. Hattie Widney and Mrs. Nelson Thomas again carrying off the booby prize. After this contest an elegant two-course luncheon was served. First course consisted of sandwiches, pickles, cheese, beet salad; second course: coffee, cake and fruit salad. Each member was favored with a heart valentine.

Mortuary Record.

Caroline Robinson Olds, daughter of Paul and Elizabeth Robinson, was born at Swanton, Vermont, Feb. 1st, 1826, and departed this life at Bluffton, Jan. 27th, 1908. Had she lived until the following Saturday she would have been 82 years old. She was united in marriage to Samuel N. Olds, Oct. 30, 1844. Soon after their marriage they removed to Ft. Wayne, where they resided until the year 1866, then coming to Spencerville. They lived there until 1889, when they removed to St. Joe. October 30, 1894 they celebrated their golden wedding. April 14, 1898, her husband departed this life, since which time she has made her home with her children. To this union was born ten children, six of whom are living: Mrs. J. W. Dills of Hicksville, Ohio, Mrs. W. B. McClaran of Fostoria, Ohio; M. E. Olds and Mrs. J. R. Bishop of Bluffton, W. J. and A. B. Olds, of Lagrange. She also leaves one brother, George P. Robinson of Lagrange.

Mrs. Olds was a lifelong devoted christian and for a number of years was a member and active worker in the Lutheran church and Sunday school of St. Joe. In her later years she often spoke of the fact that some of the happiest days of her life her life were spent among the dear people of this community.

METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH.

Notwithstanding the terrible conditions of the roads, the revival meeting at the Fairview M. P. church continues with greatly increased power Meeting evening at 7 p. m. Standard time. Preaching next at 10 a. m at Concord, and at St. Joe at 7 p. m. Evening topic, "The wise decision of a Great Man." Every one welcome to attend these meetings.

Rev. Shirley, Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of the Ft. Wayne District, will speak at the Lutheran Church of St. Joe on Sunday morning and at the Lutheran Church of Spencerville on Sunday evening.

We will try and give you another week before we send out statements, so if you, who are indebted to us, receive one don't be alarmed, but respond promptly. It is a ground hog case that we will have to do it to a few subscribers. So look out.

Last Sunday the pastor of the M. P. church walked over seven miles, preached two sermons and taught two classes in the Sunday school; and he believes what he can do at his age others much younger should cheerfully do.

Our mail carriers have been having their annual experience with bad roads and high waters. Friday and Saturday the routes failed to make their trips on account of the muddy roads. No. 1 could not cross at the Dills bridge on account of the high water and No. 2 could not cross the creek for the same reason. The patrons close to town are carrying their own mail until the routes can come their way.

The saloon fight at Auburn is waxing warm, some of its best citizens are being busily engaged in the work. A perfect organization has been perfected and an earnest effort will be put forth to down the saloons. The second ward contains all of Auburn's saloons and in order to force them out it will be necessary to secure 148 signatures. This ward includes the entire business section. The saloon men are getting busy looking after their interests as well as others. Waterloo is engaged in a similar fight but they have the entire township to draw from.

W. C. DeLONG.

Mrs. Mary Hadsell

Dies at the Advanced Age of 94 Years. Was One of the Early Settlers of DeKalb County.

Mary A Abel, daughter of Daniel and Sally Root Abel, was born in Trumbull county, Ohio, August 21, 1813, and died at the home of her son C. J. Hadsell at Hicksville, Ohio, Feb. 11, 1908, aged 94 years, 5 months and 20 days.

She was united in marriage March 12, 1835, to Elder Jas. Hadsell, who preceded her to the eternal home thirty-two years ago. To this union were born six boys and four daughters, eight of whom grew to manhood and womanhood, two having died in infancy.

In September 1836 she came with her husband and others, to this county and settled on a farm near Coburn's Corners. Cheerfully taking up the duties and braving the hardships incident to life in a new country. In addition to her household duties and the care of her growing family, the frequent absence of her husband as a teacher and minister, placed upon her the additional responsibility of looking after the work of the farm, all of which duties she cheerfully performed.

She united with the Church of Christ at Coburn's Corners soon after its organization and lived an earnest christian life to the end. Her cheerful, sunny disposition was the light of the home and breathed a welcome to all who entered its portals.

She leaves to mourn her departure three sons and two daughters and a host of relatives and friends. What a beautiful stream of light lingers after a great soul has passed beyond: Passed into life for, "I am come that ye might have Life."

Funeral was conducted by L. L. Carpenter at the Coburntown church, Feb. 13, 1908 and burial in Alton cemetery.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

Attempt to Rob Meter is Fatal.

Martin Brady and John Bartolett were asphyxiated at Philadelphia, Pa., in what the police believe was an attempt to obtain money to buy whisky. The two men were found lying in the cellar of Brady's room by a gas inspector. Brady was found with a "quarter in the slot" gas meter in his hand. It had been wrenched from its fastenings. Mrs. Brady had been away from home for several days and her husband invited Bartolett to spend a few days with him. The police believe that the two men tried to extract money with which to buy liquor from the meter and in so doing sacrificed their lives.

Boy is Stabbed to Death.

One boy is dead from stab wounds and three others seriously hurt as a result of a fight in which twenty boys participated in the correctional institute on Randall's Island, near New York City. The dead boy was Meyer O'Shansky, 15 years old. Raefello Sfonzak, the same age, is under guard at the institution charged with having inflicted the wound which caused O'Shansky's death. All the boys involved in the trouble were inmates of the institution.

Mrs. Eliza Gray Dead.

Mrs. Eliza Gray, widow of former Governor of Indiana Isaac P. Gray, died Thursday at her home in Indianapolis, Ind. Her only surviving son, W. Bayard Gray, of Frankfort, was at her bedside during her illness. Former Governor Gray died Feb. 14, 1895, at the City of Mexico, while United States minister to Mexico. Mrs. Gray at the time of her death was president of Anthony Wayne Chapter, Daughters of the Revolution of Indianapolis.

Nun Captures Burglar.

A burglar entered St. Mary's parochial school at Greenwich, Conn., and was searching the building when his presence was suspected and the police were sent for. They started to search the building when the burglar attempted to escape by the main door. One of the sisters stationed there caught him in her arms and although he struggled to escape she managed to hold him until the officers arrived.

Held as Train Wreckers.

On suspicion that they caused the wreck of the express train on the Pennsylvania railroad tracks at Franklinville, N. Y., in which twenty-four persons were injured, Salvatore Galla and Antonio Rose have been arrested at Buffalo. The police think the men removed a fish plate joining two rails at the point where the wreck occurred.

Five Died in Explosion.

It has been definitely established that five persons were killed in the explosion which wrecked the starch manufacturing plant of C. S. Tanner in Providence, R. I. It was thought for a time that six had been killed but investigation developed the fact that Tony Mike and Jack Santos were different names for the same person.

Suffragettes Go to Jail.

A dispatch from London, Eng., says: Nearly fifty women suffragists, who made a raid on the House of Commons, were arraigned in police court and sentenced to pay a fine of one month's imprisonment. All but two of the women preferred to go to jail rather than pay the fine.

Carnegie Offers Gift.

Andrew Carnegie has offered to give $50,000 to Morgan College, a Baltimore (Md.) institution for the education of colored youths, in case the officers and trustees of the institution raise another $50,000.

Leaps from Brooklyn Bridge.

John Grant, an unemployed printer in New York City, jumped from the Brooklyn bridge, and although he landed among floating ice cakes 200 feet below, escaped with only a few minor hurts.

WORK OF CONGRESS

A financial speech by Senator Culberson of Texas and the passage of a bill providing for a government exhibit at the Alaska-Yukon Pacific Exposition were the chief features of interest in the proceedings of the Senate Thursday. Mr. Culberson gave the results of his analysis of the recent report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the Panama canal bond issue, in order to substantiate his contention that national banks of New York were unduly favored in the disposition of public funds, and that the Secretary had violated the law by issuing these bonds. The Senate adjourned until Monday. Consideration of the Indian appropriation bill was resumed in the House. A bitter fight was waged on the proposition to abolish non-reservation schools. Mr. Clayton of Alabama spoke on the President's message and held up the Republicans as being divided into two factions—"the reactionaries and the White House cuckoos." The message, he charged, was an indictment against the Republican party for its dereliction and incompetency.

-:—:-

The Senate was not in session Friday. The session of the House was devoted almost entirely to consideration of the omnibus war claims bill, which was passed after considerable discussion. It carries a total appropriation of $315,000. Mr. Macon of Arkansas in the course of the debate defended the Senate against what he said were aspersions cast upon that body by Mr. Payne of New York, when he predicted that the Senate would load the bill down with a number of unmeritorious claims. A number of private claims bills also were passed, and the House adjourned until Monday.

-:—:-

Senator Aldrich, chairman of the committee on finance, opened the debate in the Senate on his bill to provide an emergency currency. In the galleries was a large audience, among others J. Pierpont Morgan. Senator Foraker made reply to the President's statement concerning the use of the appointing power for political purposes and had letters read showing the President's attitude in one case. Senator Depew defended the course of the Secretary of the Treasury in depositing public funds in New York banks. The criminal code bill was again considered. A fiery speech by Mr. Leake of New Jersey, in which he outlined his opposition to William J. Bryan as a candidate for the presidency, relieved somewhat the monotony of debate in the House. His remarks were greeted with hisses from the Democratic side of the House. The Indian appropriation bill was amended so that the commissioner of Indian affairs, before he carries out the policy of abandoning nonreservation schools, shall investigate the question fully and report to the House. Another amendment restored the appropriations for the Indian schools at Fort Lewis, Colo.; Carson City, Nev., and Mount Pleasant, Mich. Consideration of the Indian bill was not concluded when the House adjourned.

-:—:-

Debate on the Aldrich currency bill in the Senate Tuesday was followed with interest by many bankers in the galleries. The discussion was directed chiefly toward the provision for railroad bonds as a basis for emergency circulation, a wide difference of opinion being developed concerning the method that should be adopted in determining the valuation to be given such bonds as well as opposition to the use of such security under any terms. The bill was finally read through and committee amendments incorporated, it being understood that the entire bill is to be subject to amendment hereafter. Interest in the proceedings of the House attached to a criticism of the President by Mr. Tawney, chairman of the committee on appropriations, for having, as Mr. Tawney charged, appointed the inland waterways commission without authority of law. The debate was on the urgent deficiency bill and grew out of a Senate amendment to pay John H. Bankhead, now Senator from Alabama, for his services on the commission. The House refused to accept the amendment. In a vigorous speech Mr. Harrison of New York condemned Secretary of State Root for his manner of handling the negotiations with Russia regarding passports to Russian Jewish citizens of the United States, while Mr. Lowden of Illinois defended the Secretary. The Indian appropriation bill was amended in several important particulars. Another of the large supply measures, the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, was reported.

-:—:-

Senator Rayner of Maryland spoke at length in the Senate Wednesday on the currency bill. The Senate devoted two hours to considering the criminal code bill. The tariff question and the President's message were the principal themes of discussion in the House. In the course of the concluding debate on the Indian appropriation bill the proceedings were enlivened by Messrs. Hamill and Leake of New Jersey, both Democrats, discussing the virtues and faults of William J. Bryan. Mr. Leake reasserted his charge that Mr. Bryan did not represent the principles for which Democracy stood.

ARMY DISCOURAGED IF PAY IS NOT RAISED

Officers Deeply Concerned Over Future if Men Are Not Given Adequate Compensation.

MORE INFANTRY IS NEEDED.

Half-Filled Regiments Result of Low Wages for Work—Enlightening Article by General Carter.

Washington correspondence:

One could not exaggerate if he would the spirit of actual hopelessness with which the officers of the American army will view the future if Congress fails at the present session to pass the bill granting an increase of pay to the rank and file. At some of the posts there are barely enough soldiers to do guard duty as it ought to be done. It is a present condition with which the army officers are concerned first, and it is a future condition over which they are concerned second. The future condition is the more serious, because it means that if things go on as they have been doing the country and its island possessions will be defenseless.

Men who have worn shoulder knots since the days of the civil war say in all seriousness that unless the people bring pressure to bear upon Congress to provide adequate pay for the soldiers the people will find themselves, as far as the regular army enters into the matter, practically without defense, and reduced almost to the stage of having no seasoned force as a nucleus of efficiency for untrained national guardsmen and green volunteers. Post libraries, recreation rooms, field athletics, comfortable quarters, good food, good clothing, free medical attendance and plunge and shower baths all avail nothing to attract men to a life which would draw them by the thousands if a decent allowance of pay for the service they render in peace, and always have been willing to render in war, were added to the inducements.

Joint encampments of the regulars and the national guardsmen will be held next summer. The regulars enjoy camp as well as garrison service, though the duties are harder. It is the belief of officers of the army that these encampments, into whose military life the national state soldiers enter, would induce enlistments from the national guard by the hundreds if the men knew that their pay would be commensurate with the work they are willing to do for their country.

In a recent number of the North American Review General William H. Carter, commanding the Department of the Lakes, has an enlightening article under the strongly suggestive title, "When Diplomacy Fails." It is written by an officer not given to sounding trumpet alarm notes and who for the worth of his service was made a Brigadier General years before the time when under the ordinary rule of promotion he would have been entitled to wear his star.

Army officials believe that if the establishment were enlarged post life would be far more attractive because of the greater number of soldiers in the garrison. If the proposed advance in pay is passed by Congress the officers also believe that there will be no trouble in keeping the ranks filled, and that re-enlistments will be the rule rather than the exception, as they are to-day.

MISSOURI BANK ROBBED.

Five Bandits Wreck Building and Terrorize Town of Rich Hill.

Taking $23,000 after dynamiting and wrecking the building of the Farmers and Manufacturers' Bank in Rich Hill, Mo., five bandits, heavily armed, terrorized citizens early the other morning and after exchanging shots with the sheriff's posse escaped to the rough country south. No one was injured.

A terrific explosion caused by the dynamiting of the vault of the bank awakened the town half an hour after midnight and the population hurried to the two-story brick bank in the center of the city. Many arrived in time to see the robbers riding away. Some of the citizens opened fire on the fleeing bandits and the latter returned the fire.

Cashier J. W. Jamison said that all the available cash in the bank was taken by the robbers. The building was ruined and several other buildings were damaged by the explosion. The sheriff organized a posse, but the robbers had a good start.

DAVIS NOT TO MARRY.

Family Opposes Union of Aged Millionaire and Miss Ashford.

Miss Maud Ashford will not become the wife of former Senator Henry Gassaway Davis, the multi-millionaire West Virginian and father-in-law of Senator Stephen B. Elkins of that State. The engagement between Miss Ashford and Mr. Davis has been broken, it is stated. There will be no breach of promise suit, no money settlement by MISS MAUD ASHFORD.

Mr. Davis on Miss Ashford and no further consideration of an alliance between them. These statements, according to a Washington dispatch, were made by Miss Ashford. Rumors had been circulated that this would be the outcome, because of the strong opposition to the proposed marriage by Mrs. Elkins, daughter of Mr. Davis, and members of her family.

YOUNG KING OF PORTUGAL.

Manuel II, at Age of Eighteen Takes His Murdered Father's Place.

Very unexpectedly a boy of 18 is raised to the responsibilities of King of Portugal. Young Prince Manuel naturally felt that the burdens and dignity of that high place were far removed from him. His royal father was in the prime of life and his elder brother stood between him and succession. But the bullets of the assassins removed the King and the crown prince in a twinkling and upon an untrained boy develops the tremendous duties and cares of Kingship.

Manuel II., who was proclaimed King the morning after his father's death, has served his country in the navy. He is a blonde, tall, well educated and considered good-looking. He is said to possess the qualities which go toward making a determined ruler.

MANUEL II.

Fortunately for him, in the present disturbed condition of affairs England is bound by treaty not only to prevent an invasion of his country but to maintain the present dynasty on the throne. Any effort, therefore, to place a pretender in his place would lead to armed intervention on the part of Great Britain.

Repudiates "Christian Psychology."

Bishop Fallows, who is heading the movement of Christian psychology in Chicago, has made it very clear that this movement is not to be mistaken as a phase of Christian Science. Now Mr. Archibald McLellan, speaking for Mrs. Eddy through the Christian Science Sentinel, utterly repudiates any recognition of Christian psychology, saying: "Her teachings show that she cannot indorse as Christianity the two distinctly contradictory statements and points of view contained in the term 'Christian psychology'—otherwise Christian materialism." Speaking of the teaching of Jesus, he says: "He never complicated spirit with matter, never taught the finite opposite of God, spirit, infinity, all. As revealed in Christian Science, God is unconscious of matter, for if he is spirit and all, he cannot know aught that would be the very unlikeness of himself in quantity, quality and divinity."

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Conditions of trade in the Chicago district are summarized in the weekly review issued by R. G. Dun & Co., as follows:

Trade activity felt the check imposed by the severe weather and the marketing of farm products was restricted, but the general conditions toward recovery remain encouraging and a healthier tone appears in the leading branches. Much attention is devoted to the course of distributive dealings in mercantile lines, and thus far the indications are mainly satisfactory.

Good headway is made in reducing both local and country stocks, although clearance sales are yet in evidence.

The markets for wholesale staples show a large attendance of visiting buyers and increasing selections are noted in the textiles, footwear, furniture, clothing and hardware. Road salesmen report more numerous orders and the outlook is better for spring and summer wares, but there is some hesitation due to a feeling that cost may yet go lower.

Agricultural conditions remain exceptionally good, and with a continuance of high values for grain the prospects become brighter for wider consumption of necessaries.

Financial affairs reflect gratifying reaction from the depression and more funds seek investment. Money is in greater supply, with the discount rates easier.

Additional resumptions in the iron industry and further decrease of idle workers furnish the main developments in the principal lines of production.

Woodworking is more extensive than a month ago, and this imparts a better tone to lumber dealings.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 32, against 37 last week and 25 a year ago.

NEW YORK.

While retail trade in some lines of wearing apparel has been helped by the coldest or stormiest weather of the winter, other branches of trade and industry and transportation have been interfered with sufficiently to make the week as a whole a rather quiet one the country over. Wholesale and jobbing trade has been rather quiet, and, while there are signs that improvement along conservative lines is making progress, the caution as regards spring buying is as marked as ever. From the Southwest come reports that some canceled orders are being reinstated. From the South come advices of slow trade and collections, but some lumber mills are reported resuming with stocks reduced by the recent shutdown. Eastern trade reports are of quiet, except where helped by special weather-born demand. Business failures in the United States for the week ending Feb. 6 number 272, against 339 last week, 198 in the like week of 1907, 204 in 1906, 207 in 1905 and 202 in 1904. Canadian failures for this week number 50, as against 44 last week and 18 in this week a year ago.—Bradstreet's Commercial Report.

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

A. CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER X.

During the months which Ezra Girdlestone had spent in Africa the affairs of the firm in Fenchurch street had been exceedingly prosperous. Trade upon the coast had been brisker than usual, and three of the company's ships had come in at short intervals with excellent cargoes. Among these was the Black Eagle, which, to the astonishment of Captain Hamilton Miggs and the disgust of his employer, had weathered a severe gale in the Channel, and had arrived safe and sound once more. This run of luck, supplemented by the business capacity of the old merchant and the indomitable energy of young Dimsdale, made the concern look so flourishing that the former felt more than ever convinced that if he could but stave off the immediate danger things would soon right themselves. Hence he read with delight the letters from Africa, in which his son narrated the success of the conspiracy and the manner in which the miners had been hoodwinked. The old man's figure grew straighter and his step more firm as the conviction grew upon him that the company would soon return once again to its former condition of affluence.

It may be imagined, therefore, that when the rumors of a bona fide diamond find in the Orange Free State came to his ears John Girdlestone was much agitated and distressed. On the same day that he saw the announcement in the papers he received a letter from his son announcing the failure of their enterprise. After narrating the robbery, the pursuit, the death of Farintosh and the announcement of the new discovery, it gave an account of his subsequent movements.

"As to our speculation, the letter said, it is, of course, all up. Even when the Russian business proves to be a hoax, the price of stones will remain very low on account of these new fields. It is possible that we may sell our lot at some small profit, but it won't be the royal road to a fortune that you prophesied, nor will it help the firm out of the rut into which you have shoved it. My only regret in leaving Africa like this is that Williams will have no one to prosecute him."

This letter was a rude shock to the African merchant. Within a week of the receipt of it his son Ezra, gloomy and travel stained, walked into the sanctum at Fenchurch street and confirmed all the evil tidings by word of mouth. The old man was of too tough a fiber to break down completely, but his bony hands closed convulsively upon the arms of the chair, and a cold perspiration broke out upon his wrinkled forehead as he listened to such details as his son vouchsafed to afford him.

"You have your stones all safe, though?" he stammered out at last.

"They are in my box at home," said Ezra, gloomy and morose, leaning against the white marble mantelpiece. "We'll be lucky if we clear as much as they cost and a margin for my expenses and Langworthy's. A broken head is all that I have got from your fine scheme."

"Who could foresee such a thing?" the old man said, plaintively. "The fall in prices is sure to be permanent?"

"It will last for some years, anyway," Ezra answered. "The Jagersfontein gravel is very rich, and there seems to be plenty of it."

"And within a few months we must repay both capital and interest. We are ruined!" The old merchant spoke in a broken voice, and his head sank upon his breast. "When that day comes," he continued, "the firm which has been for thirty years above reproach, and a model to the whole city, will be proclaimed as a bankrupt concern. Worse still, it will be shown to have been kept afloat for years by means which will be deemed fraudulent. I tell you, my dear son, that if any means could be devised which would avert this—any means—I should not hesitate to adopt them. I am a frail old man, and I feel that the short balance of my life would be a small thing for me to give in return for the assurance that the work which I have built up should not be altogether thrown away."

"Your life cannot affect the matter one way or the other unless it were more heavily insured than it is," Ezra said, callously, though somewhat moved by his father's intensity of manner. "Perhaps there is some way out of the wood yet," he added, in a more cheerful tone.

"It's so paying, so prosperous—that's what goes to my heart. If it had ruined itself it would be easier to bear it, but it is sacrificed to outside speculations—my wretched, wretched speculations. That is what makes it so hard." He touched the bell, and Gilray answered the summons. "Listen to this, Ezra. What was our turn over last month, Gilray?"

"Fifteen thousand pounds, sir," said the little clerk, bobbing up and down like a buoy in a gale in his delight at seeing the junior partner once again.

"And the expenses?"

"Nine thousand three hundred. Uncommon brown you look, Mr. Ezra, to be sure, uncommon brown and well. I hopes as you enjoyed yourself in Africa, sir, and was too much for them Hottentots and Boers." With this profound ethnological remark Mr. Gilray bobbed himself out of the room and went back radiantly to his ink-stained desk.

"Look at that," the old man said, when the click of the outer door showed that the clerk was out of earshot. "Over five thousand profit in a month. Is it not terrible that such a business should go to ruin? What a fortune it would have been for you!"

"It must be saved!" cried Ezra with meditative brows and hands plunged deep in his trouser pockets. "There is that girl's money. Could we not get the temporary use of it?"

"Impossible!" his father answered with a sigh. "It is so tied up in the will that she cannot sign it away herself until she comes of age. There is no way of touching it except by her marriage—or by her death."

"Then we must have it by the only means open to us."

"And that is?"

"I must marry her."

"You will?"

"I shall. Here is my hand on it."

"Then we are saved," cried the old man, throwing up his tremulous hands. "Girdlestone & Son will weather the storm yet."

"But Girdlestone becomes a sleeping partner," said Ezra. "It's for my own sake I do it and not for yours;" with which frank remark he drew his hat down over his brows and set off for Eccleston square.

* * * * * * * *

One day, as Thomas Dimsdale was making his way cityward at a rather earlier hour than was customary with him, he missed the usual apparition at the window. Looking round blankly in search of some explanation of this absence, he perceived in the garden a pretty white bonnet which glinted among the leaves, and on closed inspection a pair of bright eyes, which surveyed him merrily from underneath it. The gate was open. It may be imagined that he was somewhat late at the office that morning and on many subsequent mornings, until the clerks began to think that their new employer was losing the enthusiasm for business which had possessed him.

It chanced that one morning the interview between the lovers had lasted rather longer than usual, and had been concluded by Kate's returning to the house, while Tom remained sitting upon the garden seat lost in such a reverie as affects men in his position. While thus pleasantly employed, his thoughts were suddenly recalled to earth by the appearance of a dark shadow on the gravel in front of him, and looking up he saw the senior partner standing a short distance away and regarding him with anything but an amiable expression upon his face. He had himself been having a morning stroll in the garden, and had overseen the whole of the recent interview without the preoccupied lovers being aware of his presence.

"Are you coming to the office?" he asked sternly, "If so, we can go together."

Tom rose and followed him out of the gardens without a word. He knew from the other's expression that all was known to him, and in his heart he was not sorry. His only fear was that the old man's anger might fall upon his ward, and this he determined to prevent. They walked side by side as far as the station in complete silence, but on reaching Fenchurch street Girdlestone asked his young partner to step into his private sanctum.

"Now, sir," he said, as he closed the door behind him, "I think that I have a right to inquire what the meaning may be of the scene of which I was an involuntary witness this morning?"

"It means," Tom answered firmly but gently, "that I am engaged to Miss Harston, and have been for some time."

"Oh, indeed," Girdlestone answered coldly, sitting down at his desk and turning over the pile of letters.

During the long silent walk the merchant had been revolving in his mind what course he should pursue, and he had come to the conclusion that it was more easy to guide this impetuous stream of youth than to attempt to stem it. He did not realize the strength of the tie that bound these two young people together, and imagined that with judgment and patience it might yet be snapped. It was, therefore, with as good an imitation of geniality as his angular visage would permit of that he answered his companion's confession.

"You can hardly wonder at my being surprised," he said. "Such a thing never entered my mind for a moment. You would have done better to have confided in me before."

"I must ask your pardon for not having done so."

"As far as you are concerned," said John Girdlestone affably, "I believe you to be hardworking and right principled. Your conduct since you joined the firm has been everything that I could desire."

Tom bowed his acknowledgements, much pleased by the preamble.

"With regard to my ward," continued the senior partner, speaking very slowly and evidently weighing his words, "I could not wish for her to have a better husband. In considering such a question I have, however, as you may imagine, to consult above everything else the wishes of my dead friend, Mr. John Harston, the father of the young lady to whom you say you are engaged. A trust has been reposed in me, and that trust must, of course, be fulfilled to the letter."

"Certainly," said Tom, wondering in his own mind how he could ever have brought himself for one moment to think evil of this kindly old man.

"It was one of Mr. Harston's most clearly expressed wishes that no words or even thoughts of such matters should be allowed to come in his daughter's way until she had attained maturity, by which he meant the age of one-and-twenty."

"But he could not foresee the circumstances," Tom pleaded. "I am sure that a year or so will make no difference in her sentiments in this matter."

"My duty is to carry out his instructions to the letter. I won't say, however," continued Mr. Girdlestone, "that circumstances might not arise which might induce me to shorten this probationary period. If my further acquaintance with you confirms the high impression which I now have of your commercial ability, that of course would have weight with me; and again, if I find that Miss Harston's mind is made up upon the point, that also would influence my judgment."

"And what are we to do in the meantime?" asked the junior partner anxiously.

"In the meantime neither you nor your people must write to her, or speak to her, or hold any communication with her whatever. If I find you or them doing so, I shall be compelled, in justice to Mr. Harston's last request, to send her to some establishment abroad where she shall be entirely out of your way. My mind is irrevocably made up upon that point. It is not a matter of personal inclination, but of conscience."

"And how long is this to last?" cried Tom.

"It will depend upon yourselves. If you prove yourself to be a man of honor in this matter I may be inclined to sanction your addresses. In the meantime, you must give me your word to let it rest, and neither to attempt to speak to Miss Harston nor to see her, nor to allow your parents to communicate with her. The last condition may seem to you to be hard, but, in my eyes, it is a very important one. Unless you can bring yourself to promise all this, my duty will compel me to remove my ward entirely out of your reach, a course which would be painful to her and inconvenient to myself."

"But I must let her know of this arrangement. I must tell her that you hold out hopes to us on condition that we keep apart for a time."

"It would be cruel not to allow you to do that," Girdlestone answered. "You may send her one letter, but, remember, there shall be no reply to it."

"Thank you, sir; thank you!" Tom cried, fervently. "I have something to live for now. This separation will but make our hearts grow fonder. What change can time make in either of us?"

"Quite so," said John Girdlestone, with a smile. "Remember, there must be no more walking through the square. You must remain absolutely apart if you wish to gain my consent."

"It is hard, very, very hard. But I will promise to do it. What would I not promise which would lead to our earlier union?"

"That is settled then. In the meantime, I should be obliged if you would go down to the docks and look after the loading of the transferable corrugated iron houses for New Calabar."

"All right, sir, and thank you for your kindness," said Tom, bowing himself out. He hardly knew whether to be pleased or grieved over the result of his interview; but on the whole, satisfaction prevailed, since at the worst it was but to wait for a year or so, while there seemed to be some hopes of gaining the guardian's consent before that. On the other hand, he had pledged himself to separate from Kate, but that would, he reflected, only make their reunion the sweeter.

When the hour of luncheon arrived no thought of food was in the lad's head, but, burying himself in the back parlor of a little Blackwall public house, he called for pen, ink and paper, and proceeded to indite a letter to his sweetheart. Never was so much love and comfort and advice and hope compressed into the limits of four sheets of paper or contained in the narrow boundary of a single envelope. Tom read it over after he had finished, and felt that it feebly expressed his thoughts; but then, what lover ever yet did succeed in getting his thoughts satisfactorily represented upon paper. Having posted this effusion, in which he had carefully explained the conditions imposed upon him, Tom felt considerably more light-hearted, and returned with renewed vigor to the loading of the corrugated iron. He would hardly have felt so satisfied had he seen John Girdlestone receiving that same letter from the hands of the footman, and reading it afterwards in the privacy of his bedroom with a sardonic smile upon his face. Still less contented would he have been had he beheld the merchant tearing it into small fragments and making a bonfire of it in his capacious grate. Next morning Kate looked in vain out of the accustomed window, and was sore at heart when no tall figure appeared in sight, and no friendly hand waved a morning salutation.

Blouse or Shirt Waist.

The simple shirt waist finished in tailor style is a favorite one of the season, and is to be noted in silk, in flannel, and in cashmere, made in various colors to match the prevailing suits, so that, while there is a separate blouse worn, the one color can be maintained throughout the costume, as well as in washable fabrics. This one is distinctly novel and smart in effect, while it retains the simplicity essential to waists of the sort and is finished with stitched edges. Buttons are used as trimming as well as for practical closing, however, and as there are numberless beautiful ones found in the season's display there is ample opportunity for excellent effects.

This woman says Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound saved her life. Read her letter.

Mrs. T. C. Willadsen, of Manning, Iowa, writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"I can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound saved my life, and I cannot express my gratitude to you in words. For years I suffered with the worst forms of female complaints, continually doctoring and spending lots of money for medicine without help. I wrote you for advice, followed it as directed, and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has restored me to perfect health. Had it not been for you I should have been in my grave to-day. I wish every suffering woman would try it."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration. Why don't you try it?

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

OLD MILL A LANDMARK.

Beggared Man Who Later Laid Foundation for Fortune in Michigan.

Among the landmarks of Farmington, Mich., is an old water-power mill standing by the side of the now insignificant stream that flows through the village, a branch of the River Rouge. The old mill, known as the Power Mill and later as the Philbrick Mill, is on the farm of John Power, county treasurer. It was built by Samuel Power in 1838 and in that early day was the most imposing structure of its kind in the eastern part of Michigan outside of Detroit.

The castings were all made at Ann Arbor and laboriously hauled by wagon from that city. The consequence was that when at last the mill was completed Mr. Power and an uncle from whom he had borrowed money to complete the mill were impoverished. The country was so sparsely settled at that time that customers were few and the business a losing one.

Mr. Power became discouraged and gave up the business, and with all his earthly belongings in a small satchel and 75 cents in money left Farmington to seek his fortune elsewhere. He landed penniless in Grand Rapids. He finally secured a job on the railroad and eventually became a rich railroad contractor. He returned here in after years and married a Farmington girl. At his death he was worth more than $100,000. His widow, a comparatively young woman at the time of her husband's death, became a teacher, and for many years has been at the head of an educational institution.—Grand Rapids Herald.

COFFEE DRINKING.

A Doctor Says It Weakens the Heart.

"In my opinion," says a well-known German physician, "no one can truthfully say coffee agrees with him, as it has long since been proven that caffeine, contained in coffee, is an injurious, poisonous substance which weakens and degenerates the heart muscles.

"For this reason the regular use of coffee, soon or late, causes a condition of undernourishment, which leads to various kinds of organic disease.

"Convinced of this fact, I have often sought for some healthful beverage to use instead of coffee. At last I found the thing desired in Postum. Having had occasion to forbid people using coffee, whose hearts were affected, I have recommended Postum as a beverage, since it is free from all injurious or exciting substances. I know this from results in my own family, and among patients.

"Hundreds of persons who now use Postum in place of coffee, are greatly benefited thereby." "There's a Reason."

Stop That Cold

To check early colds or Grippe with "Preventics" means sure defeat for Pneumonia. To stop a cold with Preventics is safer than to let it run and be obliged to cure it afterwards. To be sure, Preventics will cure even a deeply seated cold, but taken early—at the sneeze-stage—they break, or head off these early colds. That's surely better. That's why they are called Preventics.

Preventics are little Candy Cold Cures. No Quinine, no physic, nothing sickening. Nice for the children—and thoroughly safe too. If you feel chilly, if you sneeze, if you ache all over, think of Preventics. Promptness may also save half your usual sickness. And don't forget your child. If there is feverishness, night or day. Herein probably lies Preventics' greatest efficiency. Sold in 25c boxes for the pocket, also in 25c boxes of 48 Preventics. Insist on your druggists giving you

Drink's Growing Peril.

The great Temperance wave which is now sweeping over our land is directed almost altogether against the saloons, which is all right as far as it goes, but we must not forget that brewers and distillers are at the head of all saloons and that putting out a few saloons will not cure the disease. If we would stop licensing the brewer and distiller to manufacture the stuff it could not be sold. If we vote out the saloons, they supply the trade direct to customers. We are also led to think by all this agitation of the saloon business and the saloons that are being knocked out that there would be less drank at this time, but government statistics just out, proves to us that it is largely on the increase as shown by an article taken from a Chicago paper:

The United States government reports drink consumption under three general heads: "Distilled Spirits," "Wines," and "Malt Liquors." The year 1907 saw an enormous increase in the consumption of distilled spirits, more than twelve million gallons more having been consumed in that year than in the preceding year, although that year, in turn, was almost seven million gallons in advance of the year which preceded it.

A great deal is said by a certain class of beery philosophers about the reduction of the consumption of spirits because of the increase of the use of beer. The tables, however, show that since 1896, when "prosperity" began to shine again upon the American people, there has been an enormous and, with the exception of one year, a continuous increase in the consumption of spirits. The increase in ten years amounts to a practical doubling of the total consumption.

In 1896, when all the "wicked Democrats" went out of power and "the only party that ever did anything for temperance" assumed the reins of government, the consumption of spirits was 70,325,745 gallons. In the fiscal year 1907, which closed the last day of June just past, the total consumption of spirits reached 140,084,436.

In the matter of wine, as it has already been stated, the figures are not yet available, excepting that we know that more than a million more gallons were imported during the fiscal year which closed with June than during any other year of American history. In 1896 we imported 4,101,686 gallons of wine from foreign countries. In 1907 we imported 7,659,595 gallons. Up to the present year the increase in the use of domestic wines has also been enormous, in 1896 the total being a trifle more than fourteen and one-half million, and in 1906 almost forty-millions of gallons.

When we come to the consumption of malt liquors, we are confronted by a total of staggering magnitude. During the fiscal year 1907 the American people drank almost two billion gallons of beer, or, exactly stated, 1,821,867,027 gallons, an increase of more than 180,000,000 gallons over the year 1906.

But the reader will entertain the hope, for a moment, that astounding as these totals are, the situation is not quite so bad as it would appear at first sight, for the population of the country has been growing and perhaps he will think, more rapidly than the totals have grown.

Here again we are doomed to disappointment. The per capita consumption of both spirits and beer has increased. The per capita beer consumption or the fiscal year 1907 was greater than ever before in the history of the American people, while the consumption of spirits in per capita figures, not only exceeded the year 1906 by more than one-tenth of a gallon, but outstretched every other year since 1873, far back toward the times we are taught to look upon as the "Dark Ages" of the temperance reform. That is to say: For every man, woman and child in the American republic, 1.63 gallons of spirits and 21.23 gallons of beer were consumed in the fiscal year 1907, to say nothing about the wine.

The beer consumption is an increase of more than one gallon per capita, while a comparison with former years shows that the per capita consumption has doubled since 1885.

ED MAY,

Butler, Ind.

This is the government's official estimate based upon the present population.

Making the comparison with the year 1896 when the whiskey consumption reached its lowest point in the "Democratic hard times," it is found that the percapita consumption under the administration of the "party of moral ideas" has from 1,01 gallons to 1.63 gallons of spirits, and that the beer consumption has grown from 15.84 gallons to 21.23 gallons.

There is little reason to doubt that the wine consumption will also show a large increase.

Neglected Colds Threaten Life.

(From the Chicago Tribune)

"Don't trifle with a cold," is good advice for prudent men and women. It may be vital in the case of a child. Proper food, good ventilation, and dry, warm clothing are the proper safeguards against colds. If they are maintained through the changeable weather of autumn, winter and spring, the chances of a surprise from ordinary colds will be slight. But the ordinary light cold will become severe if neglected and a well established ripe cold is to the germs of diphtheria what honey is to the bee. The greatest menace to child life at this season of the year is the neglected cold." Whether it is a child or adult, the cold slight or severe, the very best treatment that can be adopted is to give Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is safe and sure. The great popularity and immense sale of this preparation has been attained by its remarkable cures of this ailment. A cold never results in pneumonia when it is given. For sale by H. Milliman, St. Joe; F. R. Bowman, Spencerville.

Heart Troubles

The heart may be weak just the same as the eyes, stomach or other organs. It often happens that a person is born with a weak heart. Then again disease, fevers, over-exertion, anxiety, nervousness, rheumatism, etc. weaken the heart. The result is shortness of breath, palpitation, pain in the heart, or in some of the nerves of the chest or abdomen. The heart should be strengthened with a tonic, and for this nothing equals Dr. Miles' Heart Cure.

"I had LaGrippe last fall as I thought in a mild form. I was weak, tired feeling, and short of breath, could hardly go about, and a good deal of the time sort of an asthmatic breathing and extremely nervous. I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and Nervine and now I feel so much better in every way. I am so thankful that I began taking this medicine, and shall not hesitate to tell others how much good it has done me."

Met Assesors

State Tax Commissioner Gave Advice to Township Assessors.

DELINQUENTS DEALT WITH.

John W. Wingate, representing the State Tax Commission of Indiana addressed the assessors of DeKalb county in the court house Wednesday morning. In addition to the officials who attended the meeting and listened to the address with marked attention and great profit, quite a number of our citizens were present. Mr. Wingate is a practical man of affairs an authority on taxes and with it all a most forceful and gifted talker. He has an eloquence born out of an intense interest and desire to accomplish his work, and he drove his points home.

His subject was "Taxes" and by way of leading up to his subject he spoke of the old Anglo-Saxon cry of "too much taxes."

Mr. Wingate stated that he would talk on the subject of the assessment of property and the collection of taxes. He was gratified to know that the commissioners were present and thought the county council would also profit by being there. There is a growing complaint in this state because of the increasing rate of taxation and this increase arises from three main causes. One of them is a perfectly legitimate and commendable one and the others are not and must be corrected.

The first reason is that the state has expended large sums in providing for the care of dependents. No state in the union is ahead of Indiana in this respect. The cost of keeping up the charitable institutions of the state is from $161 to $172 per inmate. Then there have been roads, bridges, school houses and sidewalks built at public expense in state, county and city. The total tax of the state in 1890 was approximately $700,000,000 and in 1900 it was about $1,000,000,000.

For the second two reasons the officers are to blame because it is their duty to see that such things do not occur. The second is the partial or improper list the property are at fault if there is a well grounded complaint that all the property is not on the tax duplicate. The state has $224,000,000 worth of property listed.

The third reason for the high tax rate is the great amount of delinquent tax that is carried all over the state. The individual who fails to pay his tax is just as truly a defaulter as the guardian who fails to report the affairs of a ward. A man has no moral right to use money for private ends which should be paid as taxes. The county treasurers, the prosecuting attorneys and the state tax commissioners have been to lienient in the matter of enforcing the collection of the delinquent tax.

The state board has awakened to the situation and is bent on correcting the evil. A crusade has begun and will be pushed to the limit of the law in the prosecution of the wilful offenders. The honest tax payer is a surety for those delinquent and the state board is making an effort to make escape from the payment of taxes more and more difficult.

Mr. Wingate told the assessors that they had a big proposition on their hands and that it meant something to them to discharge their full duty. The salary a man gets is a small consideration compared with the importance of the way in which he does his work. He said that the tax was to be collected and that the delinquents would better come in and see the county treasurer and adjust their differences. The amount of a delinquent tax is the same as a subsidy placed on the people for the protection of the delinquent and is an injustice.

The section of the law which contains the nucleus of the whole subject of assessing and the collecting of taxes was then read and explained in detail. The law provides for the assessment of all the property and not a part. It explains the obligations of the assessor and the one assessed. The Indiana tax law is a model for many other states and was adopted by the constitutional convention of Michigan as it is with the exception that they did not provide for a county assessor. The present law is ample for the needs of the state and if there is any fault it is with the officers, whose duty it is to discharge the law. What we really need in such a case is new officers, not new law. The assessors are required to call upon each person and provide him with the specified blanks.

Find the person is the meaning of this. The citizen is required to report to the assessor all the property assessable in his name. The question of a uniform assessment is of far more importance than that of a high or low rate. The law places great power with the county assessor He is at once the judge, jury, clerk of court and can render the verdict in all matters arising in connection with the work.

The tax lists are sections of the law and are as sacred as any other section of the laws of the state. He emphasized again and again that it was the duty of the assessor to get all of the property; that it was the quality of the rate sheet rather than the number of them. There are eleven listed fiduciary capacities in which it is possible for a man to very easily avoid the payment of taxes. These should have careful attention. —Courier.

To Higher Court.

Deputy Clerk Atkinson has just completed the transcript in the case of Geisinger vs Nusbaum, appealed to the Appellate court. It is 342 pages long and has the ear marks of much careful work. Attorney McNagny of Columbia City, was the last to inspect it and stamped his O. K. on it in a letter in which he said, "I notice it is very carefully prepared, etc." Miss Susie Berlein and Glen VanAuken did the stenographic work under dictation of Mr. Atkinson. The case was begun when Miss Berlein was court reporter but Mr. VanAuken took her place before it was decided. Rose & Rose of this city, are Geisinger's attorneys and C. M. Brown of this city, Marshal, McNagny & Clugston of Columbia City, are Nusbaum's attorneys. This was the case brought by Dr. Geisinger against Dr. Nusbaum to prevent him from practicing medicine as per contract when he purchased property and business of Nusbaum in locating in Auburn. Judge Bratton decided in favor of Dr. Geisinger and enjoined Dr. Nusbaum from practicing for a period of five years. Dr. Nusbaum appealed the case and it is now ready to be sent up.—Dispatch.

A Cause for Thanks.

In the audience at a lecture on China there was a very pious old lady who was slightly deaf. She thought the lecturer was preaching, and every time he came to a period she would say "Amen!" or some other pious exclamation. The people in the audience, which was composed mostly of the village church members, knew she was being reverent and did not even smile when she exclaimed until finally the lecturer mentioned some faroff city in China, saying, "I live there." At this point clearly and distinctly could be heard the old lady saying, "Thank God for that."

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury, as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten-fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

WASHINGTON'S LAST HOUR.

Lear's Narrative of How the Father of America Died.

The most interesting chapter of Washington Irving's "Life of Washington" is the narrative of the last hours of the hero, detailed by his faithful private secretary, Tobias Lear, Dec. 12, 1790, Gen. Washington rode over his estate and exposed himself to the severity of an unusual winter storm. On the night of Dec. 13 he was taken ill with ague, sore throat, and difficulty of breathing. The next morning he sent for his family physician, Dr. Craik, of Alexandria, and, pending his arrival he ordered his overseer, Rawlins, to bleed him. This task Rawlins performed very reluctantly, but the general insisted, and a half-pint of blood was taken from his arm. In addition a gargle was prepared for his throat and external applications were made to the throat, and a warm foot bath was given, but no relief came. Dr. Craik arrived between 8 and 9 o'clock and with him came Drs. Dick and Brown. Additional bleeding was resorted to by the doctors and other remedies given. Washington told his wife to get his two wills and ordered her to burn one of them, it being revoked by the other. Mr. Lear then continues his narrative as folows:

"After this was done I returned to his bedside. He said to me: 'I find I'm going. My breath can not last long. I believed from the first that the disorder would prove fatal.' He told me to arrange his accounts and settle his books. I told him I hoped he was not so near his end. He observed, smiling, that he certainly was, and as it was the debt which we must all pay he looked to the event with perfect resignation.

"In the course of the afternoon he appeared to be in great distress from the difficulty of breathing, and frequently changed his position in the bed. I endeavored to raise him and turn him with as much ease as possible. 'I am afraid I fatigue you too much,' the general would say. Upon being assured to the contrary he observed gratefully: 'It is a debt we must pay to each other, and I hope when you want aid of this kind you will find it.'

"About 5 o'clock his old friend, Dr. Craik, came to his room. 'Doctor,' he said, 'I die hard, but I am not afraid to go. I believed from my first attack that I should not survive it. My breath can not last long.' The doctor pressed his hands in silence, retired from the bedside, and sat by the fire absorbed in grief. Between 5 and 6 the other physicians came in and he was assisted to sit up in bed. 'I feel I am going,' said he. 'I thank you for your attentions, but I pray you to take no more trouble about me, but let me go off quietly. I can not last long.' All retired except Dr. Craik and myself. The general continued uneasy and restless, but without complaining, frequently asking what hour it was.

"Further remedies were tried without avail in the evening. He took whatever was offered him, did what was desired by the physicians, and never uttered a sigh or complaint. About 10 o'clock he made several attempts to speak to me before he could effect it. At length he said: 'I am just going; have me decently buried and do not let my body be put into the vault in less than three days after I am dead.'"

Remembered George Well.

This quaint story is told concerning one of Washington's colored nurses, an old mammy, who was discovered in his native town of Fredericksburg, and who could not have been born when the general died. Mrs. Pickett—the widow of General Pickett of Southern fame told it with a hearty appreciation of its merits.

"She was an old woman in a linsey woolsey petticoat and a bright turban and we found her in one of our jaunts around the city, and took a kodak picture of her. One of the company asked her in fun if she remembered Washington—you see, she was very old.

"'Deed an' deedy I do, miss,' she answered glibly.

"'Perhaps you were one of his nurses, mammy.'

"'Dat am jess so, missy—I nussed him when he was a leetle mite er baby.'

"'Oh, then, you must have known about the cherry tree?'

"But she did not, and it was explained to her, and she listened with great interest.

"'Ise done know nothin' 'bout no cherry tree, missy,' but I 'members 'zactly when his maw found him in her room an' de gas a-burnin', 'cause he dun turn it on.'

"'Did he tell her he turned it on mammy?'

"'Deed an' deedy, he did, foh he nebber tole no lie.'

"'But, mammy, there wasn't any gas in those days.'

"'Yes, dere was, honey; I 'members dat, too.'"

We decided that old mammy had been the servant of some George Washington, but not our own immortal George, and we left her to enjoy her peculiar delusion undisturbed.—Cor. Chicago Post.

THE DEATH BED OF WASHINGTON.

PERUNA EDITORIAL NO. I.

Dr. Hartman is now offering Peruna to the public as a regular pharmaceutical product. It is just as ethical as any compound put up for the medical profession. No straining of medical ethics can find any fault with it. THE PRINCIPAL ACTIVE INGREDIENTS are prominently incorporated in the label on the bottle, that the people may know that the claims made for Peruna have a true justification.

The only departure we shall make from medical ethics in the conduct of Peruna affairs in the future, is the fact that we shall continue to advertise and sell our product TO THE PEOPLE.

If we would agree to sell to doctors only, to advertise for doctors only, then the medical fraternity would be obliged to recognize Peruna as being entirely within their approval.

BUT WE SHALL NOT DO THIS.

We shall continue to offer Peruna to the people. We shall continue to convey to the people our claims for Peruna as a household remedy. We shall continue to supply the people with free literature, teaching them how to use our medicine, teaching them how to avoid disease, teaching them many things of benefit to the home. We shall continue to do this, whether the medical profession like it or not.

We are proposing from this time on to take the public into our confidence. Notwithstanding that some imitators and substitutors will be attempting to put up something which they consider just as good as Peruna, we are going to draw aside the veil of secrecy and allow any one who chooses to know exactly OF WHAT PERUNA IS COMPOSED.

This ought to disarm all honest criticism. We expect, however, that criticism will continue. On some pretext or other those who are envious of the success of Peruna will continue to find fault. But we are determined to give such people no just complaint. PERUNA IS A GREAT MEDICINE.

People Who Object to Liquid Medicines Can Now Secure Peruna Tablets.

It has become a household word in millions of homes. Our faith in the remedy is stronger than ever. Every year we expect to establish new plants in foreign lands until the people of all the world are supplied with this valuable household remedy.

WE CLAIM PERUNA TO BE A CATARRH REMEDY. Buy a bottle and try it. If it helps you, be honest and acknowledge that it has helped you.

If you want us to we will publish your statement exactly as you furnish it to us. We will add no words, take away no words. If you wish us to we will publish your portrait in connection with it. We will not do this without your written request, without your entire consent.

Peruna has cured thousands of people of chronic catarrh, in many phases and locations. At least, that is what the people say to us, through unsolicited testimonials. Peruna will cure many thousand more, in spite of fabricated slanders to the contrary.

WE GUARANTEE EVERY BOTTLE OF PERUNA TO CONTAIN THE INGREDIENTS PRINTED ON THE LABEL.

We guarantee that every testimonial we use is absolutely true—in the exact language of the testifier.

We guarantee that every photograph published is the photograph of the person whose name it bears, that every word of every testimonial was authorized by the hand that signed it.

We are determined to beat our opponents by being fairer than they are, by dealing squarer than they dare to. We are determined to meet falsehood with truth, duplicity with candor, insincerity with sincerity.

We know that the users of Peruna will appreciate our stand. We believe that the dealers in Peruna will applaud our course. We expect even our opponents will be obliged to acknowledge finally that Peruna is not only an honest and useful remedy, but one of the GREATEST HOUSEHOLD MEDICINES ON THE CONTINENT.

Fame.

"Great king," the poet cried, his rebec stringing,
"Thy name shall live forever—through my singing!"
"Poor fool," the king replied, "that lie is hoary;
Thy songs may live—because they chant my glory!"
So, each, the sword or zither glorifying,
In turn proclaimed his work alone undying;
And while their wordy warfare shook the rafter,
Old Time stood by and held his sides for laughter.

When your Watch Stops
You cannot make it go by shaking it.

When the bowels are constipated you can disturb them with cathartics but, like the watch, they will not be able to do their allotted work until they are put into proper condition to do it.

One cannot mend a delicate piece of mechanism by violent methods, and no machine made by man is as fine as the human body.

The use of pills, salts, castor-oil and strong cathartic medicines is the violent method. The use of the herb tonic laxative, is the method adopted by intelligent people.

Lane's Family Medicine

Headache, backache, indigestion, constipation, skin diseases—all are benefited immediately by the use of this medicine.

Druggists sell it at 25c. and 50c.

Only a Cold.

"Only a cold," is a common expression. And so the victim lets it go on, day after day, red eyes, swollen features, lassitude, sleeplessness, loss of appetite, the irritating cough.

In itself a cold may be simply uncomfortable. In its results it is often fatal. Pneumonia, with its enormous fatality; consumption, with its deadly grip; bronchitis, asthma, these and many ailments are often the direct result of a cold.

The patient may have had many colds. They have resulted in nothing serious. But when the system has become weakened by these repeated attacks, when the mucous membranes are in a chronic unhealthy condition, then it is these fatal maladies assert themselves.

There is no greater mistake than to neglect a cold. At its first appearance measures should be taken to relieve it. At this season of the year, when coughs and colds are common, Peruna should be kept constantly in the house. At the first symptom this remedy should be taken. It will soothe the mucous membranes, relieve the irritation, and the cold will gradually disappear. That this has been the experience of many is proven by the hundreds of grateful letters in our files.

KITCHEN RANGE EXPLODES.

Rips Through Walls of Home and Sets It Ablaze.

Samuel Reed, at Oakland City, built a rousing fire in his kitchen range, preparatory to breakfast, and while Mrs. Reed was standing directly in front of the ntove there was a tremendous explosion, hurling fragments of the range through the walls into the yard, blowing two doors off their hinges and knocking out three windows. The kitchen furnishings were smashed. Fragments of iron were forced through Mrs. Reed's dress, but she escaped unhurt, while another fragment struck a three-gallon measure filled with coal oil, setting the room ablaze. The house was greatly damaged before the fire department had the mischief under control. During the night the pipes connecting with the water works were frozen, and the supply to the boiler of the range was cut off. The boiler was hot and dry when the ice thawed and the explosion was the result.

PEOPLE DEPOSIT IN BANKS.

Residents of Young America Hasten to Put Their Wealth in Safe Place.

The recent raid on the town of Young America by burglars, who robbed half a dozen stores, rifled the postoffice safe and stole a horse and buggy and made their escape, has had one good effect. Residents who withdrew their money from the Kokomo and Logansport banks when the recent financial flurry swept over the country, are depositing it as speedily as possible. Abe Johnson, who drives the stage coach between Young America and Kokomo and Logansport, has a load of gold, silver and paper money on every trip.

Charles V. Fenimore Wounded While Enforcing Company Order.

In a battle with tramps, whom he had ordered off his train, Charles V. Fenimore of Decatur, Ill., was shot in Peru. Although greatly outnumbered, Fenimore stood his ground till he was wounded, when he fell backward off the car. The bullet entered his thigh and in the fall he was painfully bruised. The tramps escaped arrest.

Doubling Up to Save Rent.

Although factories are shut down, or only operating in part, and there are several hundred vacant houses in Muncie, apparently there has been no loss of population. Indeed, the school enrollment shows a substantial increase over that of the year before, and all other years. School authorities are inclined to account for this by saying that the vacant houses are caused by two and more families "doubling up" in a single house, whereas the families formerly lived separately.

Accidentally Shot with Own Weapon

Patrolman Henry Nieters lies at the point of death at his home in Vincennes. He is 45 years old. His revolver, which he was carrying in an inside coat pocket, fell out and was discharged, the bullet tearing a hole in his right thumb and burying itself in his neck.

Buried Hog Is Alive.

That a hog can live six months without food or water was proved on the farm of Charles Egiu, near Richmond, when an old straw stack which was overturned six months ago was torn to pieces. A hog which had become buried by the straw was found alive and sprightly, although much thinner in flesh than it was when imprisoned.

BABY TORTURED BY ITCHING.

Rash Covered Face and Feet—Would Cry Until Tired Out—Speedy Cure by Cuticura.

"My baby was about nine months old when she had rash on her face and feet. Her feet seemed to irritate her most, especially nights. They would cause her to be broken in her rest, and sometimes she would cry until she was tired out. I had heard of so many cures by the Cuticura Remedies that I thought I would give them a trial. The improvement was noticeable in a few hours, and before I had used one box of the Cuticura Ointment her feet were well and have never troubled her since. I also used it to remove what is known as 'cradle cap' from her head, and it worked like a charm, as it cleansed and healed the scalp at the same time. Mrs. Hattie Currier, Thomaston, Me., June 9, 1906."

VOLUMES MIGHT BE WRITTEN

Of the Success That Awaits the Farmer in Western Canada.

The story of wheat farming in Western Canada (that portion of Canada lying north of Dakota and Montana), has been frequently told, but it will stand a lot of telling, and still retain its touch of interest. During the year just closed 277,376 persons made their homes in Canada as compared with 215,912 for the year 1906, an increase of 61,464. Those from the United States numbered 56,551.

A writer in Industry recently said: "To-day the Dominion of Canada is witnessing a mightier movement of population than ever stimulated a Biblical writer to pen a chapter of Scripture." The same writer says: "From the Rhine and the Rhone river valleys; from the port cities of Germany and the farms of the Fatherland; from the peasant soil of Russia; and out from the grimy Lancashire and over-populated Yorkshire, the discontented and ambitious of every clime are seeking to take advantage of the opportunities afforded by the fertile soil and exhilarating climate of the Empire of the North."

Continuing, the same writer says: "While a million human beings throng the shores of the United States every year, the smaller number arriving in Canada come with a more well-defined purpose." The question has been asked, why do these people come to Canada? The available land between the Mississippi and the Pacific has been exhausted, and the farmers within that territory find that their sons have to seek newer climes. Canada offers one hundred and sixty acres of land free to each. This land yields from 20 to 40 bushels of wheat to the acre. In Southern Alberta, the winter wheat belt of Canada, as high as 60 bushels per acre have been harvested. Less yields than the one mentioned have netted the farmer as much as $35 per acre. There are no words that tell the tale so effectively as those of the farmer himself, the man who has ploughed the fields, sowed the grain, and with folded hands rests, while nature, bounteous in that country, in less than three months, placed at his disposal hundreds of acres of ripened grain, now waiting the arrival of the reaper, and therefore we reproduce the following letter. Any agent of the Canadian government, whose advertisement appears elsewhere, will be pleased to give information regarding the district mentioned or any other that may be in mind:

E. T. Holmes, Esq., Canadian Government Agent, St. Paul, Minn.:

Dear Sir—In 1905 I located on a claim about 30 miles from the town of Wadena, on the Canadian Northern Railroad, have lived on my claim most of the time since. I consider this to be one of the best districts in the country for grain growing. In 1906 wheat averaged from 30 to 51 bushels per acre on some of my neighbors' farms, within 4 miles of my claim. Oats go from 75 to 100 bushels. It is also a good country for stock. Where I am there is plenty of fuel. Homesteads nearly all taken, the settlement being largely Germans and Americans, all well-to-do. I left Wadena in February, 1907, returning April 25, so that I missed part of the winter, which the old settlers tell me was one of the worst they ever saw, but there was no suffering, as the people are pretty well fixed, and there are no blizzards in that country, at least there never has been known to be one. Wild land sells at from $10 to $15; closer to town it is higher.

In the summer we have all sorts of wild fruits very plentful, and I never saw better vegetables, and game is so plentiful a man need not starve for want of something to eat. Plenty of good water, too. You need not hesitate to recommend this district, but the homesteads are nearly all taken, most of the homesteaders are living right on their claims.

Ventilate Well.

An old writer says, "When men lived in houses of reed they had constitutions of oak; when they lived in houses of oak they had constitutions of reeds." This is a picturesque description of the injury which may come to us from fine houses too closely confined to keep out the fresh air and too heavily curtained, preventing the entrance of sunshine, which is almost if not quite as important as air. But it is not at all necessary to have our fine houses unhealthy, and it requires only intelligence and thoughtfulness to render a brick house as good a promoter of health as a cabin. Fresh air will come into well ventilated modern houses as well as through the open cracks of a house of reeds and sunlight through a window in a palace as well as a hovel.

A Way Out.

It was at a theater in Manchester. The king, aged and infirm, was blessed with two sons. He was pacing up and down the stage with a wearied, troubled look, exclaiming aloud:

"On which of these, my sons, shall I bestow my crown?"

Immediately came a voice from the gallery:

"Why not 'arf-a crown apiece, guv'nor?"—London Mail.

Faith in the Clergy.

The highlanders' faith in the clergy has always been peculiarly profound. This characteristic is illustrated, though in rather an exaggerated way, by the story of two old women going along the road after service who were heard to discuss the sermon as follows:

Peggy—Ah, and did you hear that most precious word, Kirsty—a most precious word?

Kirsty—No. And what word was that?

Peggy—Oh, a most precious word, and it's myself that will not forget it, the precious word Nebuchadnezzar.

Kirsty—Oh, yes. But did you hear that other most beautiful word? Myself never heard it said before, the beautiful word Belshazzar.—Caledonian.

Prices of all living increased, the only exception Mrs. Austin's pancake flour. Same old price at all best grocers.

There is every possibility that the waiters of the Paris cafes will shortly go on strike again in support of their cherished right to wear mustaches.

The Hopewell class to the number of 34 went to Leo. Tuesday evening, to a donation party for their pastor and wife, Rev. and Mrs. G. F. Hall. At 10 o'clock an elegant supper was served and all enjoyed the evening, returning to their homes at a late hour.

William Watson attended the Farmers Institute at Maysville, last Tuesday and Wednesday. He reports a good institute and good attendance. The State speakers were Miss Miller of Purdue and Mr. Thompson of La Grange. They will also appear at Ft. Wayne the last of this month. Mr. Watson was also a speaker, Wednesday afternoon on the subject of sheep. Mr. Watson is doing some good institute work.

Carrier George Henderson, on route 1 from Spencerville, made his entire route Saturday serving all the patrons. Mr. Raymond Rhoades took the forenoon part of the route and George took the afternoon part and thereby the route was all traveled.

A weak Stomach means weak Stomach nerves, always. And this is true also of the Heart and Kidneys. Its a pity that sick ones continue to drug the stomach or stimulate the Heart and Kidneys. The weak nerves, not the organs themselves, need this help. This explains why Dr. Shoop's Restorative hits and is promptly helping so many sick ones. It goes direct to the cause of these diseases. Test this vital truth, and see. All dealers.

Mr. Joe Stuckey and Miss Nellie Sherman were married at Grabill, Thursday. An elegant wedding supper was served at the home of the groom and the boys did not forget the old fashioned "shivaree" to remind Joe that he had taken unto himself a beautiful valentine. Mr. and Mrs. Stuckey are both highly respected in their respective communities and we can cheerfully speak for them a bright and prosperous future and earnestly wish them success in all their undertakings.

The Druggist Law.

The druggist here has received notice from the state food and drug commissioners concerning the new law which provides that drugs containing alcohols, opium, morphine or drugs of like substances shall be labeled showing what and how much of each ingredient they contain. The notice says that this must be done before March 1st as that is the date when the new law becomes effective. They may send to the manufacturers and obtain labels on drugs that have long been in stock. It will mean quite a loss to most stores as there is always an accumulation of drugs that have been on hand for some time and no formula can be obtained for these even if analyzed by the state food and drug department and it will have to be destroyed if it does not come up to the standard. Verily this is a progressive age: always something new being sprung.

Some one entered the bakery, Saturday evening and secured some candy, some being scattered on the floor in the ware room. Nothing else was missing that could be seen. They made their escape through the ware-room door and could be tracked through the snow to the railroad.

The State Inspector of the Railway Crossing Commission was here last Friday inspecting the railroad crossings at the grist mill and the west end of town. He gave no information as to what would be done, but it is a sure thing that he would say that they are bad ones and that some means of precaution should be put at each crossing.

Rev. Shirley, Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of the Ft. Wayne District, delivered a very interesting discourse in behalf of this organization to which a good crowd attended. He gave a complete survey of what they had accomplished and what they expected to accomplish by the help of the people. They have been having glorious success wherever they have attempted to work. Rev. Dressel added a few remarks which was heartily received. He spoke at Spencerville in the evening.

USE OF BLOTTING PAPER.

Method of Cleaning Machinery in German Shops.

The use of blotting paper for cleaning machinery is a comparatively new idea—an idea that has been tried successfully in German workshops.

Tow, woolen refuse sponge cloths and jute waste are the materials usually employed for the cleaning of machines and parts of engines that are soiled by dirt and lubricating substances.

The better varieties of cotton waste are very good for scouring purposes, but the cheaper grades are charged with dust, and in using them a sponge cloth, specially manufactured for the purpose, has to be resorted to.

In employing blotting paper for scouring purposes the use of cotton waste is decreased, and the sponge cloths are entirely dispensed with. On an average a German workman receives under the former system 250 grams of cotton waste, one new sponge cloth, and one or two renovated ones each week. Now he is supplied with 150 grams of cotton waste, and about eight or ten sheets of blotting paper, at a cost of two and a half cents, or one-third the cost of the cotton waste.

The paper is not only cheaper, but it does not soil the machinery with fibers and dust, as do the wooled refuse and the sponge cloths. It is also less combustible than other cleaning materials, and, if it should be caught in the machinery while engines in motion are being cleaned, it tears easily, and the workmen run no risk of having their hands drawn into the machinery.

LIMIT TO SENSE OF ANIMALS.

John Burroughs Scouts Theory That They Commit Suicide.

"I do not believe that animals ever commit suicide. I do not believe that they have any notions of death, or take any note of time, or ever put up any bluff game, or ever deliberate together, or form plans or forecast the seasons.

"They may practice deception, as when a bird feigns lameness or paralysis to decoy you away from her nest, but this, of course, is instinctive and not conscious deception.

"There is at times something that suggests cooperation among them, so when wolves hunt in relays, as they are said to do, or when they hunt in couples, one engaging the quarry in front while the other assaults it from the rear; or when quail roost upon the ground in a ring, their tails in the center, their heads outward; or, as when cattle or horses form a circle when attacked in the open by wild beasts, the cattle with their heads outward and the horses with their heels.

"Of course, all of this is instinctive and not the result of deliberation, writes John Burroughs in Outing. The horse always turns his tail to the storm as well, and cows and steers, if I remember rightly, turn their heads."

Stoessel Condemned to Death.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg, Russia, says: Lieutenant General Stoessel was condemned to death by a military court for the surrender of Port Arthur to the Japanese. General Fock, who commanded the Fourth East Siberian division of Port Arthur, was ordered reprimanded for a disciplinary offense which was not connected with the surrender, and General Smyrnoff, acting commander of the fortress, and Major General Reiss, chief of staff to General Stoessel, were acquitted of the charges against them for lack of proof. The court recommended that the death sentence upon Lieutenant General Stoessel be commuted to ten years' imprisonment in a fortress and that he be excluded from the service.

Tossed Babes from Burning Building.

Mrs. Mary McDonald and her 19-months-old baby were dangerously injured in escaping a fire beneath their tenement in Boston, Mass. The husband, Patrick McDonald, jumped to the street without serious injury and the wife threw her two babies to him. The first, 4 months old, he caught in his arms without serious injury to the infant, but the older one fell to the street. The woman herself received a fractured skull and it is feared she will die. Other occupants of the tenement escaped without injury. The building was badly damaged.

Pullman Cars to be "Dry."

The policy of discontinuing the sale of liquor on its cars is being taken up by the Pullman Company, the first outward indication being the announcement that alcoholic beverages would no longer be sold on the Philadelphia & Reading Pullman trains. Prohibition legislation in a number of states through which the company runs its cars is held responsible for this action. In other states the serving of liquor on cars has come into conflict with the law against the sale of alcoholics on Sunday.

Gave the Pope Two Lions.

A dispatch from Rome says: Father Bernard, a missionary priest from Abyssinia, was received in private audience by the pope. The priest brings the pontiff a present of two lions from King Menelik, of Abyssinia, and a message expressing the desire of the king to insure the security of the Catholic missionaries throughout Ethiopia. The lions are at present in the vatican gardens awaiting the completion of a special cage for their housing.

Thaw Denies Divorce Story.

Attorneys Daniel O'Reilly and A. Russell Peabody, who were in consultation for two hours with Harry K. Thaw at the asylum in Matteawan, N. Y., declared that Thaw had no intention of bringing suit for divorce and that all rumors of an approaching attempt to annul his marriage with Evelyn Nesbit Thaw were groundless.

Death Invades U. S. Senate.

Senator Asbury C. Latimer, of South Carolina, died at Providence Hospital, Washington, D. C., of peritonitis. He had been at the hospital since Sunday last when he underwent an operation for appendicitis. It was then discovered that he was suffering with a far more serious ailment.

Fatal Explosion in Powder Mill.

An explosion occurred in the nitroglycerine mixing house of the Hercules Powder Works, fourteen miles north of Berkley, Cal. The building was destroyed. Twenty-four Chinamen and four white men were killed and six white men were seriously injured.

Rescued with Difficulty.

Goldie Ackerman, aged 25, was badly burned and two babies were nearly drowned by being thrown into water during a fire which destroyed two residences in the flooded district of Marietta, Ohio. All were rescued in boats with difficulty.

DETROIT RIVER TRADE GREATEST IN WORLD

The Soo Canal Takes the Second Place Among All Water Thoroughfares.

LAKE COMMERCE IS ENORMOUS.

William E. Curtis Tells of Great Merchandise Traffic on Uncle Sam's Inland Seas.

The Detroit River is the greatest water thoroughfare in the world, writes William E. Curtis, the Washington correspondent. During the late season of navigation 23,721 vessels passed through it, with a tonnage of 48,958,328, as compared with 24,077 vessels of 46,072,668 tons in 1906. This shows that the lake vessels are growing larger as well as the volume of business. The merchandise traffic of 1907 through the Detroit River amounted to 67,202,504 net tons, compared with 60,578,155 net tons for 1906.

Of this total 46,966,193 tons represented iron ore, lumber and grain from the Northwest, south-bound to Buffalo and other Lake Erie ports, of which 35,405,866 tons were iron ore. The north-bound traffic represented 20,326,311 net tons, of which 18,427,121 net tons was coal from the mines of Ohio, Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Excepting the Detroit River, the Sault Ste. Marie Canal is the greatest water thoroughfare in the world. An average of one steamer every twelve minutes passes through day and night, carrying more freight than enters the harbors of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston and Savannah combined; more than enters London, Southampton and Liverpool combined; more than the tonnage of the Suez, Manchester, Kiel, Amsterdam, Corinth and all the other great canals of the world combined.

The total lake commerce for the season of 1907 was 10 per cent larger than in 1906 and 20 per cent larger than in 1905. The increase is due mainly to larger ore and coal shipments, although the movement of grain and miscellaneous merchandise, excepting lumber and flour, exceeded any previous year.

The three neighboring towns at the western end of Lake Superior—Duluth, Superior and Two Harbors—which are practically one community and have a common interest, ship more freight than any other port in the world, their combined total for last year exceeding that of London, New York, Hamburg, Liverpool, Antwerp, Marseilles or any other of the world's greatest commercial centers.

The shipments of grain included 63,349,585 bushels of wheat, compared with 47,726,778 during the season of 1906. The shipments of corn were 44,355,900 bushels, as against 43,531,540, most of it being from Chicago.

The President of the Persian National Assembly withdrew his resignation.

In a battle with Moors, French troops lost eighty killed and fifty wounded.

Attacks on Chinese pirates, on the Grand Canal, resulted in loss of life.

Japan announced a scheme for diverting her immigration to South Africa.

Plans of the British fleet bound for the Pacific to sail in May were announced.

Federal troops of Mexico rounded up a band of more than 1,500 Yaqui Indians.

Fifteen persons lost their lives leaving a burning steamer off the coast of Nova Scotia.

Sir Robert Hart, inspector general of Chinese customs, was granted a long leave of absence.

"Ouida" was buried at Florence, Italy, her nurse and her pet dogs being the only mourners.

The report was circulated in St. Petersburg that the Emperor had decided to partition Finland.

The organization of modern-drilled troops at all points along the Chinese frontier was begun.

Mary Robison, the famous Druce case witness in London, confessed that her stories were fabrications.

King Edward, who has been suffering from an affection of the throat, went to Brighton, seeking better health.

The Russian war ministry prepared to fortify Vladivostok in preparation for possible future trouble with Japan.

The American expedition under R. Dorsey Mohun, seeking to penetrate the wilds of the Congo Free State, was repulsed.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

John Ware has resigned the office of justice of the peace at Jeffersonville, which he has held continuously since 1881. He served as mayor and in the City Council.

Within the next few weeks the Shelbyville Artificial Gas Company will begin making extensive improvements, included in which will be a 100,000 cubic feet reservoir.

Samuel Thornley, fireman on the Monon railway, died at his home in Jeffersonville of tetanus, due to a "hang-nail," resulting from crushing his finger. Anti-toxin treatment was used without effect. Thornley was unmarried, 24 years old, and a Pythian.

A lamp exploded in an upper room at the home of the Rev. and Mrs. M. W. Yocom, of Martinsville, recently, setting fire to an upper room. Mrs Maggie Hardin, sister of Mrs. Yocom, saturated a bed comfort with water, and saved the house with but small loss.

The trustees of Hanover College at Madison elected Prof. W. A. Millis president of the institution. Prof. Millis has been superintendent of the public schools at Crawfordsville and superintendent of the Department of Education at Wabash College. He will assume his new duties soon.

To be literally cooked to death was the fate of 15-year-old Mary Ham, the daughter of Sherman Ham, on the Ellettsville Pike, two miles north of Bloomington, when her clothing caught fire from a red-hot drum stove. The accident is without a parallel for terrible suffering in the history of the county.

The Rev. Lewis Crawford is dead at his home in Columbus, at the age of 88 years. For more than fifty years he was a minister of the United Brethren church, and thirty years of his ministry was spent in one county. He was a railroad engineer on the B. & O. in the East when railroads were extremely scarce.

The house of Henry Petty, near Milton, burned and little of the household goods was saved. The barn and outbuildings, with the exception of the chicken-house, were also consumed. The live stock was saved. The trouble started from a defective flue. The loss is several thousand dollars, while the insurance is $2,000.

Charles Rucker, of Seymour, 17 years old, had both legs cut off below the knees by a Southern Indiana railway train, and his condition is critical. He was in the habit of jumping on and off trains as they passed in and out, and the loss of both legs was the result. Four years ago he lost an arm in the same way, having a mania for train climbing.

Elijah B. Martindale, son of Frank Martindale, of Knightstown, died in the Reid Memorial Hospital, Richmond. He was 15 years old. When 5 years old he was struck on the head by a playmate with a stone and the injury caused a growth on the inside of the skull. Four weeks ago a piece of bone was removed, and a second operation was contemplated when death intervened.

Henry Herliman, of Newcastle, a sturdy man of 74 years, for the first time in over half a century, is under the care of a physician. Mr. Herliman is a lover of fancy chickens. While feeding his flock and talking to them recently he slipped and fell, breaking his left knee. Fifty-four years ago he migrated from Germany, and while in Cincinnati he was stricken with cholera. Since after that sickness he has never needed the advice of a physician.

Samuel C. Schmitt, of Mishawaka, left his home there to walk to his work, four miles away. As he stood at the threshold in the storm he kissed his wife and wondered whether he should follow the wagon road or take the railway track. She suggested the road, but he thought the Grand Trunk Western railway bed would furnish better walking, and choose that path. Less than ten rods from the house he was struck by a fast train, and his wife heard the danger whistle and saw the train strike her husband.

The 13-year-old daughter of Samuel Bement, of Petersburg, accidentally ran against a wire stretched lengthwise near the curb of the sidewalk several weeks ago, and she was thrown with such violence that her skull was fractured while her right ear drum burst. When she recovered sufficiently to return to school it was discovered that, instead of being quick to learn as in former years, it is hard for her to comprehend anything. A $5,000 damage suit was instituted against the city, which has been transferred to Daviess County for trial. Her father has now brought suit for $10,000, making a total of $15,000 which the city will have to defend. The wire was stretched by a peanut vendor to protect his wares.

Syracuse has hopes of securing the factory of the Butler Company, manufacturers of buggies at Butler.

The home of Lee Overton, near Owensville, was destroyed by fire during the temporary absence of the family.

Dr. Huestis, two miles distant from Sunman, was found dead in bed recently. He belonged to a family of pioneers.

George Hare, 83 years old, claiming to be the first white person born in Noblesville, fell on the ice recently, breaking his hip.

While cutting ice at Silver Lake, Kosciusko County, L. C. Skinner tumbled into the water and was rescued with difficulty.

Sutherland & Son, manufacturers of pianos, are contemplating removal of their plant to Shelbyville. They are manufacturing in Toledo, Ohio.

Robert A. Woods, inspector general, Grand Commandery, Knights Templar of Indiana, is recovering from a severe surgical operation at Princeton.

R. F. D. Carrier No. 1, out of North Vernon, in attempting to ford Pleasant Run recently, lost his horse, wagon and mail, and was himself saved with difficulty.

While hauling tile, William Thompson, of New Ross, drove too near the edge of the road and his load overturned, burying him underneath. He was seriously hurt.

Daniel V. Chapman is dead at Goshen, as the result of injuries sustained two years ago when he fell from a scaffold. Both his legs were broken, and he has been helpless since that time.

When Mrs. George Kerns awakened at her home in Clay City, she found her husband's dead body beside her. Coroner Young is making an investigation. It is believed that heart disease was the cause of his death.

The discovery of the body of Ferdinand Clayton, aged 58 years, in a cistern beneath his home at Elkhart cleared the mystery of his disappearance, which has been puzzling the police for nearly two weeks. He evidently jumped into the cistern with suicidal intent.

Desk Sergeant Hyland, a veteran of the police department at Terre Haute, has gone to Chicago for a surgical operation of a singular nature. A month ago a dentist in trying to pull a tooth splintered Hyland's jawbone. Ulceration followed, and a difficult surgical operation is necessary.

The 2-year-old son of Walker Smith, of Advance, was instantly killed by his 6-year-old brother. In the absence of their mother, the children had obtained a shotgun and shells. When the elder boy attempted to put a shell into the gun it exploded and the little fellow's head was blown from the body.

Prof. Jesse Hobson, teacher in the graded school at Bakers Corner, three miles east of Sheridan, was terribly beaten by David Leonard, a farmer. Prof. Hodson whipped a 14-year-old son of Mr. Leonard, and the assault on the teacher resulted. He was struck over the head with a club, and will be off duty for some time.

Fire destroyed the homes of E. J. Moore and Christian Mast at Mishawaka. Total loss, $7,000. Three children of Mr. and Mrs. Moore were in the burning home, the mother temporarily absent, with the children, the eldest 5 years old, asleep. Frank Leslie saved the children, but nearly all the household goods were burned.

Mrs. Lizzie Patterson, 20 years old, of Patoka, attempted suicide with carbolic acid recently. After swallowing a portion of the acid, which she had diluted with pop, she tried to compel her 2-year-old child to take the remainder, but was unsuccessful. The child's face and mouth were badly burned. The woman was alone with the child at the time.

Owing to the carelessness in discharging hot ashes in the boiler-room, the hemlock supports of the floor caught fire and $7,000 worth of fabrics used in corset making were more or less damaged by smoke in the new factory of the Gossard Corset Company at Elkhart. The building is of concrete and is regarded as absolutely fire-proof, but the concrete floor has not been in long enough to set firmly and the supports had been left.

Benjamin Jenkins, veteran druggist of St. Paul, arose at an unusual hour, and, on stepping into his back yard, he slipped on the icy surface of the ground and his hip was broken. He was unable to help himself, neither could he arouse the sleeping members of his family by his cries for assistance, and it was not till the neighbors were awakened did help come. He suffered terribly from exposure, in addition to his broken hip, and his recovery is doubtful. Mr. Jenkins is 83 years old.

A RAGING BLIZZARD SWEEPS THE COUNTRY

Howler Starts Down in the Southwest and Paralyzes Railroad Traffic in Its Path.

ENTIRE WEST IS STORM-BOUND.

Chicago Has Greatest One-Day Snowfall in City's History—Several Lives Are Lost.

The worst blizzard in the weather history of Chicago, according to the records of the weather bureau, swept over the city Tuesday. The storm was general all over the West, extending over Missouri, Arkansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Wisconsin and the northern portion of Illinois. Traffic on the railroads was severely impeded and on some lines made impossible by the huge drifts of snow. A number of lives were lost while the storm was raging its worst, and other fatalities were reported as due to the severity of the blizzard. Railroad traffic for a time was practically abandoned in parts of Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, the Dakotas, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Illinois and Arkansas. The floods in southern Indiana and Ohio and Kentucky have been greatly augmented.

The blizzard was felt throughout the entire middle West, the storm delaying trains, interfering with telegraph service, and, in some places, cutting off all traffic. The storm centers seemed to be in Nebraska and central Illinois, where the downfall of snow reached a depth of fourteen inches on the level and was piled in deep drifts by the high winds which accompanied the snow.

All train traffic in Nebraska was seriously affected. The Chicago-Denver express, west bound, on the Rock Island road, was stalled in a drift near Prairie Home, ten miles from Lincoln. The east bound Rock Island passenger was tied up in the Lincoln yards.

The central Illinois towns were placed in the grip of the blizzard, and the network of interurban lines which traverse that section were practically put out of business for a time. The drifts were extremely deep on all of the country roads and the rural mail service was badly crippled for a few days, as the drivers found it practically impossible to get over their routes.

When the blizzard abated in the States west of the Mississippi, further discomfort was in store for the inhabitants, as the temperature, which was near the freezing point during the storm, dropped rapidly, while the high winds continued in force.

POLITICS and POLITICIANS

Representative Hobson introduced a bill "to provide a navy adequate for national defense."

The Mississippi Legislature elected John Sharp Williams, minority leader in the House, to the United States Senate.

Secretary Taft made it plain, in his speech before the Young Republicans at Kansas City, Mo., that he approved most heartily of the recent special message of the President.

Attorney General Jackson of New York State, commenting on his experiences when investigating embarrassed banks, says: "I never met so many men who ought to be in jail."

William J. Bryan, speaking at Danville, Ill., declared it his belief that Joseph G. Cannon would be the Republican candidate for President and that he himself would oppose Mr. Cannon.

Three miles of signatures, representing the desire of some 100,000 voters to pass upon the merits of the Sunday saloon question, have insured the appearance of a little ballot bearing this question at the spring election in Chicago.

Frank S. Black, former ex-Governor of New York, in a speech before the Home Market Protection Club at Boston, without the direct mention of names, denounced in the most emphatic manner the policies of the present administration and the influences in control of the Republican party.

Congressman Robert G. Cousins of the Fifth Iowa district, chairman of the House committee on foreign affairs, has announced that he will not be a candidate for renomination. He has been in Congress sixteen years. Cousins says that he has opportunities to do something for himself and he has accepted them.

The committee in charge of the plans for the Republican national convention at Chicago next June have practically completed arrangements for the big meeting. The convention will assemble in the Coliseum, the scene of many historic gatherings, which was designed and erected with special reference to the needs of a political convention.

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

A. CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER XI.

This episode had occurred about a fortnight before Ezra's return from Africa, and was duly retailed to him by his father.

"You need not be discouraged by that," he said. "I can always keep them apart, and if he is absent and you are present—especially as she has no idea of the cause of his absence—she will end by feeling slighted and preferring you."

"I cannot understand how you ever came to let the matter go so far," his son answered sullenly. "The girl belongs to us. She was given to you to look after, and a nice job you seem to have made of it."

"Never mind, my boy," replied the merchant. "I'll answer for keeping them apart if you will only push the matter on your own account."

"I've said that I would do so, and I will," Ezra returned, and events soon showed that he was as good as his word.

Before his African excursion the relations between young Girdlestone and his father's ward had never been cordial. Kate's nature, however, was so sweet and forgiving that it was impossible for her to harbor any animosity, and she greeted Ezra kindly on his return from his travels. Within a few days she became conscious that a remarkable change had come over him—a change, as it seemed to her, very much for the better. In the past weeks had frequently elapsed without his addressing her, but now he went out of his way to make himself agreeable. Sometimes he would sit for a whole evening describing to her all that he had seen in Africa, and really interesting her by his account of men and things. She, poor lass, hailed this new departure with delight, and did all in her power to encourage his better nature, and to show that she appreciated the alteration in his bearing. At the same time, she was rather puzzled in her mind, for an occasional flash of coarseness or ferocity showed her that the real nature of the man was unaltered, and that he was putting an unnatural restraint upon himself.

As the days went on and no word or sign came from Tom, a great fear and perplexity arose within the girl's mind. She had heard nothing of the interview at Fenchurch street nor had she any clue at all which could explain the mystery. Could it be that Tom had informed her guardian of their engagement, and had received such a rebuff that he had abandoned her in despair? That was surely impossible; yet why was it that he had ceased to walk through the square? She knew that he was not ill, because she heard her two companions talking of him in connection with business. What could be the matter then? Her little heart was torn by a thousand conflicting doubts and fears.

In the meantime Ezra gave fresh manifestations of the improvement which travel had wrought upon him. She had remarked one day that she was fond of moss roses. On coming down to breakfast next morning she found a beautiful moss rose upon her plate, and every morning afterwards a fresh flower appeared in the same place. This pretty little piece of courtesy, which she knew could only come from Ezra, surprised and pleased her, for delicacy was the last quality which she would have given him credit for.

On another occasion she had expressed a desire to read Thackeray's works, the books in the library being for the most part somewhat ancient. On entering her room that same evening she found, to her astonishment, a handsomely bound edition of the novels in question standing on the center of her table. For a moment a wild, unreasoning hope awoke in her that perhaps this was Tom's doing—that he had taken his means of showing that she was still dear to him. She soon saw, however, that the books could only have come from the same source as the flowers, and she marveled more than ever at this fresh proof of the good will of her companion.

One day her guardian took the girl aside. "Your life must be rather dull," he said. "I have taken a box for you tonight at the opera. I do not care about such spectacles myself, but I have made arrangements for your escort. A change will do you good."

Poor Kate was too sad at heart to be inclined for amusement. She endeavored, however, to look pleased and grateful.

"My good friend, Mrs. Wilkinson, is coming for you," the merchant said, "and Ezra is going, too. He has a great liking for music."

Kate could not help smiling at this last remark, as she thought how very successfully the young man had concealed his taste during the years that she had known him.

She was ready, however, at the appointed hour, and Mrs. Wilkinson, a prim old gentlewoman, who had chaperoned Kate on the rare occasions when she went out, having arrived, the three drove off together.

The opera happened to be "Faust," and the magnificent scenery and dresses astonished Kate, who had hardly ever before been within the walls of a theater. She sat as if entranced, with a bright tinge of color upon her cheeks, which, with her sparkling eyes, made her look surpassingly beautiful. So thought Ezra Girdlestone as he sat in the recesses of the box and watched the varied expressions which flitted across her mobile features. "She is well worth having, money or no," he muttered to himself, and redoubled his attentions to her during the evening.

An incident occurred between the acts that night which would have pleased the old merchant had he witnessed it. Kate had been looking down from the box, which was upon the third tier, at the sea of heads beneath them. Suddenly she gave a start, and her face grew a trifle paler.

"Isn't that Mr. Dimsdale down there?" she asked of her companion.

"Where?" asked Ezra, craning his neck. "Oh, yes, there he is in the second row of the stalls."

"Do you know who the young lady is that he is talking to?" Kate asked.

"I don't know," said Ezra. "I have seen him about with her a good deal lately." The latter was a deliberate falsehood, but Ezra saw his chance of prejudicing his rival and took prompt advantage of it. "She is very good looking," he added presently, keeping his eyes upon his companion.

"Oh, indeed," said Kate, and turned with some commonplace remark to Mrs. Wilkinson. Her heart was sore nevertheless, and she derived little pleasure from the remainder of the performance. As to Ezra, in spite of his great love for music, he dozed peacefully in a corner of the box during the whole of the last act. None of them were sorry when Faust was duly consigned to the nether regions and Marguerite was apotheosed upon a couple of wooden clouds. Ezra narrated the incident of the recognition in the stalls to his father on his return, and the old gentleman rubbed his hands over it.

"Most fortunate!" he exclaimed gleefully. "By working on that idea we might produce great effects. Who was the girl, do you know?"

"Some poor relation, I believe, whom he trots out at times."

"We will find out her name and all about her. Capital! capital!" cried John Girdlestone, and the two worthies departed to their rooms much pleased at this new card which chance had put into their hands.

During the weary weeks while Tom Dimsdale, in accordance with his promise, avoided Eccleston square and everything which could remind Kate of his existence, Ezra continued to leave no stone unturned in his endeavors to steal his way into her affections. Poor Tom's sole comfort was the recollection of that last passionate letter which he had written in the Blackwall public house, and which had, as he imagined, enlightened her as to the reasons of his absence, and had prevented her from feeling any uneasiness or surprise. Had he known the fate that had befallen that epistle he would hardly have been able to continue his office duties so patiently, or to wait with so much resignation for Mr. Girdlestone's sanction to his engagement.

As the days passed and still brought no news, Kate's face grew paler and her heart more weary and desponding. That the young man was well was beyond dispute, since she had seen him with her own eyes at the opera. What explanation could there be, then, for his conduct? Was it possible that he had told Mr. Girdlestone of their engagement, and that her guardian had found some means of dissuading him from continuing his suit—found some appeal to his interest, perhaps, which was too strong for his love? All that she knew of Tom's nature contradicted such a supposition. Again, if Girdlestone had learned anything of their engagement, surely he would have reproached her with it. His manner of late had been kinder rather than harsher. On the other hand, could it have chanced that Tom had met this lady of the opera, and that her charms had proved too much for his constancy? When she thought of the honest grey eyes which had looked down into hers at that last meeting in the garden she found it hard to imagine the possibility of such things, and yet there was a fact which had to be explained. The more she thought of it the more incomprehensible it grew, but still the pale face grew paler and the sad heart more heavy.

Soon, however, her doubts and fears began to resolve themselves into something more substantial than vague conjecture. The conversation of the Girdlestones used to turn upon their business colleague, and always in the same strain. There were stray remarks about his doings; hints from the father and laughter from the son. "Not much work to be got out of him now," the old man would say. "When a man's in love he's not over fond of a ledger."

"A nice looking girl, too," said Ezra in answer to some such remark. "I thought something would come of it. We saw them together at the opera, didn't we, Kate?"

So they would gossip together, and every word a stab to the poor girl. She strove to conceal her feelings, and, indeed, her anger and her pride were stronger even than her grief, for she felt that she had been cruelly used. One day she found Girdlestone alone and unbosomed herself to him.

"Is it really true," she asked with a quick pant and a catch of her breath, "that Mr. Dimsdale is engaged to be married?"

"I believe so, my dear," her guardian answered. "It is commonly reported so. When a young lady and gentleman correspond it is usually a sign of something of the sort."

"Oh, they correspond?"

"Yes, they certainly correspond. Her letters are sent to him at the office. I don't know that I altogether like that arrangement. It looks as if he were deceiving his parents." All this was an unmitigated lie, but Girdlestone had gone too far now to stick at trifles.

"Who is the lady?" asked Kate, with a calm set face, but a quivering lip.

"A cousin of his. Miss Ossary is her name, I believe. I am not sorry, for it may be a sign that he has sown all his wild oats. Do you know at one time, Kate, I feared that he might take a fancy to you. He has a specious way with him, and I felt my responsibility in the matter."

"You need not be afraid on that score," Kate said bitterly. "I think I can gauge Mr. Dimsdale's specious manner at its proper value." With this valiant speech she marched off, head in air, to her room, and there wept as though her very heart would break.

CHAPTER XII.

Tom Dimsdale's duties were far from light. Not only was he expected to supervise the clerk's accounts and to treat with the wholesale dealers, but he was also supposed to spend a great part of his time in the docks, overlooking the loading of the outgoing ships and checking the cargo of the incoming ones. This latter portion of his work was welcome as taking him some hours a day from the close counting house, and allowing him to get a sniff of the sea air. There was a pleasing life and bustle, too, in the broad, brown river, with its never-ending panorama of vessels of every size and shape which ebb and flow in the great artery of national life.

All day Tom stood at the hatchway of the Black Eagle, checking the cargo as it was hoisted out of her, while McPherson and his motley assistants, dock laborers, seamen and Black Kroomen from the coast, worked and toiled in the depths below. The engine rattled and snorted, and the great chain clanked as it was lowered into the hold. At one o'clock there was a break of an hour for dinner, and then the work went on until six, when all hands struck and went off to their homes or to the public house, according to inclination. Tom and the mate, both fairly tired by their day's work, prepared to accept the captain's invitation, and to beat him up in his quarters. The mate dived down into his cabin, and soon reappeared with his face shining and his long hair combed into some sort of order.

"I've been performing my ablutions," he said, rolling out the last word with great emphasis and pomposity, for, like many Scotchmen, he had the greatest possible reverence for a sonorous polysyllable. "The captain," he continued, "has been far from salubrious this voyage. He's aye complainin' o' his bodily infirmities."

The two had threaded their way through the intricate lanes which lead up from the water side to the outskirts of Stepney. It was quite dark by the time that they reached a long thoroughfare, lined by numerous shops, with great gas flares outside them. Many of these belonged to dealers in marine stores, and the numerous suits of oilskin, hung up for exhibition, swung to and fro in the uncertain light, like rows of attenuated pirates. At every corner was a great public house with glittering windows, and a crowd of slatternly women and jersey-clad men elbowing each other at the door. At the largest and most imposing of these the mate and Dimsdale now pulled up.

"Captain Miggs in?" asked McPherson of a rubicund, white-aproned personage.

"Yes, sir. He's in his room, sir, and expectin' you. There's a gent with him, sir, but he told me to send you up. This way, sir," and they were soon ushered into the captain's room.

That worthy was leaning back in a rocking chair with his feet perched upon the mantelpiece. Opposite him, in a similar chair, was no less an individual than our old acquaintance, Von Baumser. As a mercantile clerk in the London office of a Hamburg firm the German was thrown into contact with the shippers of the African fleet, and had contracted a special alliance with Miggs.

"Come in, my hearties, come in!" he cried, huskily. "Take a seat, Mr. Dimsdale. And you, Sandy, can't you bring yourself to your berth without being asked? You should know your moorings by this time. This is my friend, Mr. Von Baumser from Eckermann's office."

"And this, I think, is Mr. Dimsdale," said the German, shaking hands with Tom. "I have heard my very goot friend, Major Clutterbuck, speak of your name, sir."

"Ah, the old major," Tom answered. "Of course, I remember him well."

"He is not so very old, either," said Von Baumser, in a somewhat surly voice. "He has been took by a very charming and entirely pleasant woman, and they are about to be married before three months, the one to the other. Let me tell you, sir, I, who have lived with him so long, that I have met no man for whom I have greater respect than for the major."

"A couple of days ago we hardly hoped ever to be yarning here," said Miggs. "A nasty sea on, Mr. Dimsdale, sir, and the old ship so full o' wather that she could not rise to it. They were makin' a clean breach over us, and we lost nigh everything we could lose."

"I suppose you'll have her thoroughly repaired now?" Tom remarked.

Both the skipper and the mate laughed heartily at the observation. "That wouldn't do, Sandy, would it?" said Miggs, shaking his head. "We couldn't afford to have our salary cut down like that."

(To be continued.)

He Was It.

"Really, don't y'know," said Cholly Braneliss, "she's such an odd girl. When I was introduced to her she burst out laughing."

"Yes," said Miss Peppry, "she's hysterical."

"Aw, weally?"

"Yes; she frequently laughs at nothing."—Philadelphia Press.

WORK OF CONGRESS

The Senate Thursday discussed the law governing the reserves of national banks, that subject being brought up by Senator Rayner. The criminal code bill also was a subject of discussion, Senator Clay and others securing the substitution of the old law instead of the proposed revised sections, which will effectually prevent intoxicating liquors being sent through the mails into "dry" States or counties. General debate on the legislative appropriation bill was brought to a close in the House. Several speeches were made on the issues of the day, the most notable being by Champ Clark of Missouri. Other speakers were Rainey, Illinois; Tirrell, Massachusetts; Gillett, Massachusetts, and Hammond, Indiana, all of whom discussed various phases of the tariff question.

-:—:-

The Senate Friday gave attention to a speech on the Aldrich currency bill by Senator Clay of Georgia. Mr. Clay's declaration in favor of the issuance of paper money by the government provoked a controversy between him and Republican Senators. Senators Lodge and Teller both gave their views on the policy of issuing paper money by the government. At 2:30 p. m. the Senate adjourned until Monday. Oratory in the House gave way to legislation, with the result that material progress was made in the executive, legislative and judicial bill. It met with comparatively smooth sailing until on points of order by Mr. Macon of Arkansas the proposed increases in salaries of the assistant secretaries of the several departments were stricken out. Mr. Macon explained his action by saying that an appropriation bill was not the place for such legislation. With nearly two-thirds of the bill disposed of, the House adjourned.

-:—:-

The Senate was not in session Saturday. Discussion in the House dwelt mainly on amendments providing for increases in the salaries of the surveyors general of the several States. In each case the amendment was rejected. But little progress with the bill had been made, when the House adjourned until Monday.

-:—:-

After a brief executive session Monday the Senate ordered the doors closed and for several hours discussed the Wetherspoon nomination. An agreement was reached to consider the ocean mail subsidy bill on Wednesday. The legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, one of the large supply measures of the government, was passed by the House. The amount carried by it is practically as reported by the committee—$32,336,573.

-:—:-

In the Senate Tuesday the Aldrich bill was opposed by Mr. Stone of Missouri. He argued in advocacy of the plan for government guarantee of deposits in national banks, and Senator Bacon of Georgia took occasion to oppose that proposition. Mr. Bacon declared that if such a plan were put into effect State banks would be put out of business, as their deposits would find their way into national banks. The bill to revise the criminal code was considered during a couple of hours. Speaker Cannon's presidential boom was given a boost in the House when Mr. Boutell of Illinois brought the subject to the fore as the climax of a half hour's speech. His remarks were based on the fact that Tuesday was the thirty-fourth anniversary of Mr. Cannon's first speech in the House. Most of the day was taken up by a discussion of the bill to provide for taking the next census.

-:—:-

A speech by Senator Johnston of Alabama on the Aldrich currency bill and a statement by Senator Hale, chairman of the committee on naval affairs, concerning the proposed investigation of charges of defects in construction of battle ships, were the chief subjects of interest before the Senate Wednesday. The bill providing for the taking of the thirteenth census occupied most of the time of the House. Progress with it was slow because of numerous amendments offered. The bill was amended in one important particular, however, and that was limiting the census to the mainland of the United States, Alaska, Hawaii and Porto Rico. Mr. Henry of Texas urged the Republicans to bring in an employers' liability bill and a bill requiring notice before the issuance of federal injunctions.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Discussing trade in the Chicago district for the last week, R. G. Dun & Company's report says:

The general course of trade is headed toward recovery, although the returns disclose some irregularity. Operations this week were restricted to some extent by unfavorable weather and the holiday, and there are smaller marketings of farm products, less freight movement and decline in payments through the banks.

Against these temporary setbacks there are gratifying offsets in important resumptions at the mills and furnaces, further re-employment of workers and an improved demand for manufactures and spring merchandise.

Retail trade here and at most interior points benefited from a wider buying of heavy winter apparel and depletion of stocks previously in slow absorption.

The attendance of country buyers in the wholesale markets for staple goods shows seasonable increase and dealings are encouragingly stimulated in dry goods, woolens, clothing, footwear and food products.

The bookings in some respects make favorable comparison with a year ago, and the aggregate would have been better were all buyers making their usual full selections of needs, but there is yet a rather conservative feeling, which is likely to last until the trend of prices and the business outlook become more settled.

Road salesmen have fair success in the textile branches and new accounts are opened in the south and southwest sections. Indications generally encourage confidence in the prospects for wholesale and jobbing activity.

Manufacturing is not yet marked by an appreciable increase of outputs and improvement in deliveries is not expected to become general before spring. The situation, however, is better by the machinery set in motion and reduction of the unemployed.

Inquiries appear more plentiful in iron and steel branches, especially for rails, structural shapes and wire products.

Bank clearings, $201,416,856, are 10.3 per cent under those of the corresponding week of 1907.

Failures in the Chicago district number 33, against 32 last week and 25 a year ago. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 16, against 6 last week and 6 a year ago.

NEW YORK.

Buyers of spring goods are more in evidence this week at all markets, responding to the advance of the season, and jobbing trade shows more vim than at any time since last autumn. In no case, however, is the buying reported as equal to a year ago, and in some cases the decreases are very heavy. The easing of prices of staples shown in January has gone further this week. Building was at low ebb in January, and this is reflected in easy prices for lumber. Business failures in the United States for the week ending Feb. 13 number 824, against 272 last week, 204 in the like week of 1907, 208 in 1906, 243 in 1905 and 231 in 1904. Canadian failures for the week number 44, as against 50 last week and 29 in this week a year ago.—Bradstreet's Commercial Report.

Weak Kidneys

Weak Kidneys, surely point to weak Kidney Nerves. The Kidneys, like the Heart, and the Stomach, find their weakness, not in the organ itself, but in the nerves that control and guide and strengthen them. Dr. Shoop's Restorative is a medicine specifically prepared to reach these controlling nerves. To doctor the Kidneys alone, is futile. It is a waste of time, and of money as well.

If your back aches or is weak, if the urine scalds, or is dark and strong, if you have symptoms of Brights or other distressing or dangerous kidney disease, try Dr. Shoop's Restorative a month—Tablets or Liquid—and see what it can and will do for you. Druggist recommend and sell

Why Destroy the Saloon?

Because it is an evil and destroys manhood and every good thing that comes under itspower. It is an incubator of infamy, debauchery and of crime. A magazine of anarchy and rebellion and sin. It destroys capital and labor, in short, it is the enemy of prosperity and civilization. Please note these facts:

If a man spends $100 at the saloon bar he benefits labor $1.23.

If he spends $100 for woolen goods he benefits labor $12.86.

If he buys $100 worth of cotton goods he benefits labor $16.91

If you buy $100 worth of shoes you benefit labor $20.71.

If you invest $100 in furniture you benefit labor $23.77.

If you buy $100 worth of hardware you benefit labor $24.17. And in buying these goods you bring comfort and happiness to the home and family.

If 10 men buy $1000 worth of the useful articles mentioned they benefit the laborer $180 and have the goods for reward.

If 10 men spend $1000 for liquors at the saloon bar they benefit labor $12.30 and help to encourage crime and sin of every kind and lose the other $987.70 and have nothing to show for it.

Why not rise up and destroy such an enemy? Teddy, our beloved president, said: "It should be made a felony to sell liquor to the inhabitants of Alaska." Yes, brother Teddy, why not make it a felony to sell to the inhabitants of the earth. It may never be made a felony to manufacture or sell it, but it shall never be sold with the help of the writer's voice or ballot.

Nothing To Live For.

The Wisconsin Anti-Prohibition Association" has just held its first annual meeting in Milwaukee, and planned an aggressive campaign. Over a hundred delegates were present. The society plans to fight the "evils of prohibition," to work in both "wet" and "dry" territory. There will be no subordinate organizations, but one large central organization which expects to have a membership of 15,000 in the near future. The society expects to "have voting force enough to become an active fighting power, and this influence will also be used to promote all that is best in the saloon business, as well as to fight prohibition."

The new organization surely has an increasing host to fight, but nothing to live for when it comes to "promoting."

With you I rejoice in the rapid progress of prohibition sentiment. It looks as if an old prediction of mine will come true sooner than I expected it would. The prediction that the time would come when it would be thought as incredible that a civilized, Christain people ever tolerated a saloon as that a civilized, Christian people ever tolerated human slavery. —E. W. Hoch, governor of Kansas, in a personal letter to The Union Signal.

The American Issue contains an article proclaiming that moral reform should be kept out of politics. Dr. J. B. Cranfield answers this as follows: "I must take the time and space to add a word of advice to the editor of the American Issue, and all of the workers for the Anti-Saloon League. It is this: Make your war, gentlemen, upon the saloon, and not upon the national Prohibition party, which was organized for the purpose of annihilating the saloon and the entire liquor oligarchy. You only play into the hands of the liquor men themselves when you take up their slogan and join with them in crying down the national Prohibition party. We are here to stay. We are old enough to have been grandfather to the Anti-Saloon League, though we do not covet that distinction. We will be here administering the national government when the Anti-Saloon League has dissolved and become a memory. While your organization continues to live and labor, we greatly desire to labor with you, in so far as it is possible, in the destruction of the liquor traffic, but we cannot labor with you if you keep your swords constantly unsheathed in the attempt to take the life of the one and only organization in America that has led and is leading the fight in state and nation against the organized drink traffic in its every phase. God is with us, and we shall win, and I believe with all my heart that we shall win speedily. When we win, we will win through political action. There is no other road to ultimate success, nor can there be a destruction of the national liquor business short of the success of a national party pledge to its annihilation.

Neglected Colds Threaten Life.

(From the Chicago Tribune)

"Don't trifle with a cold," is good advise for prudent men and women. It may be vital in the case of a child. Proper food, good ventilation, and dry, warm clothing are the proper safeguards against colds. If they are maintained through the changeable weather of autumn, winter and spring, the chances of a surprise from ordinary colds will be slight. But the ordinary light cold will become severe if neglected and a well established ripe cold is to the germs of diphtheria what honey is to the bee. The greatest menace to child life at this season of the year is the neglected cold." Whether it is a child or adult, the cold slight or severe, the very best treatment that can be adopted is to give Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is safe and sure. The great popularity and immense sale of this preparation has been attained by its remarkable cures of this ailment. A cold never results in pneumonia when it is given. For sale by H. Milliman, St. Joe; F. R. Bowman, Spencerville.

Brown Names Executive Committee.

John W. Brown, republican county chairman, has named his executive committee, who will assist in the 1908 campaign. There are nine on the committee, James H. Rose, Charles Emanuel and James E. Pomeroy of Auburn, I. N. Cox of Ashley, Geo. W. Crooks of Waterloo, Charles Arford of Edgerton, O., R 1, Charles H. Bangs of Auburn, R 3, Charles W. Camp of Garrett, and M. E. Reynolds of Corunna. You will please take notice that not a single republican from this territory is in this list, while Auburn has three. Brown evidently has it in for his republican brothers of Concord. This was a bad move, Mr. Brown.

Testing Cattle for Tuberculosis.

There is an ever-increasing interest in the prevention of consumption or tuberculosis among people. All the recent experiments show more and more clearly that the disease may be contracted through the use of milk from tuberculous cattle, even though the cows may appear to be in good health.

There is only one test which may be generally applied to cattle to determine whether they are affected with tuberculosis. This is known as the tuberculin test and consists in taking the temperature at intervals upon one day, injecting a prescribed dose of tuberculin in the evening and taking the temperatures again on the succeeding day. A rise of temperature is indicative of disease, and no change in temperature is indicative of freedom from disease. The test is not experimental, but conclusive. It may be applied by any competent veterinarian. This is the season at which the test can be applied with the least trouble, and it is advised that owners dairymen and breeders use this test this spring. After the cattle have been turned upon pasture, the test can not be made be made without more or less inconvenience. Animals found to be tubercular should be reported to the State Veterinarian as there is a penalty provided for failure to do so. Such animals may be kept for breeding purposes under certain conditions; or may be slaughtered subject to inspection. They can not be sold to go into other herds.

Corn Growers! Attention!

Farmers, you are doubtless aware that Indiana along with other states, is an agricultural state, and that corn has not only become but is now its great crop, the basis of its prosperity. It has been shown by statistics, and by experiments at the different experiment stations of this state that the normal yield of land of such fertility as we have, is falling below the average of what it should produce. There is a reason for the decline in this crop. It has been discovered that a great many farmers plant seed of which they know nothing regarding its vitality or productiveness, that at least 30 per cent of the corn that is planted is either dead or of such low vitality that if it grows at all it will only produce weak plants. Think what this means to you. You are losing the use of 30 per cent of your land—of 30 per cent of your labor in planting and cultivating. And for what reason? because you fail to make sure that the seed you plant will grow. One would naturally conclude that to test an ear of seed corn is a difficult matter, but such is not the case. This is how it is done: Put 2 inches of moist sand, soil or sawdust in the bottom of any old box and mark it out in squares. Take six kernels from each ear of seed corn, two near the butt, two near the tip and two from the middle, and place them in a square with a number corresponding to the number of the ear. Cover the whole with cheese cloth, and above it place two inches more of damp sand, soil or sawdust. Keep the box warm. In due time the live kernels will sprout, about the same as when planted. In cases where the kernels do not sprout or show feeble growth, feed the corresponding ears to live stock. Plant the rest.

The smallness of the total amount of work required may be judged by the fact that it only takes fourteen ears of corn to plant an acre. At the expense of a few hours' labor on each farm, the corn lands could be made to yield, not sixty, but ninety per cent of the maximum crop, a gain to the farmers of the world some eighteen millions of dollars, with a corresponding gain to the farmers of this community. By all means you should test your seed corn this year.

In connection with this article we want to give you a few facts regarding this great cereal crop. There are few people who realize what even a little improvement in corn culture means. During 1906 the United States grew ninety-five million acres of corn. This area produced 2,880,000,000 bushels of corn, worth in round numbers $1,300,000,000. By simply adding one kernel to each ear you add $1,620,000 to the returns from the area producing corn. Suppose you increase the yield one bushel per acre and figure this at forty-five cents per bushel, the total value of the corn crop is increased $42,750,000. Every farmer that can increase his yield is simply adding that much to his prosperity. About one third of all the land under cultivation in the United States is devoted to corn. It is grown on ninety percent of all the farms in the country. It is worth more than two and one-half times the wheat crop—the grain second in importance. Almost every state has its corn growers association, and all corn states have their annual corn schools and schools of instruction and Indiana is not behind in this regard. What is worth doing at all is worth doing well.

Neighborhood Favorite.

Mrs. E D. Charles, of Harbor, Maine, speaking of Electric Bitters, says: "It is a neighborhood favorite here with us." It deserves to be a favorite everywhere. It gives quick relief in dyspepsia, liver complaints, kidney derangement malnutrition, nervousness, weakness and general debility. Its action on the blood, as a thorough purifier makes it especially useful as a spring medicine. This grand alterative tonic is sold under guarantee at H. Milliman's drug store. 50c

WOMAN'S BACKACHE

The back is the mainspring of woman's organism. It quickly calls attention to trouble by aching. It tells, with other symptoms, such as nervousness, headache, pains in the loins, weight in the lower part of the body, that a woman's feminine organism needs immediate attention.

In such cases the one sure remedy which speedily removes the cause, and restores the feminine organism to a healthy, normal condition is

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

Mrs. Will Young, of 6 Columbia Ave., Rockland, Me., says:

"I was troubled for a long time with dreadful backaches and a pain in my side, and was miserable in every way. I doctored until I was discouraged and thought I would never get well. I read what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for others and decided to try it; after taking three bottles I can truly say that I never felt so well in my life."

Mrs. Augustus Lyon, of East Earl, Pa., writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"I had very severe backaches, and pressing-down pains. I could not sleep, and had no appetite. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured me and made me feel like a new woman."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration.

Famous Boys.

A boy used to crush the flowers to get their color and painted the white side of his father's cottage in Tyrol with all sorts of pictures, which the mountaineer gazed at as wonderful. He was the great artist Titian.

An old painter watched a little fellow who amused himself making drawings of his pot and brushes, easel and stool, and said, "That boy will beat me some day." So he did, for he was Michael Angelo.

A German boy was reading a blood and thunder novel. Right in the midst of it he said to himself: "Now this will never do. I get too much excited over it. I can't study so well after it. So here goes!" And he flung the book out into the river. He was Fichte, the great German philosopher.

The Pope's Red Robe.

The outward robe of the pope is red and made from the wool of the lambs of the convent of St. Agnes, near the Porta Pia. The cloak and cape are lined with purple and trimmed with gold lace; the sombrero, or hat, is red, and has a gold cord and tassel. Beneath the cloak is worn an alb, made also of wool of the lambs of St. Agnes, and girt about the waist with a sash of white moire antique, garnished with gold fringe. The pope's hands are burdened with kid mittens, and his feet are burdened with a pair of slippers worn over his ordinary shoes. The total value of his wardrobe is said to be $150,000.

Obit Not Flattering.

We knew the dead man "off and on" for thirty years. He was always a would-be mad man, although in later years as a peace officer he had to hold in check his naturally villainous disposition, but just how he escaped the "killer's" bullet or the penitentiary so many years we can't just figure out. He was never a gun fighter, but as a rough and tumble scrapper he was hard to beat. He would gouge and bite and he always carried brass knucks and a shot billy, so in making a gun play and getting killed he simply got "his" little later in life than those who knew him best expected.—Meeske (Mo.) Blouse with Bretelles.

No prettier variation of the ever useful blouse has yet appeared than this one. It gives the broad shoulder effect; it is so constructed as to conceal the armhole seams, and is altogether graceful and attractive, while it is adapted to a whole host of materials. In the illustration plaid taffeta is trimmed with frills of ribbon, but the waisting flannels are very beautiful this season and suit the model admirably well, while it is also adapted to madras and linen. It can be made with or without the frills and with pretty three-quarter sleeves or those

VERY BAD FORM OF ECZEMA.

Suffered Three Years—Physicians Did No Good—Perfectly Well After Using Cuticura Remedies.

"I take great pleasure in informing you that I was a sufferer of eczema in a very bad form for the past three years. I consulted and treated with a number of physicians in Chicago, but to no avail. I commenced using the Cuticura Remedies, consisting of Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills, three months ago, and to-day I am perfectly well, the disease having left me entirely. I cannot recommend the Cuticura Remedies too highly to anyone suffering with the disease that I have had. Mrs. Florence E. Atwood, 18 Crilly Place, Chicago, Ill., October 2, 1905. Witness: L. S. IMMIGRATION FROM SOUTH EXPECTED.

U. S. Farmers Are Recognizing Splendid Opportunities Offered by Western Canada.

St. Paul, Minn., February.—Present indications are that the Canadian Northwest will draw an exceptionally heavy movement of new settlers from the United States this year. It should surpass the banner record for 1907. This is not only based on the fact that the Americans have come to realize generally that the Canadian Northwest offers splendid opportunities, but also because the railroads have awakened to the fact and are offering rates to the Canadian Northwest which are exceptionally favorable.

The lines which lead to St. Paul from the east and south are offering homeseekers' rates to the Canadian Northwest this year which are on a parity with those in existence to the southwest for a couple of seasons.

These rates can be obtained from any agent of the Canadian Government, who will be pleased to give all information possible regarding those districts which offer the greatest inducements to settlers. The weather throughout Western Canada has been remarkably good this year. A telegram from the winter wheat belt of Southern Alberta dated at Cardston, Alberta, January 29th, says:

"This winter up to January 25th was nothing short of a marvel, in fact it was the finest anyone can remember for twenty-five years, though there have been others nearly as good. The days were fine, sunny and warm with light frosts at night. Overcoats and gloves, etc., were discarded by most people in the day time. There was so little frost in the ground that postholes could be dug without any trouble after the first inch was broken through. Winter wheat remained fresh and green although there has been no snow since the September storm. If there is an early spring, winter wheat should gain a great start."

Amongst the reports of the yield last year the following extracts are taken:

H. Howe, of Magrath, Alta., writing on November, 1907, says: "I have 70 acres in crop, 50 acres of wheat and 7 acres of oats. My average yield of oats was 35 bushels to the acre, and of wheat 45 bushels. The value to me was $35 per acre."

J. F. Haycock, of Magrath, writes in November: "I had 65 acres in winter wheat which went 60 bushels to the acre; oats averaged 80 bushels. I also had 12 tons of hay worth $10 per ton. I got 600 bushels of potatoes from 3 acres of land; I got 8 tons per acre from 5 acres of sugar beets."

J. F. Bradshaw, of Magrath, had 1,080 acres of winter wheat last year which averaged 39½ bushels to the acre. The value of his farm products per acre was: Wheat, $31.60; oats, $11.20, and barley, $25.15.

Macaroni Wheat.

Salzer's strain of Macaroni or Kubanka wheat is absolutely pure and is from seed obtained from the Department of Agriculture. Our strain is Dakota grown which laughs at droughts and elements and positively mocks black rust that terrible scorch and would be ashamed of itself if it did not return from 40 to 80 bu. of the finest wheat the sun shines on per acre in good Ill., Ia., Mich., Wis., Ohio, Penn., Mo., Neb., Kan., and other lands, and 40 to 60 bu. per acre in arid lands. No rust, no insects, no failure.

And if you send 14c they will mail in addition a package of farm seed never before seen by you. John A. Salzer Seed Co., La Crosse, Wis. C. N. U.

Exonerated.

"Mr. Gayboy, when I went into a crowded car the other evening you appeared to be deeply absorbed in a newspaper, and I had to accept a seat offered me by an entire stranger. You didn't see me, of course. O, no!"

"My dear Miss Pimmie, when a pretty girl enters a car where I am sitting I never rise and offer her my seat. I always know that a lot of younger fellows will do it at once and it won't be necessary on my part."

"O, well, Mr. Gayboy, there was no harm done—and I have no doubt you really were too busy with your newspaper to see me. I was just joking."

Rheumatism.

It has been said that to know what Rheumatism really is, one must imagine oneself squeezed in a powerful vise; one turn more and Neuralgia will be felt; and the few final twists will give an idea of the condensed misery of Gout. Be that as it may, Rheumatism is one of the most excruciatingly painful diseases which afflict humanity. It is not always dangerous, unless it extends to the heart, and then the risk is greatly increased. This disease, although not always immediately dangerous, as already observed, will, if not checked, gradually undermine the patient's health; while it wastes the muscles, disorganizes the joints, and renders the sufferer a cripple. Innumerable remedies have been suggested for the relief and cure of this most painful disease; but the safest and surest application in the world is St. Jacobs Oil, which never fails to cure Rheumatism, unless there be serious complications with established organic disease, and even then relief will be almost instantaneous.

It is predicted by a very modern architect that the house of one large room, a small kitchen attached and an enormous inclosed porch, with facilities for outdoor sleeping has come to stay.

Along the New Line to the Pacific Coast

Through the Dakotas, Montana, Idaho and Washington, the building of this railway opens up a country full of money-making possibilities. Rich farm lands are now selling at $10 per acre and upwards. They are bound to increase in value within the next few years. Three new towns—Lemmon, Butte County, South Dakota; Hettinger, Adams County, N. Dakota; and Bowman, Bowman County, North Dakota—have recently been established. Three months ago the sites of these towns were open prairie lands. Today at each place a well-built town, with a population of close to 500, is established; many trades and professions are represented. But there is plenty of room for more along the Pacific Coast extension of the Chicago Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway

In the Dakotas, and in Montana, along the new line, the soil is a dark loam with a clay subsoil; good water is plentiful; rainfall is ample to raise the crops; the climate is healthful; the air is dry and invigorating; winters are mild; growing seasons are long. The deeded lands sell at $10 per acre, and upwards. Last season many farmers made enough money from their first year's crops to pay for their land. The Judith Basin, in central Montana, offers exceptional opportunities in farming, particularly in wheat and alfalfa raising. The fruit-grower will find a good field along the new line in Washington. Apples, pears, plums, cherries, apricots and small fruits grow well there. Last year hundreds of acres of bearing orchards produced crops which brought from $600 to $600 per acre.

Blowing the Nose.

Medical experts are calling the attention of the public to the importance of performing the nose blowing operation in a scientific and hygienic manner. First one nostrol and then the other should be blown without undue violence. Doctors state that the two nasal passages should never be closed at the same time. If they are obstructed, as in the case of a cold, the back of the throat is filled with compressed air, and this, together with the discharge and the microbes which it contains, may be driven through the eustachian tube into the middle ear and lead to serious results. A great authority on the subject used to forbid his patients to blow their noses when suffering from a cold. The course is hardly one which will commend itself to those in the habit of catching cold. The best advice would seem to be that when it is necessary to blow the nose blowing should be done gently.—London Mail.

To Measure Molecules.

An apparatus for measuring the seventy-millionth part of an inch has been made by Dr. P. Shaw, of Nottingham University, England, says Technical World Magazine. It works upon the principle of electric touch, and consists of a fine micrometer screw and six levers. The apparatus is so sensitive and delicate that it is impossible to manipulate it before an audience. It is hung by rubber bands, covered with thick felt, and must be worked at dead of night, when there is no traffic or factory working. The smallest distance that this mechanism measures is about the distance between a solid and a liquid molecule. Dr. Shaw's invention was first made in 1900, but its great improvement of late has made it the wonder of physicists throughout the world.

Deadly East Indian Duels.

There are a good deal of savagery and stoical disregard of death left in the East yet despite the advance of civilization, and this extends to the so-called sports of the people. Thus among the natives of Baroda there obtains still a kind of gladiatorial display in the shape of a fearful fist fight wherein the contestants wear a very formidable cestus of steel studded with murderous spikes. The duelists—usually big, brawny, athletic men who have been infuriated for the occasion with copious drafts of opium in which hemp is infused—enter the arena singing and set to with deliberate intent to kill, one or both invariably succumbing.

When an iceberg is launched upon its long journey its bottom parts are barnacled with sand, bowlders and other detritus gathered from the land surface over which it has made its tedious march to the sea. This burden is gradually cast off as it melts while drifting down along our continental seaboard.

As a result of the deposits thus made through countless centuries, combined with the products of erosion carried seaward by the rivers, the sea bed for many miles off shore has been gradually filled up, creating those vast submerged plateaus, known as "banks," which extend from Labrador to the Bay of Fundy and form the breeding grounds for innumerable shoals of cod, herring and other valuable food fishes. In this way the bergs have performed an economic service of incalculable value, laying the foundation for one of the world's most important productive industries and affording a means of livelihood to those hardy bands of "captains courageous" who each year reap the harvests of the sea.

The bergs serve a further economic purpose in that to their tempering influences are largely due the "climatic conditions prevailing over a great part of the interior of North America.—Alfred Sidney Johnson in the World To-Day.

BRAIN POWER

Increased by Proper Feeding.

A lady writer who not only has done good literary work, but reared a family, found in Grape-Nuts the ideal food for brain work and to develop healthy children. She writes:—

"I am an enthusiastic proclaimer of Grape-Nuts as a regular diet. I formerly had no appetite in the morning and for 8 years while nursing my four children, had insufficient nourishment for them.

"Unable to eat breakfast I felt faint later, and would go to the pantry and eat cold chops, sausage, cookies, doughnuts or anything I happened to find. Being a writer, at times my head felt heavy and my brain asleep.

"When I read of Grape-Nuts I began eating it every morning, also gave it to the children, including my 10 months old baby, who soon grew as fat as a little pig, good-natured and contented.

"Within a week I had plenty of breast milk, and felt stronger within two weeks. I wrote evenings and feeling the need of sustained brain power, began eating a small saucer of Grape-Nuts with milk instead of my usual indigestible hot pudding, pie, or cake for dessert at night.

"Grape-Nuts did wonders for me and I learned to like it. I did not mind my housework or mother's cares, for I felt strong and full of 'go' I grew plump, nerves strong, and when I wrote my brain was active and clear; indeed, the dull head pain never returned."

"There's a Reason."

How to Exercise the Bowels

Your intestines are lined inside with millions of little suckers, that draw the Nutrition out of food as it passes them.

But, if the food passes too slowly, it decays before it gets through. Then the little suckers draw Poison from it instead of Nutrition.

This Poison makes a Gas that injures your system more than the food should have nourished it.

You see, the food is Nourishment or Poison, just according to how long it stays in transit.

The usual remedy for this delayed passage (called Constipation) is to take a big dose of Castor Oil.

This merely makes slippery the passage for unloading the current cargo.

It does not help the Cause of delay a trifle.

It does slacken the Bowel-Muscles more than ever, and thus weakens them for their next task.

Another remedy is to take a strong Cathartic, like Salts, Calomel, Jalap, Phospate of Sodium, Aperient Water, or any of these mixed.

What does the Cathartic do?

It mere flushes-out the Bowels with a waste of Digestive Juice, set flowing into the Intestines through the tiny suckers.

* * *

But, the Digestive Juice we waste in doing this today is needed for tomorrow's natural Digestion. We cannot afford to lose it.

That's why Cascarets are the only safe medicine for the bowels.

They do not waste any precious fluid of the Bowels, as Cathartics do.

They do not relax the Intestines by greasing them inside like Castor Oil or Glycerine.

They simply stimulate the Bowel Muscles to do their work naturally, comfortably, and nutritiously.

And, the Exercise these Bowel Muscles are thus forced to take, makes them stronger for the future, just as Exercise makes your arm stronger.

Cascarets are as safe to use constantly as they are pleasant to take.

They are purposely put up like candy, so you must eat them slowly and let them go down gradually with the saliva, which is in itself, a fine, natural Digestive.

They are put up purposely in thin, flat, round-cornered Enamel boxes, so they can be carried in a man's vest pocket, or in a woman's purse, all the time, without bulk or trouble.

Price 10c a box at all druggists.

Be very careful to get the genuine, made only by the Sterling Remedy Company and never sold in bulk. Every tablet stamped "CCC."

Nothing Doing.

It was an imposing building, but the man with the square valise did not hesitate.

"Madam," he said to the matron who appeared, "I should like to show you a copy of our book, 'The Quiet Life,' which is making such a—"

"Sir," she interrupted, "this is an institution for the deaf and dumb."

Grippe is sweeping the country. Stop it with Preventics, before it gets deeply seated. To check early colds with these little Candy Colds Cure Tablets is surely sensible and safe. Preventics contain no Quinine, no laxative, nothing harsh or sickening. Pneumonia would never appear if early colds were promptly broken. Also good for feverish children. Large box 48 tablets, 25 cents. Vest pocket boxes 5 cents. Sold by all dealers.

Quite a number of the I. O. O. F. boys went to Garrett Monday to attend the county meeting. All report a good time.

Prof. O. E. Tarbox and Merritt Sechler attended the last number on the lecture course at Butler Monday evening.

About twenty of the Pythian sisters were at Auburn last Monday afternoon and evening, to meet their District Deputy. Eleven lodges were represented. All from this way report a very pleasant gathering.

A weak Stomach means weak Stomach nerves, always. And this is true also of the Heart and Kidneys. Its a pity that sick ones continue to drug the stomach or stimulate the Heart and Kidneys. The weak nerves, not the organs themselves, need this help. This explains why Dr. Shoop's Restorative has and is promptly helping so many sick ones. It goes direct to the cause of these diseases. Test this vital truth, and see. All dealers.

Blunders in Memorials.

Some remarkable mistakes in memorials have totally escaped notice until it was too late to rectify them. The spurs on the boots of Cromwell's statue at Westminster abbey, London, are the most interesting feature of the monument, although they generally get no attention at all from sightseers. They are worn upside down. In a painted window on the staircase which leads from the floor of Westminster palace to the committee rooms an inscription on a sword wielded by the "Black Prince" has the words "Prince of Whales" Again, in the fresco depicting the embarkation of the pilgrim fathers in the corridor leading from the outer lobby at St. Stephen's to the house of lords the Mayflower is shown to be hoisting the union jack—a flag which did not come into existence until over 300 years after the days of the historic Mayflower.

Wedding Ring Superstition.

A quaint superstition is prevalent in many English villages. When a woman is going to be married every effort is made to prevent her from seeing her wedding ring before the ceremony, as it is considered that a sight of it except at the altar is bound to bring bad luck.

"Health Coffee" is really the closest Coffee Imitation ever yet produced. This, the finest Coffee Substitute ever made, has recently been produced by Dr. Shoop of Racine, Wis. Not a grain of real Coffee in it either. Health Coffee is made from pure toasted cereals, with malt, nuts, etc. Really it would fool an expert—who might drink it for Coffee. No twenty or thirty minutes boiling. "Made in a minute" says the doctor. Sol Barney.

Milton Simanton returned home from the St. Joseph Hospital at Ft. Wayne, Thursday. He stood the trip home very well and is feeling much better, while his improvement seems slow it is hoped that he may continue to improve until he has become well again. He has had a trying time of hospital life since December, but has bore his trial patiently and has now returned to make cheerful again his happy home.

St. Joe Relief Association.

An Organization Containing One Hundred Members. Has Been Organized Since February 1906.

In February 1906, Geo. W. Bartlett perfected an organization among the citizens of St. Joe, which was called The St. Joe Relief Association. When 100 signatures were secured it was to be in operation. To pay all expenses of the concern a small fee of 10c was charged each one entering the organization. The agreement that each member pledged himself to fulfill was that at the death of any member of the organization, they were to put up $1. In the two years of its existence but two members have died, they being Willard Metcalf and Ora Hatch. Several of its members at one time refused to pay when the time came and as a consequence their names were cast aside and new ones taken on who would pay. The whole matter was left to the persons concerned, there being no compulsory law to make them pay. The age limit ranged from 21 to 60 years. On February 1, 1909 the association will be no more unless a reorganization should take place and this will propably be done, as there are many of our people who can now see the good of it and who would like to join were the required number lacking. At the time of the organization quite a few objected to joining the association, but they wouldn't now if they could get in. This is an insurance that every person can well afford to carry. There are some who cannot be insured in any company, but here they stand as good a show as any if in good condition when entering same. A Surprised Vera.

A pleasant surprise party was given at the home of Marshall Andress and wife last Thursday evening in honor of their daughter Vera. The evening was spent with games and music. Those present were the Misses Lena Coburn, Winnie Bailey, Mary Scholes, Madge Hart, Pearl Provines, Clara Shull, Chloe and Frankie Rhodenbaugh, and Neva and Vera Andress, Messrs. Leslie Meek, Marvin Poper, George Ridgway, Elza Kinsey, Stanley Monroe, Winfield Provines and Elmer Hart. Refreshments were served and the guests departed at a late hour.

Best Healer in the World.

Rev. F. Starbird of East Raymond, Maine, says: "I have used Bucklen's Arnica Salve for several years, on my old army wound, and other obstinate sores and find it the best healer in the world. I use it too with great success in my veterinary business." Price 25c. at H. Milliman's drug store.

For Mortgage Exemptions, see S. S. WIDNEY.

Chas. Lake, wife and son of Fort Wayne, spent Sunday with Dr. Lake and wife.

All persons who have received our statements will please call and settle up before April 1st. We wish to thank those who have already responded.

Entertained.

After the regular session of lodge, Friday evening, the Rebekahs were most pleasantly entertained by the hostesses of the evening, Miss Lora Hull and Mrs. Pluma Hamilton. The lodge room assumed the appearance of a railway coach and the guests started on a trip round the world. In the big woods the train stopped to allow the passengers the privilege of a deer hunt. Many deer were captured by the "dear." At one of the large cities the passengers alighted to visit the Zoological gardens. This afforded much amusement in the way of a guessing contest as each one was to guess the name of an animal which was pinned to their back. At another station a public sale was in progress and the train waited while Auctioneer Curie sold "things." At Sandusky the ladies fished and who can tell what they caught. At last the trip being concluded the train stopped for refreshments, consisting of crystal-popcorn and nuts, and home-made candy. After this many amusing games were played and at a late hour all retired to their homes.

Henry Hathaway was at Wayne, Monday.

Wm. Church is moving his family to this place from Spencerville this week. They will occupy Will Jackson's property on Spencerville street.

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Telegraphic Information Gathered by the Few for the Enlightenment of the Many.

Governor Asked to Oust Jerome.

Twenty-two specific charges are made in a petition, praying for the removal of William T. Jerome as district attorney of the county of New York, which has been sent to Governor Hughes at Albany by a committee of stockholders of the Metropolitan street railway through their chairman, William W. King. The petition alleges that Jerome failed to properly prosecute charges of alleged "jury fixing" and the giving of false testimony in street railway cases; that the prosecution of violations of the criminal law by the life insurance companies of New York as ordered by the Armstrong committee had been delayed; that an alleged criminal conspiracy to divert the property of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company of New York into the hands of a few men, was allowed by Mr. Jerome to go on and hundreds of stockholders robbed of their money and that no attempt was made to punish men alleged to have committed other frauds in connection with New York City traction deals.

Want to Kill King Alfonso.

A dispatch from Madrid, Spain, says there is much uneasiness at what appears to be a renewal of anarchistic activity. On several occasions recently, the dispatch says, suspicious persons have been arrested while trying to approach King Alfonso. The authorities however, maintain strict secrecy about these arrests. Extraordinary precautions have been taken to safeguard the king.

Explosion in Mexican Mine.

An explosion of fire damp occurred in No. 3 shaft of the Rosita mine, at Musquiz, Mexico, and for a time it was feared that many miners had lost their lives. Relief parties, however, were immediately organized and all the men brought to the surface before the subsequent fire had gained headway. A number of men are working in an effort to extinguish the fire.

Ohio to Provide Work for Unemployed.

Mayors from fourteen cities of the State of Ohio attended the meeting at Columbus in the interests of the unemployed held in the Senate chamber under authority of a resolution adopted by the Senate. A committee of five was appointed to draft such remedial legislation as will give cities power to furnish work for the unemployed.

Blind Tiger Law is Upheld.

The Indiana Supreme Court has handed down a decision declaring that the blind tiger law, passed by the last Legislature, is constitutional. The case on which the decision was rendered was carried up from Muncie and the decision has been awaited with much interest all over the State.

Three Children Meet Frightful Death.

Near Greensboro, N. C., two children of Thomas Hardin, a dairyman, and one of his brother's children met a frightful death by the overturning upon them of a pot of boiling tar, around which they were playing in imitation of a hog killing.

Edison Under Surgeon's Knife.

Thomas A. Edison was operated upon for mastoiditis at a hospital in New York City. The doctor who performed the operation later stated that the condition of the inventor was favorable and led to the expectation of an early recovery.

Serious Wreck on the Pere Marquette.

A relief engine going to the relief of a Pere Marquette passenger train which was stalled in the snow, near Wyman Station, Mich., crashed into the rear of the train. Five passengers were injured.

Printer Stillings Permanently Out.

Charles A. Stillings will not be restored to duty as public printer. President Roosevelt let this fact be known to friends who talked with him concerning the tangle in the government establishment.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Wm. Lutz, aged 33, died at Boonville of lead poison, caused from continuous employment as a printer. He was for eight years associate editor on the Enquirer, a Democratic organ.

Auberry, 2-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. James Bratton, near Linton, drank a quantity of diluted lye, and died twenty-four hours later in great agony. The child was an only one.

Mrs. Peter Kremer fell dead suddenly at Madison of rheumatism of the heart. She and her husband had just celebrated their golden wedding, and were about to celebrate his eightieth birthday.

Harry W. Johnson, saloon keeper at Hatfield, had his license revoked at Rockport for the third conviction under the State law. This is the first time in the history of Spencer County that a saloon keeper has lost his license.

According to trustworthy statistics, South Bend, with its population of 55,000, has 20,000 foreigners. There are 12,000 Poles, 4,000 Hungarians, 2,000 Swedes, 300 Belgians, 60 Danes, 30 Norwegians, 30 Italians, 35 Greeks, 14 Chinese and 2 Japanese.

While hunting two brothers, Ralph and James Pettiford, of near Vernon, became separated, and the former, discharging his gun in a thicket, hit his brother in the right eye. He was taken to North Vernon, where the eye was removed, as the sight was destroyed.

The retail merchants of Terre Haute have decided to abolish the refund fare system which had been in operation for two years to cater to out-of-town trade. The merchants say the books were misused by customers and were loaned to other persons, which was a violation of the agreement.

Earnest Gallmeyer, aged 50, farmer and father of a large family, committed suicide by hanging himself in the barn on his farm fifteen miles south of Fort Wayne. He had dressed to go to church and left his family at the door ready to meet him with the farm carriage. He had partially harnessed the horses. No reason is known for the deed.

Just as the jury left the Superior Court room in Elkhart to consider evidence against him on a charge of highway robbery, George Bradley was stricken by heart failure and was unconscious for half an hour. He revived before the return of the jury, which declared him guilty and gave him from two to fourteen years in prison.

At the home of her father, Quincy Ford, near Whitestown, Flossie Ford, 6 years old, found a single-barrel pistol in an old trunk, which proved to be loaded, and while playing with the weapon it was accidentally discharged, the bullet striking her 3-year-old brother in the head and killing him instantly. Both parents were greatly prostrated.

Gen. Albert L. New, of Greenfield, has secured a patent on wireless telegraph apparatus, which competent judges value at $100,000. It will be put into practical use at once. General New has accumulated a fortune from his investments in wireless telegraphy. He was an officer of the company which established the stations along the Pacific coast.

The family of George Bertram at Terre Haute, who lost his life in a fire which did $700 damage to his bakery and residence, have found $3,000 in cash in an old safe in the bakery. The safe had not been regarded as a place for keeping even small amounts of money. At the time of the fire Bertram attempted to rescue his own son from the heat and smoke, and he was successful, but the father died a few days later from injuries sustained.

A blaze was discovered in the animal barn at the Wallace circus headquarters at Peru by Frank Jackson, just as the great structure was filled with smoke, and he opened the ventilators in the roof in time to save the zebras, deer, kangaroos, birds and goats from suffocation. Jackson was attracted to the barn by the screaming of parrots and cockatoos. The blaze started under the floor, which was wet from a recent scrubbing, and it was slowly creeping toward a quantity of hay at the time of discovery. It was easily put out.

A four-room cottage occupied by the Misses Harless was blown up by dynamite at Noblesville. The house was completely wrecked, but the young ladies escaped injury. The police believe enemies of the young women committed the deed, although the girls say they do not suspect anyone. The dynamite was placed under the bedroom occupied by the young ladies, and it is considered remarkable that they escaped with their lives. The explosion tore a large hole in the ground under the house, and the weatherboarding was broken into kindling wood. Every window was shattered.

The 3-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Akers, of Friendship, choked to death while eating parched corn.

The Trustees of the Bethel Evangelical church at Evansville received a letter from Andrew Carnegie saying he would buy a large pipe organ for the church.

Isaac J. Bitts, 13 years old, was struck by a Louisville & Nashville railway train at Howell, and instantly killed. The boy was standing on the track and he saw the train bearing down on him, but he was too frightened to get out of the way.

While preparing to attend the funeral of her small granddaughter, Mrs. Andrew Clifton, 70 years old, dropped dead at her home in Marion. She had been in poor health for some weeks and the excitement attendant upon the preparations for the funeral is supposed to have induced heart failure.

John Wert, who died at Millersburg a few days ago, built the first church in LeGrange County—the St. John's Lutheran church, located about six and one-half miles northwest of South Milford, on the old Seagley farm. It was built forty-three years ago, Mr. Wert and his co-laborers riding over the country on horseback and collecting the funds and perfecting the church organization.

A. M. Gibson, 62 years old, former county recorder and for twenty-nine years connected with the Wabash Daily Plaindealer, was seized of vertigo while on the way to the office, dying fifteen minutes later. He was a member of the G. A. R. and active in political and church work. He was apparently in usual health, although recently he changed from the counting room to the editorial department because of illness.

Miss Phoebe Ellison, daughter of former State Senator Thomas E. Ellison, of Fort Wayne, and Earl A. Tatum, will be married about the middle of March at the home of Judge and Mrs. Newton W. Gilbert, in Manila. Miss Ellison went to the Philippines as a teacher two years ago, and met her future husband in the social life of that city. Mr. Tatum is an electrical engineer, and has held the position of city engineer of Manila.

Brothers who had not seen each other for more than thirty years were reunited at Crawfordsville at the home of James M. Blankenship, when E. B. Wicks, of Rockford, Ill., who is Mr. Blankenship's guest, was joined by his brother, S. E. Wicks, of Antwerp, N. Y. Mr. Wicks, of New York, is on his way home from Chico, Cal. The two men separated in Northern Michigan nearly a third of a century ago, when both were in the prime of life.

The members of the family of Edward Young, of Corydon, were prostrated with symptoms of ptomaine poison after the had eaten of canned salmon, and they were restored to convalescence with difficulty. Peter Deutsch and his son became violently ill after eating cabbage, and the attending physician expressed the belief that paris green had been used on the vegetable while it was under cultivation to destroy worms. They will recover.

John Groves, a veteran of the War of the Rebellion, was seriously burned at Waveland. While alone in a room he was seized with an epileptic attack, and in falling his foot was thrust into an open grate fire. The entire shoe was burned off and the foot was roasted. Mr. Groves was injured by a shell at the battle of Stone River, and the epilepsy is the result of his wound. H was nearly blind from the same cause Physicians fear the shock will result fatally.

Dore Ogden, who is experimenting at Columbus with a wireless telegraphic outfit, flew his first kite and the flight was successful. The kite is a cigar box shaped affair and weighs several pounds. The intention of Mr. Ogden is to use the kite in the air, at the end of a wire instead of erecting towers in order to get the proper height in sending and receiving wireless messages. By using kites he says he can obtain any height he desires and that there will be no limit as to the distance he can send and receive wireless messages.

Mrs. Columbus Rumble, 24 years old, wife of a farmer six miles south of Petersburg, was accidentally killed by Jasper Jerrell, 19 years old, a member of the family. The young man had been rabbit hunting and while returning and rounding the corner of the house the gun was accidentally discharged. The shot struck the young woman in the leg, almost severing it. Surgeons were summoned and amputated the leg, but the victim failed to rally, and she died in a few hours. The young man is prostrated with grief. He did not know Mrs. Rumble was near him until the gun was discharged and he heard her scream.

IMPROVE THE RIVERS PLEA OF ROOSEVELT

President Sends Special Message with Report on Waterways to Congress.

VAST POWER BEING WASTED.

Commerce and Irrigation Possibilities of Big Rivers—Would Guard Against Private Monopoly.

President Roosevelt sent a special message to Congress dealing with inland waterways, together with a preliminary report of the inland waterways commission. The President points out the vast possibilities of the river systems of the country, which he says are better adapted to the needs of the people than those of any other country, yet the rivers of no other civilized country are so poorly developed.

Running parallel with the possibilities of the rivers as freight carriers, the President points out their possibilities for purposes of power and irrigation, which he says are no less important. He contends that all three purposes can be served without injuring either. In this connection the necessity of guarding against the possibility of private monopolies controlling the water power to be developed is pointed out. A plea for a systematic plan to stop the waste in natural resources is urged, based on the commission's report.

Mr. Roosevelt commends the proposed waterway very highly and urges its construction. After speaking of the report he says:

"The commission finds that it was unregulated railroad competition which prevented or destroyed the development of commerce on our inland waterways. The Mississippi, our greatest natural highway, is a case in point. At one time traffic upon it was without a rival in any country. The report shows that commerce was driven from the Mississippi by the railroads.

"While production was limited, the railways, with their convenient terminals, gave quicker and more satisfactory service than the waterways. Later they prevented the restoration of river traffic by keeping down their rates along the rivers, recouping themselves by higher charges elsewhere. This should not be allowed to continue.

"The report rests throughout on the fundamental conception that every waterway should be made to serve the people as largely and in as many different ways as possible. It is poor business to develop a river for navigation in such a way as to prevent its use for power, when by a little foresight it could be made to serve both purposes. We cannot afford needlessly to sacrifice power to irrigation, or irrigation to domestic water supply, when by taking thought we may have all three.

"The development of our inland waterways will have results far beyond the immediate gain to commerce. Deep channels along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts and from the Gulf to the Great Lakes will have high value for the national defense. Forest protection, without which river improvements cannot be permanent, will at the same time help to postpone the threatened timber famine. Irrigation will create the means of livelihood for millions of people. If the policy of waterways improvement here recommended is carried out, it will affect for good every citizen of the republic."

The President then warns against the shortsighted granting of franchises to corporations and against the absorption of water power by combined capital. He says:

"No rights involving water power should be granted to any corporation in perpetuity, but only for a length of time sufficient to allow them to conduct their business profitably. A reasonable charge should of course be made for valuable rights and privileges which they obtain from the national government. The values for which this charge is made will ultimately, through the natural growth and orderly development of our population and industries, reach enormous amounts. The proceeds thus secured, after the cost of administration and improvement has been met, should naturally be devoted to the development of our inland waterways."

After urging the importance of the waterways, Mr. Roosevelt closes:

"Adequate funds should be provided, by bond issue if necessary, and the work should be delayed no longer. The development of our waterways and the conservation of our forests are the two most pressing physical needs of the country. The question of organization, powers, and appropriations are now before the Congress. There is urgent need for prompt and decisive action."

Points in the Message.

Running water is a most valuable natural asset of the people.

No rights involving waterpower should be granted to any corporation in perpetuity.

The first condition of successful development of our water power is a definite and progressive policy.

WORK OF CONGRESS

The Senate adjourned a few minutes after convening Thursday morning out of respect to Senator Latimer of South Carolina, whose death was announced. Most of the time the House was in session was consumed by the reading of impeachment charges offered by Mr. Waldo of New York against Federal Judge Lobbius R. Wilfley of the United States Court at Shanghai, China, which were referred to the committee on the judiciary. The House adjourned early as a mark of respect to Senator Latimer.

-:—:-

Senator Perkins of California Friday spoke in the Senate in justification of expenditures for the upbuilding of the American navy and of the policy of sending the fleet into the Pacific Ocean. The Tillman resolution, authorizing the Attorney General to prosecute the transportation companies of Oregon that have received public lands and have violated the terms of the grant, was adopted. The time of the House was devoted to consideration of the District of Columbia street railway bill, providing for extension of street car lines to the new union station.

-:—:-

Na business was transacted by the Senate Saturday. Immediately after prayer by the chaplain, Rev. Edward Everett Hale, Vice President Fairbanks called Senator McCumber to the reading desk and the North Dakota Senator read Washington's farewell address, after which the Senate adjourned until Monday. Washington's birthday was commemorated in the House of Representatives by a lively debate on the negro question. It arose out of an effort by Mr. Heflin of Alabama to amend the District of Columbia street railway trackage bill by requiring separate cars for whites and negroes. The bill without the amendment was passed. It provides universal transfers on the basis of cash fares, or six tickets for 25 cents. At 4:35 p. m. the House adjourned until Monday.

-:—:-

Ocean mail subsidy and currency legislation were both the subjects of speeches in the Senate Monday. Senator Gallinger opened the debate in favor of his bill for ocean mail subsidy to build up American merchant marine, and he was followed by Senator Depew, who strongly approved the measure. Senators Simmons of North Carolina and Whyte of Maryland spoke in criticism of the Aldrich currency bill, Senator Whyte announcing that he would not vote for any measure now before the Senate. An hour was devoted to further consideration of the bill to revise the criminal code, and at 5:14 o'clock the Senate adjourned. The unusual spectacle of the committee on rules being overruled by its chairman, the Speaker, on the floor of the House of Representatives was witnessed in that body, much to the discomfiture of Mr. Dalzell, a member of the committee. Mr. Dalzell brought in a resolution providing for an investigation of peonage in the Southern States, but the Speaker, on an objection by Mr. Mann (Ill.), held it was not privileged. Despite Mr. Dalzell's argument, the Speaker refused to alter his decision and the resolution was recommitted. The army appropriation bill, carrying $85,007,566, was taken up.

-:—:-

Currency legislation was the chief topic Tuesday. For nearly three hours Senator Owen of Oklahoma spoke on the Aldrich bill, claiming that he had, though former Senator Jones of Arkansas, in 1900 proposed legislation somewhat similar to the bill under consideration, but with essential differences, which he declared would have prevented the recent panic had it been enacted into law. The Indian appropriation bill received consideration during a part of the day. General debate on the army appropriation bill again furnished opportunity for free expression of opinion on the issues of the day in the House. Mr. Garrett of Tennessee and Mr. Pau of North Carolina arraigned the Republican party for its policies with regard to the tariff, while Mr. Hayes of California denounced the financial system of the United States as "patchwork" and the Aldrich bill as "falling far short of the remedial legislation needed." The only remarks pertinent to the army bill were made by Mr. Parker of New Jersey, who spoke in favor of the proposition of increased pay for the officers and men, and Mr. Kusterman of Wisconsin in support of restoration of the canteen.

-:—:-

In the Senate Senator Culberson of Texas criticised the Aldrich currency bill and spoke in favor of amendments he deemed necessary. Senator Nelson also denounced the measure as of no importance in its present form. The bill was, on motion of Mr. Aldrich, made the unfinished business of the Senate. The bill to revise the criminal laws of the United States was passed. The climax of general debate on the army appropriation bill in the House came when Mr. Dalzell (Pennsylvania) delivered an exhaustive speech in defense of the Republican party and its policies. The tariff system was attacked by Mr. Houston (Tennessee), who charged that the trusts owed their being to it. Other addresses were made by Mr. Sherwood (Ohio) in support of his bill to pension soldiers of the Civil War at $1 a day, and by Mr. Boutell (Illinois), who referred to the fact that the gold in the United States for the first time had reached a billion dollars. The army appropriation bill was read for amendment and its consideration was not concluded when the House adjourned.

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

A. CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER XII.—(Continued.)

"Cut down! You don't mean to say you are paid in proportion to the rottenness of the ships?"

"There ain't no use makin' a secret of it among friends," said Miggs. "That's just how the land lies with us. A voyage or two back I spoke to Mr. Girdlestone, and I says to him, says I, 'Give the ship an overhauling,' says I. 'Well and good,' says he, 'but it will mean so much off your wage,' says he, 'and the mate's wage as well.' I put it to him straight and strong, but he stuck at that. So Sandy and me, we put our heads together, and we 'greed it was better to take fifteen pounds and the risk, then come down to twelve pounds and safety."

"It is scandalous!" cried Tom Dimsdale hotly. "I could not have believed it."

"It's done every day, and will be while there is insurance money to be gained," said Miggs. "It's an easy thing to turn a few thousands a year while there are old ships to be bought, and offices which will insure them above their value. There was D'Arcy Campbell, of the Silvertown—what a trade that man did! He was smart! Collisions was his line, and he worked 'em well. There warn't a skipper out of Liverpool as could get run down as nat'ral as he could."

"Get run down?"

"Aye. He'd go lolloping about in the Channel if there was any fog on, steering for the lights o' any steamers or headin' round for all the fog whistles if it was too thick to see. Sooner or later, as sure as fate, he'd get cut down to the water's edge. It was a fine game! Half a yard o' print about his noble conduc' in the newspapers, and maybe a leader about the British tar and unexpected emergencies. It once went the length o' a subscription. Ha! ha!" Miggs laughed until he choked.

"And what became of this British star?" asked the German.

"He's still about. He's in the passenger trade now."

"There's many a way that it' done, sir," the mate added. "There's loadin' a cranky vessel wi' grain in bulk without usin' partition boards. If you get a little water in, as you are bound to do with a ship o' that kind, the grain will 'swell and swell until it bursts the seams open, and down ye go. Then there's ignition o' coal gas aboard o' steamers. That's a safe game, for nobody can deny it. And there are accidents to propellers. If the shaft o' a propeller breaks in heavy weather it's a bad lookout. I've known ships leave the docks with their propellers half sawn through all round. There's no end o' the tricks o' the trade."

"I cannot believe, however," said Tom stoutly, "that Mr. Girdlestone connives at such things."

"He's on the waitin' lay," the seaman answered. "He doesn't send 'em down, but he just hangs on, and keeps his insurance up. He's had some good hauls that way, though not o' late. There was the Belinda at Cape Palmas. That was five thousand clear, if it was a penny. And the Socntoo—that was a bad business! She was never heard of, nor her crew. Went down at sea, and left no trace."

"The crew, too!" Tom cried, with horror. "But how about yourselves, if what you say is true?"

"We are paid for the risk," said both the seamen, shrugging their shoulders.

"But there are government inspectors?"

"Ha! ha! I daresay you've seen the way some of them do their work," said Miggs.

Tom's mind was filled with consternation at what he had heard. If the African merchant were capable of this, what might he not be capable of? Was his ward to be depended on under any circumstances? And what sort of firm must this be, which turned so fair a side to the world and in which he had embarked his fortune. All these thoughts flashed through his mind as he listened to the gossip of the garrulous old sea dogs. A greater shock still, however, was in store for him.

Von Baumser had been listening to the conversation with an amused look upon his good-humored face. "Ah!" said he, suddenly striking in, "I will tell you something of your own firm which perhaps you do not know. Have you heard that Mr. Ezra Girdlestone is about to be married?"

"To be married!"

"Oh, yes; I have heard it this morning at Eckermann's office. I think it is the talk of the city."

"Who's the gal?" Miggs asked, with languid interest.

"I disremember her name," Von Baumser answered. "It is a girl the major has met—the young lady who has lived in the same house, and is what they call a warder."

"Not—not his ward?" cried Tom, springing to his feet and turning as white as a sheet. "Not Miss Harston? You don't tell me that he is going to marry Miss Harston?"

"That is the name. Miss Harston it is, sure enough."

"It is a lie—an infamous lie!" Tom cried, hotly.

"So it may be," Von Baumser answered serenely. "I do but say what I have heard, and heard more than once on good authority."

"If it is true there is villainy in it," cried Tom, with wild eyes, "the blackest villainy that ever was done upon earth. I'll go—I'll see him to-night. I shall know the truth!" He rushed furiously downstairs and through the bar. There was a cab near the door. "Drive into London!" he cried; "69 Eccleston square. I am on fire to be there!" The cabman sprang on the box, and they rattled away as fast as the horse would go. Long before reaching No. 69 he had opened the door and was standing upon the step. The instant that the cab pulled up he sprang off, and rang loudly at the great brass bell which flanked the heavy door.

"Is Mr. Girdlestone in?" he asked, as a maid appeared at the door.

"No, sir."

"Miss Harston, is she at home?" he said excitedly.

"No, sir. They have both gone away."

"Gone away!"

"Yes. Gone into the country, sir. And Mr. Ezra, too, sir."

"And when are they coming back?" he asked, in bewilderment.

"They are not coming back."

"Impossible!" Tom cried in despair. "What is their address then?"

"They have left no address. I am sorry I can't help you. Good-night, sir."

Tom Dimsdale stood upon the doorstep looking blankly into the night. He felt dazed and bewildered. What fresh villainy was this? Was it a confirmation of the German's report, or was it a contradiction of it? Cold beads stood upon his forehead as he thought of the possibility of such a thing. "I must find her," he cried, with clenched hands, and turned away heartsick into the turmoil and bustle of the London streets.

CHAPTER XIII.

Rebecca, the fresh-complexioned waiting maid, was still standing behind the ponderous hall door, listening, with a smile upon her face, to young Dimsdale's retreating footsteps, when another and a brisker tread caught her ear coming from the opposite direction. The smile died away as she heard it, and her features assumed a peculiar expression, in which it would be hard to say whether fear or pleasure predominated. She passed her hands up over her face and smoothed her hair with a quick, nervous gesture, glancing down at the same time at her snowy apron and the bright ribbons which set it off. Whatever her intentions may have been, she had no time to improve upon her toilet before a key turned in the door and Ezra Girdlestone stepped into the hall. As he saw her shadowy figure, for the gas was low, he uttered a hoarse cry of surprise and fear, and staggered backwards against the door post.

"Don't be afeared, Mister Ezra," she said in a whisper; "it's only me."

"What makes you stand about like that? You gave me quite a turn."

"I didn't mean for to do it. I've only just been answering of the door. Why, surely you've come in before now and found me in the hall without making much account of it."

"Ah, lass," answered Ezra, "my nerves have had a shake of late. I've felt queer all day. Look how my hand shakes."

"Well, I'm blessed!" said the girl with a titter, turning up the gas. "I never thought to see you afeard of anything. Why, you looks as white as a sheet!"

"There, that's enough!" he answered roughly. "Well, are they gone?"

"Yes, they are gone," she answered, standing by the side of the couch on which he had thrown himself. "Your father came about three with a cab, and took her away."

"She didn't make a fuss?"

"Make a fuss? No, why should she? There's fuss enough made about her, in all conscience. Oh, Ezra, before she got between us you was kind to me at times. I could stand harsh words from you six days a week, if there was a chance of a kind one on the seventh. But now—now what notice do you take of me?" She began to whimper and to wipe her eyes with a little discolored pocket handkerchief.

"Drop it, woman, drop it!" cried her companion testily. "I want information, not sniveling. She seemed reconciled to go?"

"Yes, she went quiet enough," the girl said with a furtive sob.

"Did you hear my father say anything as to where they were going?"

"I heard him tell the cabman to drive to Waterloo station."

"Nothing more?"

"No."

"Well, if he won't tell you, I will. They have gone down to Hampshire, my lass. Bedsworth is the name of the place, and it is a pleasant little corner near the sea. I want you to go down there as well to-morrow."

"Want me to go?"

"Yes, they need some one who is smart and handy to keep house for them. There is some old woman already, I believe, but she is old and useless. I warrant you wouldn't take long getting things shipshape. My father intends to stay down there some little time with Miss Harston."

"And how about you?" the girl asked, with a quick flash of suspicion in her dark eyes.

"Don't trouble about me. I shall stay behind and mind the business. Some one must be on the spot. I think Cook and Jane and William ought to be able to look after me among them."

"And I won't see you at all?" the girl cried, with a quiver in her voice.

"Oh, yes, you shall. I'll be down from Saturday to Monday every week, and perhaps oftener. If business goes well I may come down and stay for some time. Whether I do or not may depend upon you."

Rebecca Taylforth started and uttered an exclamation of surprise. "How can it depend upon me?" she asked eagerly.

"Well," said Ezra, in a hesitating way, "it may depend upon whether you are a good girl, and do what you are told or not. I am sure that you would do anything at all to serve me, would you not?"

"You know very well that I would, Mister Ezra. When you want anything done you remember it, but if you have no use for me then there is never a kind look on your face or a kind word from your lips. I could stand your harshness. I could stand the blow you gave me, and forgive you for it, from my heart, but oh! it cut me to the very soul to be standing by and waiting while you were making up to another woman. It was more than I can bear."

"Never mind, my girl," said Ezra in a soothing voice. "That's all over and done with. See what I've brought you." He rummaged in his pocket and produced a little parcel of tissue paper, which he handed to her.

It was only a small silver anchor, with Scotch pebbles inlaid in it. The woman's eyes, however, flashed as she looked at it, and she raised it to her lips and kissed it passionately.

"What am I to do down at Bedsworth?" she asked.

"I want you to be Miss Harston's companion. She'll be lonely, and will need some other woman in the house to look after her."

"You are still thinking of her, then! She must have this; she must have that! Everything else is as dirt before her. I'll not serve her—so there! You can knock me down if you like."

"Rebecca," said Ezra slowly, "do you hate Kate Harston?"

"From the bottom of my soul," she answered.

"Well, if you hate her, I tell you that I hate her a thousand times more. You thought that I was fond of her. All that is over now, and you may set your mind at ease."

"Why do you want her so well cared for then?" asked the girl suspiciously.

"I want some one who feels towards her as I do to be by her side. If she were never to come back from Bedsworth it would be nothing to me."

"What makes you look at me so strangely?" she said, shrinking away from his intense gaze.

"Never mind. You go. You will understand many things in time which seem strange to you now. At present if you will do what I ask you will oblige me greatly. Will you go?"

"Yes, I will go."

"There's a good lass. Give us a kiss, my girl. You have the right spirit in you. I'll let you know when the train goes to-morrow, and I will write to my father to expect you. Now, off with you, or you'll have them gossiping downstairs. Good-night!"

"Good-night, Mister Ezra," said the girl, with her hand upon the handle of the library door. "You've made my heart glad this night. I live in hope—ever in hope."

"I wonder what she hopes about," the young merchant said to himself as she closed the door behind her. "Hopes I'll marry her, I suppose. She must be of a very sanguine disposition. A girl like that might be invaluable down at Bedsworth. If we had no other need for her, she would be an excellent spy." He lay for some little time on the couch with bent brow and pursed lips, musing over the possibilities of the future.

While this dialogue had been going on in the library of Eccleston square, Tom Dimsdale was still wending his way homewards with a feeling of weight in his mind and a presentiment of misfortune which overshadowed his whole soul. In vain he assured himself that this disappearance of Kate's was but temporary, and that the rumor of an engagement between her and Ezra was too ridiculous to be believed for a moment. Argue it as he would, the same dead, horrible feeling of impending trouble weighed upon him. Impossible as it was to imagine that Kate was false to him, it was strange that on the very day that this rumor reached his ears she should disappear from London. How bitterly he regretted now that he had allowed himself to be persuaded by John Girdlestone into ceasing to communicate with her. He began to realize that he had been duped, and that all these specious promises as to a future consent to their union had been so many baits to amuse him while the valuable present was slipping away. What could he do now to repair the past? His only course was to wait for the morrow, and see whether the senior partner would appear at the offices. If he did so, the young man was determined to have an understanding with him.

So downcast was Tom that, on arriving at Phillimore Gardens he would have slipped off to his room at once, had he not met his burly father upon the stairs. "Bed!" roared the old man upon hearing his son's proposition. "Nothing of the sort, sir. Come down into the parlor. Your mother has been waiting for you all the evening."

(To be continued.)

Best He Could Do.

"Sir," said the irate parent as he unexpectedly entered the parlor, "what do you mean by kissing my daughter?"

"Excuse me," replied the poor but otherwise honest young man, "but I desired to show my appreciation of your daughter's loveliness, and kisses are the only things I can afford to give her at the present stage of the game."

RAILWAYS FILLING UP OPEN LANDS IN WEST

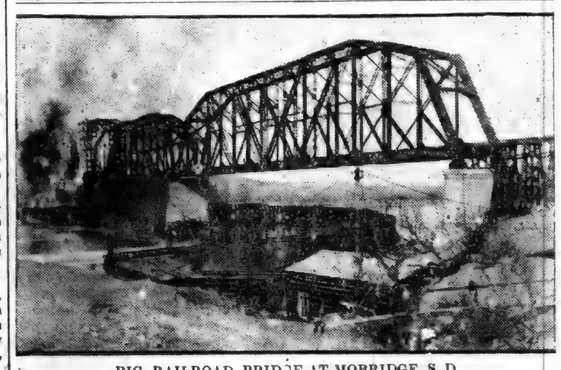
St. Paul Road's Pacific Coast Extension Gives Entrance to Rich New Country.

WHERE THINGS MOVE QUICKLY.

Claims Being Rapidly Taken and Towns Are Building Along Route —Big Railroad Bridge.

Not so many years ago the western borderland of Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota and Nebraska presented a ragged fringe of newly made farms, thrust into what then seemed a boundless, inexhaustible expanse of unoccupied, black soil—prairie lands. Sons of the farmers of that time, needing land, simply moved out ten or twenty miles upon the newly surveyed areas, choosing and occupying homestead claims, almost undisturbed by competing land hunters.

During the '80's, though, something happened. A fierce "land-hunger" replaced this creeping of settlement, this normal expansion. The Dakotas in little more than half a dozen years saw more than 350,000 entrymen settle within their borders, and 100,000 pioneers added to the population of their newly christened towns and villages.



BIG RAILROAD BRIDGE AT MOBRIDGE, S. D.

To the extension of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway's numerous feeders in these States, perhaps more than to any other factor, did this movement owe its existence. It drew to this prairie country not only farmers but thousands of men and women from every known occupation, drew them and made possible their successful occupation and upbuilding of these vast commonwealths as we see them to-day.

The record of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway, in building its Pacific Coast extension, has never been equaled in the matter of time by any similar undertaking. Track has been laid at the rate of five miles per day, and trains over the new transcontinental line will soon be operated from Chicago to Butte, Mont., and to Seattle and Tacoma, Wash., in about a year.

The big bridge of this Pacific Coast extension, the construction of which has attracted attention as a remarkable feat in engineering throughout, is nearing completion, according to information received from Mobridge, S. D., where the structure spans the Missouri river. The bridge is one of the principal connecting links between the main line of the St. Paul Road and the new coast division. The town of Mobridge is expected to be one of the most important on the road. Its name is made of the abbreviation "Mo," meaning Missouri, and "bridge."

Thousands of Homesteads Open.

Nowhere in the United States under like conditions, upon a like solid area of plowable, black loam, in a like space of time, will so vast a number of homeseekers be accommodated, yet a correspondent, having finished a drive of 300 miles or more along the extension between Marmarth, N. D., on the Little Missouri, and the Musselshell River, in the heart of northern Montana, says that there remain within five to twenty miles of this new line to the Pacific Coast thousands of homesteads well worth while to look at, and which will be occupied within the coming twelvemonth.

As a result of successful dry farming during the past eighteen months, on the Beach flats just north of the extension along the Montana-Dakota line, there is a bright town—a side track a year ago. To-day it boasts of improvements of $300,000 for the past year; among these, a 75-barrel roller mill, four elevators, with a capacity of 160,000 bushels, three hardware and implement stores. The last named sold within the year 150 wagons, 60 self-binders and 100 mowers. Everywhere now men are awakening to the fact that where sage brush two to three feet in height grows, densely luxuriant, unirrigated, rye, spelts, and particularly wheat, will grow, if the simple methods of cultivation, now no longer experimental but proven, are employed. These gray-green sage brush uplands are to be the grain fields of the near future.

Montana has an abundance of coal, from lignite to the best steam fuel known. It is doubtful whether any other section of the United States is more plentifully supplied with coal which can be so easily developed and utilized by the settler, as eastern Montana. At the first crossing of the Yellowstone, there is, in plain view of the approach, a black band along the bluff to the north two or three miles in length, ten to twenty feet thick, of solid lignite coal of the finest quality. Never again will Uncle Sam offer such princely domains for the entryman's choice. Throughout this entire country the government surveys will soon be practically complete, and before the end of the year the claim shanty will be everywhere in evidence.

Happiness from Troubles.

Being human, happily or unhappily, we cannot deny the comfort to be found in the reflection that misery never lacks the company it loves. We all have our troubles, and some of us derive much satisfaction from the contemplation of them. Indeed, there are those who are happy only when wretched, but these we believe to be as few in number as they are disagreeable in association. The vast majority of humans are normal and disposed, therefore, in conformity with natural law, to smile when the skies are clear and to grieve under the portent of clouds; hence the ease with which worry takes possession of the mind, colors the disposition and makes a cripple of effort. That causes abound we know and must admit, as we do almost unconsciously the certainty of death, but too little cognizance is taken of the fact that the effect of mere apprehension, which is all that worry really is, may be subjected to simple mental treatment and be overcome.—George Harvey, in North American Review.

Two Cities.

The most northern town on the globe is probably Hammerfest, latitude 70 degrees 39 minutes 14 seconds, off the northwest coast of Norway, a place of some 4,000 inhabitants. In Hammerfest the sun stays for two months above the horizon. The southernmost town in the world is Punta Arenas, on the Strait of Magellan. Punta Arenas is a place of some 10,000 population.

University of Paris.

The doctor's degree in the University of Paris is so entitled as to designate the faculty under which the work was done, as those who do literary work would receive the degree doctor of letters, etc. To obtain the doctor's degree the candidate must possess the lower degree of the corresponding division of work, submit two theses on different questions, reply to questions or objections concerning them, pay a fee of 140 francs and present 100 printed copies of one of his theses to the university. The candidate for the degree doctor of letters must write one thesis in Latin, the other in French. If in the scientific department, the thesis must be on some original investigation; if in theology, the examinations are both oral and written.—School Bulletin.

Suggestions in a Name.

A Scotchman in search of work was recently given employment as a laborer at Cramp's shipyard, Philadelphia. His first job was to carry several heavy planks. After he had been at it for about two hours he went to the foreman and said:

"Did ah tell you ma name when I started to work?"

"Yes," replied the foreman, "you said it was Tomson."

"Oh, then it's a' right," said the Scot, as he looked toward the pile of planks he had yet to carry. "Ah was jist a-wunnerin' if you thocht ah said it was Samson."

Prohibition Column.

Abraham Lincoln never closed his eyes to the business of drunkenness. In 1854-5, when there was a prohibitory amendment before the Illinois Legislature, Mr. Lincoln said: "This legalized liquor traffic, as carried on in the saloons and grog shops, is the tragedy of civilization. Good citizenship demands and requires that what is evil should not only be detected and defeated, but destroyed. The saloon (he continues) has proved itself to be the greatest foe, the most blighting curse, of our modern civilization."

But few men today have given a more severe arraignment than this given by Lincoln more than a half century ago. He was not afraid to champion the cause of Prohibition.

FRED B. LEIGHTY, Editor.

He was not afraid to speak against the traffic of rum. He acted upon the principle, as he said, that law is for the protection, conservation and extension of right things, and not for the protection of evil and wrong-doing. This is the judicial attitude of some of our best judges at this very time. Thank God for men like Judge Artman.

When President Lincoln signed the Internal Revenue Bill, in 1862, he did so on the basis only of a war measure, and that under protest, being assured as he was that the license section should be repealed when the war was over. It was the assassination of Abraham Lincoln that prevented this being done in the time of his executive rule.

Although the years of that terrible war were years of most intense excitement for him, his conscience never slept. He never lost sight of this gigantic evil through all the trying experiences of his public career. As proof I offer you his words the day before his assassination, when he said to his friend Mr. Merwin, in this remarkable language:

"After Reconstruction the next great question will be the overthrow of the Liquor Traffic."

Mr. Lincoln's idea of settling a question was to overthrow the business giving rise to the question.

And although the traffic is still here, there are the multitudes who see or begin to see that nothing short of a complete divorcement of the license system from this liquor business can stay the ravages of its poisonous work and stop the progress of such a curse.

The hand-writing doth now appear.

What Bryan Said--and Did Not Say

William Jennings Bryan, perpetual Democrat candidate for President, spent last Sunday and Monday in Indianapolis. He talked, and talked, and talked. He talked to the Y. M. C. WHAT HE TALKED ABOUT

"The Prince of Peace," religion, morals, missions, Christianity, oratory churches, square deal, the Republican party, money, gold, silver, tarriff, railroads, trusts, the Philippine Islands, monopolies, imperialism, Roosevelt, Taft, injunction, labor, banks, grafters, panic, Wall street, watered stocks aristocrats, farmers, laboring men, magnates, taxes, wages, history, prophesy, and HIMSELF.

THIS IS WHAT HE SAID ON THE TEMPERANCE QUESTION

Baron Justus von Liebig, in his "Chemische Briefe," gives the following pertinent estimate: "It is now possible to demonstrate with mathematical certainty that, so far as enriching the blood is concerned, the flour that will lie on the point of a knife is better than four measures of the best Bavarian beer; and that anybody who drinks a measure of beer daily would thus imbibe in one year about as much nourishment as is contained in one pound of bread."

OREGON TIMBER EXHAUSTLESS.

Single Trees Which Equal Ten Acres of Eastern Timber Land.

The greatest timber belt in the world is to be found in western Oregon and in Washington, says William Macleod Raine in Pearson's. According to government reports Oregon has about 385,000,000,000 feet of standing timber, mostly fir, cedar, hemlock, spruce and larch. As there is now cut in the State about a billion feet annually, there is still enough timber left to last for several hundred years at the same rate of cutting, providing sufficient and much-needed precautions are taken for the elimination of forest fires. In the timber lands of the Eastern States a yield of 6,000 feet of first-class timber is a good average, but in the lavish northwest 500,000 feet to the acre is not unusual. A fir tree 465 feet high and 220 feet to the first limb was recently cut down; this tree scaled 90,245 feet of lumber, as much as ten acres of average eastern timber. From the northern Pacific ports timbers a hundred feet long and two feet square are constantly being shipped, and to supply this demand for large timbers there is but one possible source in the world.

For ship building, masts, bridge timbers, car sills and other needs demanding a combination of great length, strength, durability and lightness the Oregon fir is unrivalled. Government tests show that under pressure it has nearly twice the strength of oak and three times that of pine. From each of the five continents the demand for it is continually increasing, because of the many points in its favor.

Rather Old Calf.

Some years ago the writer attended a revival meeting held in Eagle Hall, Concord, under the direction of Elder John Hook, of blessed memory. He had as an assistant Elder Marsin Van Buren Luts, a converted gambler and drunkard.

Elder Luts was of an extremely nervous disposition and much in earnest in his appeals to sinners to quit sinning, as he had been a chief of sinners and knew how it was himself. At times he would get so excited that he would jump up and down, like a mad boy, on the platform.

He was preaching a sermon in one of these revival meetings on "The Parable of the Prodigal Son." When he came to the account of the killing of the fatted calf, he endeavored to heighten the interest of his hearers by the following touch:

"Not A calf, my brethren, but THE calf, the old, familiar calf that had been for years and years in the family." The prodigal son must have had some tough veal set before him.—Boston Herald.

Peculiar Marriage Ceremony.

With the Jowrans of India marriage is an affair of much importance. Should the parents object to the lover's advances, his friends rally, and abduct the girl. If the consent of the parents is obtained, three posts are planted, and between them the bride and bridegroom, with their intimate friends, assemble, and proceed to get intoxicated on a peculiar toddy. The young couple sit together, and receive frequent douches of turmeric oil, from gourds in the hands of wedding guests. Presents of all kinds, to propitiate the demons, are showered upon the contracting parties, and the close of the feast finds the whole set in a state of bacchanalian bliss. After this the parties are man and wife.

As to Dreams.

"We all dream dreams," said Mr. Biltops, "and I suppose if we could look into our neighbor's heart, be that neighbor man or woman, we might find there cherished aspirations and fancies fantastically at variance with the said neighbor's conventional demeanor and orderly life.

"A man I know, energetic, capable, effective, successful and in all his life notably systematic, tells me that if he could do as he would like to do he would be a tramp. No less a person than Mrs. Biltops, paragon of domesticity and devotion, confides to me that she always wanted to be an actress. Let us be grateful that actually she chose to play her charming part on the Biltop household stage."

A High-Water Philosopher.

All around surged the angry flood.

On the roof of the house sat the owner, surrounded by his chickens.

"What do you want?" he demanded.

"I have come to rescue you," said the man in the rowboat.

"Do I look as if I was wantin' to be rescued?"

"But, man alive, the water is up to the eaves of your house! It will float away with you the first thing you know."

"The house? No, it won't. There's a trust deed on it that'll hold it down all right."

The man in the boat hesitated.

"You must be crazy," he said. "Do you intend to stay here?"

"Looks like it, doesn't it?"

"It may be a week before you get away from here."

"That's right."

"Well, can't I do anything for you?"

The owner of the premises took a chew of tobacco and reflected.

"Yes," he said, looking thoughtfully at the chickens. "You might bring me a hatchet, and a gasoline stove, and some salt, and a stew pan. I can get the water myself. Too bad about that terrible drouth in the east, ain't it?"

Sheridan was continually dunned for money. On one occasion he was out walking when he met his tailor, who was riding horseback, and whom he vainly attempted to avoid. Bismarck's Love of Authority.

At nine p. m. we took tea with the king. I was seated opposite him, when a footman came and whispered in my ear that Bismarck desired to see me. Great embarrassment! Puckler having told me I might leave the table, I did so. The king inquired what was the matter, and permitted me to go. Bismarck had nothing of particular importance to tell me, and I suspect that he only wanted to show that he had the right to send for his employes even when they were with the king.—From the Hatsfeldt Letters.

There is a policeman's college in St. Petersburg to train applicants for the force. There is a museum combined with the school where the pupils make themselves familiar with the tools of criminals—jimmies, drills, chisels and contrivances for robbing collection boxes, a special field of Russian thieves. The Russian passport system is studied in detail. The duties of the dvorniks, a sort of assistant police, are taught. They keep watch on the residences, report on the habits of tenants, their visitors, examine the papers of newcomers and direct them to report themselves at the police station. The members of such a clever and complicated system need careful instruction.

Where Men Bungle.

Woman likes to play the "go between" where a man and a maid are concerned. She will endure personal discomfort, risk snapping friendship's ties, and plot and scheme and plunge up to her ears in morasses of mendacity just to bring about an understanding between some particular he and she whom she imagines to be suited in some way to each other. Men bungle this sort of thing.—Lady's Pictorial.

The amount was for twelve different claimants. In addition costs amounting to $151 were paid.—Ex.

Knew Her Superiority.

One of Washington's high school principals relates an incident in connection with last commencement day. A clever girl had taken one of the principal prizes. Her friends crowded about her to offer congratulations. "Weren't you awfully afraid you wouldn't get it, Hattie," asked one, "when there were so many contestants?" "Oh, no!" cheerily exclaimed Hattie. "Because I knew that when it came to English composition I had 'em all skinned."

Do Not Crowd the Season.

The first warm days of spring bring with them a desire to get out and enjoy the exhilarating air and sunshine. Children that have been housed up all winter are brought out and you wonder where they all come from. The heavy winter clothing is thrown aside and many shed their flannels. Then a cold wave comes and people say that grip is epidemic. Colds at this season are more dangerous than in mid winter, as there is much more danger of pneumonia. Take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, however; and you will have nothing to fear. It always cures, and we have never known a cold to result in pneumonia when it was used. It is pleasant and safe to take. Children like it. For sale by H Milliman, St. Joe; F. R. Bowman, Spencerville.

After suffering for seven years, this woman was restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Read her letter.

Mrs. Sallie French, of Paucaunla, Ind. Ter., writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"I had female troubles for seven years—was all run-down, and so nervous I could not do anything. The doctors treated me for different troubles but did me no good. While in this condition I wrote to Mrs. Pinkham for advice and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I am now strong and well."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration. Why don't you try it?

Don't hesitate to write to Mrs. Pinkham if there is anything about your sickness you do not understand. She will treat your letter in confidence and advise you free. No woman ever regretted writing her, and because of her vast experience she has helped thousands. Address, Lynn, Mass.

CHILDREN TORTURED.

Girl Had Running Sores from Eczema—Boy Tortured by Poison Oak—Both Cured by Cuticura.

"Last year, after having my little girl treated by a very prominent physician for an obstinate case of eczema, I resorted to the Cuticura Remedies, and was so well pleased with the almost instantaneous relief afforded that we discarded the physician's prescription and relied entirely on the Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, and Cuticura Pills. When we commenced with the Cuticura Remedies her feet and limbs were covered with running sores. In about six weeks we had her completely well, and there has been no recurrence of the trouble.

"In July of this year a little boy in our family poisoned his hands and arms with poison oak, and in twenty-four hours his hands and arms were a mass of torturing sores. We used only the Cuticura Remedies, and in about three weeks his hands and arms healed up. Mrs. Lizzie Vincent Thomas, Fairmont, Walden's Ridge, Tenn., Oct. 13, 1905."

His Winter Wheat Crop Realised $35 Per Acre—His Oats $37 Per Acre in Southern Alberta.

Coaldale, Alta., Nov. 19th, 1907

Sir—I beg to say that this year we had 349 acres of grain, consisting of 197 acres of spring wheat and 152 acres of oats. The average yield of wheat was 38 bushels per acre and oats 74 bushels. We were offered $1.00 per bushel for wheat and 50 cents for oats, making the acre values for the two crops $38.00 and $37.00, respectively.

We also had 50 tons of hay worth $13.00 per ton, and 500 bushels of potatoes, worth 60 cents per bushel, the latter off 2½ acres of ground.

Our best yields this year were 107 acres of wheat, making 41 bushels per acre at $1.00 per bushel, would be $41.00 per acre; 47 acres of oats, yielding 95 bushels per acre were sold for 50 cents per bushel. Proceeds $47.00 per acre.

I might add that 50 acres of our oats were "stubbled in."

During the spring of 1906 we hired about 300 acres broken by steam. We put in and harvested 55 acres of grain last year, but did the remainder of our breaking, worked up the ground and seeded this year's entire crop; put in 7 acres of alfalfa, and 5 acres of garden potatoes, trees, etc., all with one four-horse team. During harvest we hired other teams; but, aside from this and part of the breaking, the one team did the work of raising practically 19,000 bushels of grain, worth $12,000.

Yours truly,
W. H. PAWSON, JR.

Winter Wheat 25 to 30 Bushels to The Acre in Southern Alberta.

Warner, Alta., Jan. 9th, 1908.

Dear Sir—This is the first year of farming in this settlement. Mr. A. L. Warner raised twenty-five hundred and fifteen bushels of fine winter wheat on one hundred acres of breaking, and Tenny Brothers had sixty acres that went thirty bushels per acre. The winter wheat that is in this year looks fine.

Spring wheat here went thirty bushels per acre; oats, fifty to eighty; barley, fifty, and flax ten to fifteen on sod.

The settlers here are all well pleased with the country. The stock have not required any feed except the grass up to this date and are all fat.

Yours truly,
F. S. LEFFINGWELL.

THE GREAT CHANGE.

By Henry F. Cope.

"If a man die, shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come."—Job 14:14.

We often sigh for a present immortality, a life without end in this world, without thinking how weary and empty such a life would be, how barren existence would seem if it held no mystery, if it were all spread out before us and a thousand years hence known as well as to-day.

Supposing we knew absolutely that existence held nothing higher for us and that from this life of our present limitations there was no escape, how dark would be our despair, how hopeless our lot. The world would be our prison and freedom from death our galling bondage.

When we curse death, when we cry out against the pain and parting, we forget how that mysterious door beyond which none of us has looked has yet opened out to us another world. The fact that each life has limits has set in our hearts the illimitable life; our mortality has endowed us with the spirit of glad immortality.

This world would be as a room without doors or windows but for those mysterious exits. Through them pass our friends, not their forms or faces, but the real men and women, that which we have seen behind form and face, the being, the person, the friend. They are not visibly with us, and yet we know that somewhere they must be, that without our walls there is life and love.

So death that seems to limit our lives has but seemed to enlarge them. It has broken up with its sharp blows the soil of our hearts and caused imagination to sow her seeds and nurture her hopes until all the fair heritage of our visions of paradise, our aspirations after the larger and higher life have blossomed within.

The pictures we have painted wherewith to adorn our hearts left desolate by the passing of loved ones, the thoughts of their possible felicitudes, have had real and practical effects. An ideal life before us leads us to strain after its ideals now; the possibility of a spiritual existence emphasizes the importance of the spiritual to-day.

One does not have to dream of a heaven of sensuous bliss, one does not have to postpone the realization of ideal condition to some future city in order to catch the real values of the thought of a further, higher stage of being. The child may find pleasure in harps and robes and crowns; our need is the sense of the reality of this extension of life.

There are none living in any full sense of life and thought who have not pondered on this life that lies beyond the walls and windows of our world; at times we all have seemed to hear voices that came from that beyond, while in our hearts we cherish friendships and think of the friends as waiting somewhere.

How wonderfully the grave binds the living together. How many a family breach, how many a broken friendship has been healed by some hand that, just removed to the beyond, seemed to reach out from it and bring severed ones together again. How wonderfully has death made us tender to the living.

Ever that spirit world possess about us peopled with dim, shadowy forms, seen only by the spirit, yet wonderfully shaping our everyday lives. Ever that choir invisible sings to the souls of men. The good and great of long ago or of our own hearthsides, being dead, speak louder than could the lips of the living.

Death has set these voices free, and now they speak to us of the great change that shall set the divine within us free and shall shake off the imprisoning dust. And so men go on to the grave, not stoically determined to bear the blow of the gods, but highly resolved to discover and live the larger life beyond the change.

These are not the dreams with which we soothe and delude ourselves when confronted with the blankness of death; these are the convictions deep graven in humanity universally. This sense of the larger life in which the soul goes on to full fruition makes the present seeding, budding, pruning its wintry blasts and summer's heat all worth while because they are not for a day and death, but for the life that is forever.

GRUMBLERS NEVER POPULAR.

By Rev. George Downing Sparks.

Beware of dogs.—Phillippians 3:2.

The Jews, as can be seen by numerous references to the Bible, did not like dogs. The ancient Greeks shared this abhorrence, though Homer is not unjust to these faithful companions of man, as can be seen in his exquisite picture of a dog's devotion to his absent master in the seventeenth book of the Odyssey.

St. Paul is pouring the vitriol of his sarcasm upon those who would reduce Christianity to the limits of an exclusive sect and we are doing no violence to the thought of the apostle when we translate "Beware of dogs" to "Beware of grumblers." Are grumbling and growling our dominant characteristics?

If they are then let us not be surprised if we find ourselves unpopular. Our friends are only obeying the sound advice of St. Paul. Because—and it is in all charity—grumblers are, if possible, to be severely let alone. It is absolutely necessary for our own peace of mind that we escape from the atmosphere of their querulous complainings. No one can associate with those who are chronic grumblers, chronic faultfinders, chronic sneerers and belittlers of other men and women without acquiring some of their unhappy characteristics. We can see this to perfection in Sheridan's wonderful comedy of "The School for Scandal." A young girl from the country quickly sinking to the level of My Lady Sneerwell or My Lady Backbite, a truly choice collection of growlers who bark, snap and yelp against the reputation of every one of their neighbors.

What will save us from becoming chronic grumblers? Surely we have the answer in the prayer of the Psalmist:

"Create in me a clean heart and renew a right spirit within me." Change my disposition, O God, so that I shall not grieve and wound my friends by sneers, innuendoes and petty cavillings, and grant that as long as I live I may never be a growling and snarling dog, but a human soul that believes in sympathy, in kindness and in following closely the footsteps of the Carpenter of Nazareth.

One of the horrible ways of killing the early Christians was to dress them in the skins of wild animals and then set a pack of savage dogs upon them to tear them in pieces. Those hard old Romans loved to behold human suffering in every conceivable form, and a lot of helpless men and women worried to death on the sands of the arena was a rare spectacle to the mob of the Imperial City, and also formed no doubt many a jest to their masters as they rolled home in their chariots along the Appian Way. And yet are we to-day very different in cruelty when we grumble and snarl all day long, poisoning the lives of those about us, breaking their hearts by our ill humor and driving them at last to despair by our chronic nagging?

SHORT METER SERMONS.

Talking about the road to heaven is not the same as walking in it.

Perfection is a good deal more than the power of picking faults in other people.

You may know by its warmth and cheer whether a man's light comes from heaven.

It never has been explained why the Sunday drizzle looks wetter than a Monday downpour.

Some Christians faithfully obey the injunction to watch; but they wear out their eyes watching for faults in their neighbors.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't be afraid of duty. The fearful are always faithless.

Don't yield to little temptations even. It takes a clean heart to keep a clear head.

Don't seek prominence in church work. The love of greatness generally prevents a desire for goodness.

Don't plead lack of time for religious duties. The man who makes such excuse is inspired by the devil.

Don't praise God with your lips, unless your praise springs from your heart. The man who does so is a liar in the sight of the Almighty.

HYMNS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

Harvest Home.

Come, ye thankful people, come,
Raise the song of harvest home!
All is safely gathered in,
Ere the winter storms begin;
God, our Maker, doth provide
For our wants to be supplied;
Come to God's own temple, come,
Raise the song of harvest home.

We ourselves are God's own field,
Fruit unto his praise to yield;
Wheat and tares together sown
Unto joy or sorrow grown;
First the blade, and then the ear;
Then the full corn shall appear;
Lord of harvest! grant that we
Wholesome grain and pure may be.

For the Lord our God shall come,
And shall take his harvest home;
From his field shall purge away
All that doth offend that day;
Give his angels charge at last
In the fire the tares to cast;
But the fruitful ears to store
In his garner evermore.

Eau de Cologne.

It is stated in a foreign contemporary that the chief condition to the achievement of a perfect preparation of eau de cologne is prolonged storage. The production of this world famous article in its original home in Cologne is carried on in the simplest manner. The ethereal oils are first mixed with the wine spirits, and the mixture, after two months' digestion, is distilled at gentle heat. The preparation is then placed in kegs and removed to the cellar, where it lies five or six years, and only then is placed on the market.

HER GOOD FORTUNE.

After Years Spent in Vain Effort.

Mrs. Mary E. H. Rouse, of Cambridge, N. Y., says: "Five years ago I had a bad fall and it affected my kidneys. Severe pains in my back and hips became constant, and sharp twinges followed any exertion. The kidney secretions were badly disordered. I lost flesh and grew too weak to work. Though constantly using medicine I despaired of being cured until I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. Then relief came quickly, and in a short time I was completely cured. I am now in excellent health."

Sustaining His Reputation.

A story is told of the Prince de Conti, whose reputation for cruelty stood high. He was going to mass with some ladies when his bailiff asked for instructions concerning a poacher who had just been caught on the grounds.

"Give him 100 stripes and imprison him in a dungeon for two years," was the answer.

One lady, horror stricken, went to the bailiff afterward, but he only laughed in her face.

"The prince only said that to keep up his reputation. His royal highness came to me directly after mass and begged me to see that the poor wretch was only sent away from the neighborhood for two months and that his family was well looked after during his absence."

Men, Women and Adjectives.

Certain adjectives are reserved for men and others for women. A man is never called "beautiful." Along with "pretty" and "lovely" that adjective has become the property of women and children alone. "Handsome" and the weak "good looking" are the only two adjectives of the kind common to either sex. Even "belle" has no real masculine correlative in English, since "beau" came to signify something other than personal looks. It is singular that "handsome" should have become the word for a strikingly good-looking person, since its literal meaning is handy, dexterous. But "pretty" likewise comes from the Anglo-Saxon word meaning "sly."

OLD SURGEON

Found Coffee Caused Hands to Tremble.

The surgeon's duties require clear judgment and a steady hand. A slip or an unnecessary incision may do irreparable damage to the patient.

When he found that coffee drinking caused his hands to tremble, an Illinois surgeon conscientiously gave it up and this is his story.

"For years I was a coffee drinker until my nervous system was nearly broken down, my hands trembled so I could hardly write, and insomnia tortured me at night.

"Besides, how could I safely perform operations with unsteady hands, using knives and instruments of precision? When I saw plainly the bad effects of coffee, I decided to stop it, and three years ago I prepared some Postum, of which I had received a sample.

"The first cupful surprised me. It was mild, soothing, delicious. At this time I gave some Postum to a friend who was in a similar condition to mine, from the use of coffee.

"A few days after, I met him and he was full of praise for Postum, declaring he would never return to coffee but stick to Postum. We then ordered a full supply and within a short time my nervousness and consequent trembling, as well as insomnia, disappeared, blood circulation became normal, no dizziness nor heat flashes.

"My friend became a Postum enthusiast, his whole family using it exclusively.

"It would be the fault of the one who brewed the Postum, if it did not taste good when served.

"The best food may be spoiled if not properly made. Postum should be boiled according to directions on the pkg. When it is all right, anyone can rely on it. It ought to become the national drink." "There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Says Pe-ru-na is a Valuable Nerve and Blood Remedy.

MISS BESSIE FARRELL

MISS BESSIE FARRELL, 1011 Third Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., is President of the Young People's Christian Temperance Association. She writes:

"Peruna is certainly a valuable nerve and blood remedy, calculated to build up the broken-down health of worn-out women. I have found by personal experience that it acts as a wonderful restorer of lost strength, assisting the stomach to assimilate and digest the food, and building up worn-out tissues. In my work I have had occasion to recommend it freely, especially to women.

"I know of nothing which is better to build up the strength of a young mother, in fact all the ailments peculiar to women, so I am pleased to give it my hearty endorsement."

Dr. Hartman has prescribed Peruna for many thousand women, and he never fails to receive a multitude of letters like the above, thanking him for the wonderful benefits received.

ored lace, but it will be found charming for silk and wool materials and for almost everything seasonable. It is peculiarly well adapted to the entire gown, for which voile, henrietta cloth wool batiste and the like are desirable, while it also suits the odd blouse admirably well, and utilized in this way is admirable both for the plain and plaid taffetas, and also for the thinner and lighter embroidered nets and chiffons that are so much in vogue. The little vest portion is a feature and an attractive one and sleeves can be made longer or shorter as liked. The waist is made with a fitted lining, which is closed at the center front, and itself consists of fronts, back, chemisette and vest portions.

Five Gored Skirt.

There is no skirt better liked or more generally in demand than the simple five-gored one. It is always graceful, it is very generally becoming, and with-al it involves very little trouble in the making. Just now it is especially well liked for wear beneath the long and half long coats that are so fashionable. This one is made of one of the new

of the happy homes of to-day is a vast fund of information as to the best methods of promoting health and happiness and right living and knowledge of the world's best products.

Products of actual excellence and reasonable claims truthfully presented and which have attained to world-wide acceptance through the approval of the Well-Informed of the World; not of individuals only, but of the many who have the happy faculty of selecting and obtaining the best the world affords.

One of the products of that class, of known component parts, an Ethical remedy, approved by physicians and commended by the Well-Informed of the World as a valuable and wholesome family laxative is the well-known Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna. To get its beneficial effects always buy the genuine, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., only, and for sale by all leading druggists.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Costly Target Practice.

A single big gun of the many now being put in place for the protection of seacoasts costs a large sum. Some interesting figures on this subject may be quoted on the authority of an ordnance expert at Washington, says the Philadelphia Record.

A 12-inch breech-loading rifle, with its disappearing carriage, costs $141,000; a 10-inch breech-loader, $99,250, and an 8-inch, $72,000. The figures show that modern high-powered guns cost great sums, and the cost of firing them is proportionately large.

The report of experts who have inspected these guns and the devices for securing an accurate aim, shows that great saving is effected by modern range-firing and position-finding devices.

The demoralizing effect of a hit as compared to a miss cannot, it is said, be reduced to a money value, but it costs big money to shoot a big gun and then miss the mark. For example there may be cited the case of the 12-inch gun. To miss the mark is to simply throw away $561.70. With the 10-inch gun the loss is $322.40, and with the 8-inch rifle it is $164.65.

There's a gunning wild animal in this town which has been doing some deadly work in the past. The general appearance of this strange animal and where its favorite winter haunt is, is not generally known, but enough facts are known to give a clue as to its size and how it is fed. It comes out at night as does an owl, to feed, but it goes blind in the day time. In size it is larger than a dog, fox or wolf, so it must be a tiger. It seems to be not the least bit alarmed of any approaching danger, because it knows the people are blind also. This place would be a splendid opening for an optician or one of Pinkerton's "best." If Uncle Sam gets a shot at this "blind tiger" he will get its hide and tan it, too.

SPOKANE, WASH.,
FEB. 21, 1908.

EDITOR NEWS,—

Two years ago when we wrote to you it was rather sad for us as Mrs. Hannen had been stricken with paralysis, sister and brother Geary taken from us, and a little later our boy had a leg broken. He was in the hospital eight months; had three operations performed on it before he was discharged from the hospital. But he is o. k. now and is working in an electrical shop for the W. W. P. Electrical Railway & Light Co. He has almost completed a course in the Scranton Corres. School on electricity and engineering and intends to take out another course on the same subject, the highest there is in this art. Mrs. Hannen is getting well again. She is able to be afound and do light work.

We wish we could visit the Big 4 and get a supply of goods. We pay thirty cents per gallon for coal oil in five gallon cans, less than five gallons is thirty-five cents per gallon, ham and bacon, twenty cents; eggs, fifty cents; butter, forty cents and most every thing else is away up in "G." We are beginning to like it pretty well in Washington. It is a fine fruit country. This is also a great wheat country, but time and space is too limited to give details in the mode of caring for these great industries.

We receive the NEWS pretty regular occasionally one goes astray in Uncle Sam's mails. We have noted many deaths recorded among our old friends at Harlan, Mrs. Henry Boulton, Mrs. Chas. Reichelderfer and Mrs. John Stopher. We have spent many pleasant hours in Mrs Boulton's home, and the Stopher's were noted for their musical ability, John and Joseph Stopher and your correspondent were charter members of the first band organized at Harlan. Later Sylvester Stopher was a valuable addition.

With our love and best wishes to all our old acquaintances, we remain

Respectfully Yours in F L & T,

An Open Letter

To Indiana Democrats. Honorable Charles G. Conn of Elkhart, Outlines His Views on the Gubernatorial Nomination.

Elkhart, Indiana, March 3, 1908.

TO INDIANA DEMOCRATS:

It must be apparent to thinking Democrats that the welfare of our party in this state has been sadly neglected by those in charge of its affairs during the last twelve years, or there would not have been such a deplorable democratic decadence. As democrats we have been taught that our party is pledged to protect the masses, the common people, from the predatory and selfish greed of class legislation, also from the persistent attempts of corporate wealth to control elections in order to advance their own interests and defeat the ends of justice. That this has not been done needs no explanation—the records of the elections show for themselves. That those who have dominated Democratic State affairs either have been wofully incompetent or wilfully neglectful cannot successfully be disputed. That the Democratic party in Indiana has deteriorated both in numbers and influence in consequence of this failure to meet the demands of voters, and to keep in touch with Democratic principles also is beyond question or argument. The object in thus referring to the Democratic demoralization is to arouse party adherents to a keener sense of duty, and to cause them reorganize and make ready to carry the November election. No allusion is intended or reference made to any candidate or person not directly connected With the management of the party.

Presumably the Democratic party is a party of the people—to be controlled by them in the interests of clean government and fair dealing to all concerned The Democratic party is supposed to be a refuge for voters, in need of political protection from all forms of public evil. To be beneficial, its affairs should be purged of corporate control, also of such influences as will tend to lower the standard of public evil. In short, the Democratic party no longer promotes public welfare, or serves the interests of the masses when it becomes an instrument of wrong doing in any form, shape, manner or degree, or when it advocates false theories and ceases to be conservative.

In order to ascertain more clearly that the Democratic party in this State has degenerated and become unpopular with the class of voters which should rally to its standard, and who should win its victories at the polls, let us examine the polls, let us examine the records of the elections since the inauguration of Gov. Thomas A. Hendricks.

Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks, Democratic candidate for Governor, was elected by a plurality of 1,148. Gov. Hendricks was a lawyer and a statesman.

Hon. James B Williams, Democratic candidate for Governor, was elected in 1876 by a plurality of 5,139. Governor Williams was a farmer. Hon. Isaac P. Gray, merchant lawyer, acted as Governor during the years 1880-1881, vice-Governor Williams, deceased.

Hon. Albert G. Porter, Republican candidate for Governor, was elected in 1880 by a plurality of 6,593. Governor Porter was a lawyer.

Hon. Isaac P. Gray, Democratic candidate for Governor, was elected in 1884 by a plurality of 7,392. Governor Gray was both a merchant and a lawyer. He did not begin the practice of law until late in life.

Hon. Alvin P. Hovey, Republican candidate for Governor, was elected in 1888 by a plurality of 2,300. Governor Hovey was a gallant soldier of the civil war and a lawyer by profession. The latter part of his term was served by Hon. Ira P. Chase, Lieut.-Governor, and a minister by profession.

Hon. Claude Matthews, Democratic candidate for Governor, was elected in 1892 by a plurality of 6,976. Governor Matthews was a farmer and stock raiser Up to this time Indiana was safely in the Democratic columns, notwithstanding the fact that the period above when nearly every other Northern State was returning large Republican majorities. Now comes the period of the Democratic decadence. Mark the results.

Hon. James A. Mount, Republican candidate for Governor was elected in 1896 by a plurality of 27,077, a Republican gain of nearly 39,000. Governor Mount was a farmer. His defeated Democratic opponent was a lawyer.

Hon. Winfield T. Durbin, Republican candidate for Governor was elected in 1900 by a plurality of 25,163. Governor Durbin was a manufacturer and a banker. His defeated Democratic opponent was a lawyer.

Hon. J. Frank Hanly, Republican candidate for Governor was elected in 1904 by a plurality of 84,364, a Republican gain over the previous election of 39,201 Governor Hanly is a lawyer. His defeated Democratic opponent was a lawyer.

The results of the above elections show conclusively that Democratic voters do not want lawyer Gubernatorial candidates, also that the next candidate for Governor must command other essentials of political strength than an ability to make a glib stump speech, or he will hopeleasly be defeated. Judging from the returns of the last State election the the Democratic party must change about 43,000 votes to be victorious at the coming November polls. That means a thorough party organization, a reuniting of party adherents on a basis of perfect harmony, the rallying of all voters who naturally would support Democratic principles, and a return to a strict application of conservative Democratic methods. The general upbuilding of the Democratic party cannot be done by a campaign of denunciation, villification and brag. New life, renewed vigor and moral strength cannot be injected into the campaign by ordinary methods. Stump speaking is only one factor of the many which should be employed to again render the party popular. The work of Democratic reorganization cannot be accomplished by promises of party reform. Democratic needs demand a beginning of the regeneration now, or voters will not believe that the reconstruction era will be a part and parcel of the coming campaign. Past Democratic records plainly indicate that political pledges no longer swell ballot boxes with Democratic votes. There must be more conservatism manifested and a greater effort made to look after the needs of the masses before success can be achieved at the polls.

Let us see why voters will not now accept political promises, pledges, denunciations, inuendo and similar means of campaigning as bona fide evidences of sincerity. Nothing is cheaper or more available than words, and in no calling is there less real honesty and uprightness than in politics. This seems a severe criticism, but follow up the careers of most politicians and it will practically be found correct. Politics is regarded by many of its followers as a means of reaching the public purse. When once a politician begins to feed on public pap it requires a struggle to unloose him. That condition ought not exist. Every candidate and every official should be honest with himself and considerate enough of public welfare to devote all his time, ability and energies to the duties of his office and to not regard it as any means of obtaining a living. That would mean the sacrificing of personal ambitions, the putting aside of class demands and the prompt and final rejection of offers and importunities from private interests. It would further mean the upholding of right and the abolition of wrong, regardless of consequences to self or to those concerned in wrong doing. It also would require the application of business principles to all affairs in official circles.

Governments of any form are nothing more nor less than institutions in which the forces of system, economy, conservatism, discipline and honesty should be made to rule. They should be conducted in the same capable and efficient manner in which the affairs of our great business concerns are controlled, and there should

FACTS ABOUT : : : : : : THE CENSUS.

The thirteenth census of the United States will be taken on April 15, 1910. Heretofore it has been taken on June 1, but the change has been made on the suggestion of Director North, who believes that the earlier date will yield much more accurate results. So many people, especially in the large cities, go to the sea shore or mountain resorts before June 1 that enumerators are greatly handicapped in their efforts to obtain the desired information.

For the first time in the history of the country the work will be in charge of a permanent bureau which was established five years ago, its advocates claiming that it would save time and money. Director North is confident that the results will amply justify these claims, inasmuch as the skeleton organization thus maintained will have all the preliminary arrangements completed before the big rush begins.

It is estimated that the census will cost the government about .155 per capita and require an army of nearly 70,000 people, including 330 supervisors, 3,500 clerks and 65,000 enumerators. The total cost will approximate $14,000,000.

The thirteenth census will be restricted to inquiries relating to population, agriculture, manufactures, and mines and quarries. It is provided in the bill that there shall be a census of agriculture in 1915, and once every ten years thereafter, which shall show the acreage of the principal crops, and the number and value of domestic animals on the farms and ranges of the country.

It is proposed that in 1911 a sum not to exceed $30,000 shall be expended to ascertain the feasibility of securing information required for making comparisons between the number of domestic animals and the acreage of the principal crops on the same farms in succeeding years, the returns on which the comparisions are based to include for any county at least 70 per cent of the acreage of the farms in such county.

The constitution of the United States requires an enumeration once in ten years as a basis for the apportionment of representatives in Congress. The modern American census, which collects statistics relating to every important feature of national development, is the outgrowth of that requirement. Beginning with six simple questions relating to population, the amount and scope of the information secured were steadily increased until it became too extensive to be tabulated by hand.

Hudson River Tunnel Opened.

The first fully equipped train bearing passengers to pass under the Hudson river made the trip from Fourteenth street, New York City, to Hoboken, N. J. The party consisted of about fifty people, mainly railroad officials, bankers and newspaper men. The trip from station to station occupied a little over five minutes, and at the conclusion of the journey President McAdoo announced that the tunnel would be opened for general traffic on Feb. 25. The cars and general equipment show a high degree of development in the way of appliances for securing comfort and safety. The rolling stock is fireproof from trucks to roof, the doors are operated by pneumatic power and an automatic book system makes a collision of telescoping of trains almost an impossibility. Thorough ventilation is secured by an ingenious system which compels each train to act as a pistol, drawing the atmosphere after it, thus keeping a constant current through the tunnel without the aid of expensive fans.

$97,000,000 in Certificates.

According to a statement prepared by President Alexander Gilbert of the New York Clearing House Association for publication in Appleton's Magazine from Oct. 22 to the close of December, 1907, the association issued certificates to the amount of $97,000,000. These were not all in use, however, at any one time, and Mr. Gilbert places the amount actually utilized by the banks to effect their exchanges at $74,000,000. The retirement of these certificates has been rapid and the amount now outstanding is much below the above figures. The issuance of these certificates, Mr. Gilbert says, furnishes the best object lesson of an emergency currency, one that is perfectly secure and which can be put into effect without any complicated bank machinery.

Thousands Return to Work.

From all parts of the country come reports of the resumption of operations by manufacturing establishments which have been shut down or the increase of force by those which have been running under low headway. In Chicago thousands of men have returned to work at the mills of the Illinois Steel Company. At Lorain, Ohio, the National Tube Company has increased its force by between 5,000 and 6,000 men, and at other places in the State rolling mills and rubber companies have added hundreds of men to their working forces. At Naugatuck, Conn., 900 employes were added to the force of the Goodyear Rubber Company, and at Biddeford, Me., the Pepperell Manufacturing Company is preparing to resume full time, affecting about 4,000 operatives.

SCHOOL CHILDREN DIE IN FLAMES

School Building at Collinwood, Near Cleveland, Destroyed and Between 160 and 170 Little Ones Perish.

Wild Panic Follows Fire's Outbreak--Locked Exits Caused Death of Many Who Tried to Escape--The Awful Story.

Penned in narrow hallways, jammed up against doors that opened inward, between 160 and 170 children in North Collinwood, a suburb of Cleveland, were killed by fire, by smoke and beneath the grinding heels of their panic-stricken playmates.

The awful tragedy occurred Wednesday morning in the public school of North Collinwood, a suburb of Cleveland, Ohio.

All the victims were between the ages of 6 and 15 years. The school contained between 300 and 325 pupils and of this entire number only about eighty are known to have left the building unhurt.

The school house was of brick, two stories and an attic in height. The number of pupils was more than normally large, and the smaller children had been placed in the upper part of the building. There was but one fire escape and that was in the rear of the building. There were two stairways, one leading to a door in front and the other to a door in the rear.

Both of these doors opened inward and it is claimed the rear door was locked as well. When the flames were discovered the teachers, who throughout seem to have acted with courage and self-possession, and to have struggled heroically for the safety of their pupils, marshalled the little ones into column for the "fire drill," which they had often practiced. Unfortunately the line of march in this exercise had always led to the front door and the children had not been trained to seek any other exit.

The fire came from a furnace situated directly under this part of the building. When the children reached the foot of the stairs they found the flames close upon them, and so swift a rush was made for the door that in an instant a tightly packed mass of children was piled up against it. From that second none of those who were upon any portion of the first flight of stairs had a chance for their lives.

After the flames had died away, however, a huge heap of little bodies, burned by the fire and trampled into things of horror, told the tale as well as anybody need to know.

Building was Never Inspected.

Chief State Factory Inspector John H. Morgan, of Columbus, Ohio, has left for Collinwood, where over 160 school children were roasted, to inspect the ruins of the school building which was built in 1901. The building was never inspected by the State Fire Inspector. The statement is made at the State House that the force of inspectors is inadequate. The law provides a penalty of $500 fine for officers in charge of public buildings who permit their use when the doors swing inward. Mayor Bond, of Columbus, on complaint of people who send their children to the Eastern school building ordered the fire chief to inspect all the school buildings in the city. The charge is made that the doors of the Eastern building are kept locked during the school hours. One building was found where the doors swing inward.

Marched Out in Good Order.

Grand Rapids, Mich., was threatened with a repetition of the Cleveland tragedy of Wednesday on an even larger scale. Fire broke out in the laboratory of the Central High School, while 1,200 pupils were in the midst of the morning work. The signal for the fire drill was given and the children marched out in perfect order. The building was emptied in two and one half minutes.

Bank Robbed of $3,000.

Safe blowers robbed the Mount Orab Bank, Mount Orab, Ohio, forty miles east of Cincinnati, on the Norfolk & Western railroad, of $3,000 in currency and securities. The robbers, four or five in number, entered by forcing a rear window and applied nitro-glycerin to the vault. The explosion shook the entire village. Guests in the Brown Hotel, across the street from the bank, were awakened. They were too late, however, to stop the robbers, who escaped in the direction of Fayetteville in a buggy.

Boys' Home Burns.

The dormitory of the D'Arcambal Home for Boys at Clarenceville, a suburb of Detroit, Mich., burned Thursday night but it is thought that all of the thirty-six boys were gotten out safely. Superintendent Lane, after directing the boys to safety, had to leap from an upper window but was not seriously injured.

Hartje Wins Acquittal.

Augustus Hartje, a millionaire; John L. Welshons, a hardware merchant and friend of Hartje, and Clifford Hoce, a negro coachman, who have been on trial in the Criminal Court charged with conspiracy to blacken the character of Mrs. Mary Scott Hartje, were acquitted at Pittsburg, Pa., binding instructions having been given to the jury to find such a verdict and place the costs of the case upon the county. This is the first victory for Hartje since the beginning, three years ago, of the unsuccessful suit against his wife for a divorce.

Father Leo's Slayer is Sane.

Giuseppe Alia, the slayer of Father Leo Heinrichs, is declared absolutely sane in a report submitted to District Attorney A. Stidger, of Denver, Col., by four experts in mental diseases who examined the prisoner for several hours. The doctors agreed that Alia has no mental delusion whatever and is above the average in intelligence and power of memory.

WORK OF CONGRESS

Two Senators with Indian blood in their veins, and members of former Indian tribes, carrying on an animated and acrimonious debate marked the proceedings of the Senate Thursday. Senator Owen of Oklahoma, a member of the Cherokee Nation, sought to have the word "late" placed before the designation of the "Five Civilized Tribes." Senator Curtis of Kansas, who is part Kaw Indian, took the opposite view. The Senate voted against the contention of Mr. Owen. Senator McCreary of Kentucky spoke on the currency bill. The committee on ways and means of the House was put to rout and by an overwhelming vote of the House ordered out of the capitol to the new House office building, a block away. Various members of the committee strenuously objected to the removal. The committee's present rooms are desired for the Speaker. The army appropriation bill was discussed, and the provision for pay of non-commissioned officers and privates was stricken out.

-:—:-

The consideration of the Indian appropriation bill and a speech by Senator Reed Smoot of Utah on the currency bill consumed nearly the entire time in the Senate Friday. The Indian bill was passed. The Senate at 5:12 p. m. adjourned until Monday. The House rejected by 59 to 60 an amendment by Mr. Foster (Illinois) to the army bill appropriating $1,000,000 for joint maneuvers of the militia organizations and the regular troops. Without a dissenting voice the House by special rule restored the provisions to increase the pay of non-commissioned officers and men and to prohibit the private employment of army musicians for pay, both of which went out on points of order.

-:—:-

The Senate was not in session Saturday. A veiled charge was made by Mr. Mann of Illinois in the House during the consideration of the army appropriation bill that some government official or employe had yielded to the influence of a land syndicate with the view to selling to the government a tract near the city for a target range. An appropriation of $250,000 for 6,000 acres was provided for, which Mr. Mann denounced as far beyond its value. He at once aroused the ire of Mr. Young of Michigan, who, springing to the defense of the committee on military affairs, indignantly denied that any member of it had been approached by any one but the Secretary of War or his subordinates. The provision was stricken out on a point of order. The army appropriation bill was passed, the total amount carried by it being $84,737,566.

-:—:-

In the Senate Monday Senator William Alden Smith of Michigan spoke against the railroad bond feature of the Aldrich currency bill. Most of the day was devoted to the passage of bills on the calendar which are not of general importance. A resolution was passed by the House authorizing the immigration committee to investigate charges of peonage in certain States. Mr. Clark of Florida denounced Assistant Attorney General Russell, in connection with certain peonage prosecutions in Florida and referred sarcastically to Attorney General Bonaparte. There followed a lively discussion over a bill to deport, after the serving of their sentence, all aliens convicted of felony. The measure was defeated. Four hundred pension bills and a few other private bills were passed, and some time was spent in considering the postoffice appropriation bill. Mr. Hepburn of Iowa introduced a bill imposing a tax of 50 cents per hundred shares on sales of stock or agreements to sell.

-:—:-

In the Senate Tuesday speeches on the pending currency bill were made by Senators McCumber of North Dakota and Newlands of Nevada. The Senate passed a resolution offered by Senator Tillman calling on the Attorney General for all information concerning court proceedings in the Indian Territory affecting the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes. A number of bills of minor importance were passed. The charge that the railroads of the country carrying mails had robbed the people of $70,000,000 was made by Mr. Lloyd of Missouri. He declared that the new system of weighing mails was an admission of the Postmaster General that the weighing in the past twenty-seven years had been fraudulent. He called for an investigation of the Postoffice Department, and Mr. Wanger of Pennsylvania, chairman of the committee to control the expenses of that department, promised that an inquiry would be made.

-:—:-

Currency legislation was made the subject of consideration in the Senate Wednesday. Senator Hepburn opposed the Aldrich bill and Senator Hopkins spoke in support of the bill. Senator Aldrich announced that he hoped to have a vote on the measure the next Wednesday. The postoffice appropriation bill technically was under consideration in the House, but the discussion, under license of general debate, took a wide range. Speculation in cotton, finance, the tariff and a number of miscellaneous matters in turn occupied the whole time of the session. Mr. Sims, Tennessee, spoke in favor of the Burleson bill to abolish dealings in cotton futures; Messrs. Chaney of Indiana and Lindberg of Minnesota talked on the financial question. Mr. Hitchcock of Nebraska pleaded for the placing on the free list of wood pulp and print paper.

CHICAGO'S CHIEF OF POLICE IS ATTACKED.

Shippy Receives Knife Stab and Son Is Shot, but He Slays His Assailant.

FIGHT IN HOME OF THE VICTIMS.

Desperate Assassin Approaches Official on Pretext of Presenting Letter and Attempts Murder.

Chicago's chief of police, George M. Shippy, was stabbed in the right side, his son, Harry, 19 years old, was probably fatally shot in the left lung, and his driver, James Foley, was wounded in the right wrist by a desperate assassin who attempted to kill the head of the police department in the front hallway of his home early Monday. The assassin was himself killed by the chief, who fired a bullet into his right temple. The assassin is declared to have been an anarchist and may have been the leader of a plot aimed at others besides the chief. Mrs. Shippy and the chief's daughter, Georgia, 22 years old, were eyewitnesses of the tragedy.

The supposed anarchist called at the chief's residence an hour before the shooting and was denied admittance by a domestic. He also called at the chief's home Sunday morning, but Shippy was not home.

Chief Shippy had called for his buggy and his driver, Foley, was seated in the rig, when the man, who looked like a Sicilian or a Jew, rang the doorbell. The chief himself answered the summons and confronted the man. The stranger thrust an envelope into Shippy's hand and said:

"Here is a note I bring you."

The chief, whose suspicions had been aroused, grasped both of the man's hands, and calling to his wife told her to search him. As Mrs. Shippy ran forward the man wriggled away, but her hand closed over a revolver in his overcoat pocket.

"He's got one!" she screamed. "Look out, George, for your life!"

Shippy, who had drawn his revolver, pointed it at the man, who knocked Mrs. Shippy aside and drew his weapon. He raised it to fire at her in his rage and the chief shot him in the arm as the woman dodged behind some tapestry. Foley had heard the shots and came running up the steps, as did Georgia, the daughter, who had just left the house. The two jumped into the group of struggling fighters while Harry Shippy, the chief's son, came running downstairs from his bedroom, with a revolver.

In the meantime, the assassin had drawn a knife, seven inches long, with which he stabbed the chief. Shippy dodged back, but received the blow in his right side. The anarchist then turned and fired at the driver, shattering his right wrist.

The enraged assailant turned and fired at Harry Shippy, who was half way down the landing. The bullet struck the youth above the heart and pierced his lung. Chief Shippy and Foley, enraged as they saw the boy fall down the stairs, fired seven shots into the would-be assassin, who fell dead at their feet.

A. CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER XIII.—(Continued.)

"I am sorry to be late, mother," the lad said, kissing the old lady. "I have been down at the docks all day, and have been busy and worried."

Mrs. Dimsdale was sitting in her chair beside the fire knitting when her son came in. At the sound of his voice she glanced anxiously up at his face, with all her motherly instincts on the alert.

"What is it, my boy?" she said. "You don't look yourself. Something has gone wrong with you. Surely you're not keeping anything secret from your old mother."

"Don't be so foolish as that, my boy," said the doctor earnestly. "If you have anything on your mind, out with it. There's nothing so far wrong but that it can be set right, I'll be bound."

Thus pressed, their son told them all that had happened, the rumor which he had heard from Von Baumser at the Cock and Cowslip, and the subsequent visit to Eccleston square. "I can hardly realize it all yet," he said in conclusion. "My head seems to be in a whirl, and I can't reason about it."

The old couple listened very attentively to his narrative, and were silent some little time after he had finished. His mother first broke the silence. "I was always sure," she said, "that we were wrong to stop our correspondence at the request of Mr. Girdlestone."

"It's easy enough to say that now," said Tom ruefully. "At the time it seemed as if we had no alternative."

"There's no use crying over spilt milk," remarked the old physician, who had been very grave during his son's narrative. "We must set to work and get things right again. There is one thing very certain, Tom, and that is that Kate Haraton is a girl who never did or could do a dishonorable thing. If she said that she would wait for you, my boy, you may feel perfectly safe; and if you doubt her for one moment you ought to be deuced well ashamed of yourself."

"Well said, governor!" cried Tom, with beaming face. "Now that is exactly my own feeling, but there is so much to be explained. Why have they left London, and where have they gone to?"

"No doubt that old scoundrel Girdlestone thought that your patience would soon come to an end, so he got the start of you by carrying the girl off into the country."

"And if he has done this, what can I do?"

"Nothing. It is entirely within his right to do it."

"And have her stowed away in some little cottage in the country, with that brute Ezra Girdlestone hanging round her all the time. It is the thought of that that drives me wild."

"You trust in her, my boy," said the old doctor. "We'll try our best in the meantime to find out where she has gone to. If she is unhappy or needs a friend you may be sure that she will write to your mother."

"Yes, there is always that hope," exclaimed Tom, in a more cheerful voice. "To-morrow I may learn something at the office."

"Don't make the mistake of quarreling with the Girdlestones. After all they are within their rights in doing what they appear to have done."

"They may be within their legal rights," Tom cried indignantly, "but the old man made a deliberate compact with me, which he has broken."

"Never mind. Don't give them an advantage by losing your temper." The doctor chatted away over the matter for some time, and his words, together with those of his mother, cheered the young fellow's heart. Nevertheless, after they had retired to their rooms, Dr. Dimsdale continued to be very thoughtful and very grave. "I don't like it," he said, more than once. "I don't like the idea of the poor girl being left entirely in the hands of that pair of beauties."

CHAPTER XIV.

John Girdlestone and his ward were at Waterloo station. He gave orders to the guard that the luggage should be stamped, but took care that she should not hear the name of their destination. Hurrying her rapidly down the platform amid the confused heaps of luggage and currents of eager passengers, he pushed her into a first-class carriage, and sprang after her just as the bell rang and the wheels began to revolve.

They were alone. Kate crouched up into the corner among the cushions and wrapped her rug round her, for it was bitterly cold. The merchant pulled a note book from his pocket, and proceeded by the light of the lamp above him to add up columns of figures. He sat very upright in his seat, and appeared to be as absorbed in his work as though he were among his papers in Fenchurch street. He neither glanced at his companion nor made any inquiry as to her comfort.

As she sat opposite to him she could not keep her eyes from his hard, angular face, every rugged feature of which was exaggerated by the flickering yellow light above him. Those deep-set eyes and sunken cheeks had been familiar to her for years. How was it that they now, for the first time, struck her as being terrible? Was it that new expression which had appeared upon them, that hard, inexorable set about the mouth, which gave a more sinister character to his whole face? As she gazed at him an ineffable loathing and dread rose in her soul, and she could have shrieked out of pure terror. She put her hand up to her throat with a gasp to keep down the sudden inclination to cry out. As she did so her guardian glanced over the top of the note book with his piercing light grey eyes.

"Don't get hysterical!" he cried. "You have given us trouble enough without that."

"Oh, why are you so harsh?" she cried, throwing out her arms towards him in eloquent entreaty, while the tears coursed down her cheeks. "What have I done that is so dreadful? I could not love your son, and I do love another. I am so grieved to have offended you. You used to be kind and like a father to me."

"And a nice return you have made me. I have to blame myself to some extent for having allowed you to go on that most pernicious trip to Scotland, where you were thrown into the company of this young adventurer by his scheming old father."

"You may say what you like of me," she said bitterly. "I suppose that is one of your privileges as my guardian. You have no right, however, to speak evil of my friends."

"You are becoming impertinent," he answered, and resumed his calculations in his note book. Kate cowered back into her corner again, while the train thundered and screeched and rattled through the darkness. Looking through the steamy window nothing was to be seen save the twinkle here and there of the lights of the scattered country cottages. Occasionally a red signal lamp would glare down upon her like the bloodshot eye of some demon who presided over this kingdom of iron and steam. Far behind a lurid trail of smoke marked the way that they had come. To Kate's mind it was all as weird and gloomy and cheerless even as the thoughts within her.

And they were gloomy enough. Where was she going? How long was she going for? What was she to do when there? On all these points she was absolutely ignorant. What was the object of this sudden flight from London? Her guardian could have separated her from the Dimsdales in many less elaborate ways than this. Could it be that he intended some system of pressure and terrorism by which she should be forced to accept Ezra as a suitor? She clenched her little white teeth as she thought of it, and registered a vow that nothing in this world would ever bring her to give in upon that point. There was only one bright spot in her outlook. When she reached her destination she would at once write to Mrs. Dimsdale, tell her where she was, and ask her frankly for an explanation of their sudden silence. How much wiser if she had done so before. Only a foolish pride had withheld her from it.

The train had already stopped at one large junction. Looking out through the window she saw by the lamps that it was Guildford. After another interminable interval of clattering and tossing and plunging through the darkness, they came to a second station of importance, Petersfield. "We are nearing our destination," Girdlestone remarked, shutting up his book.

This proved to be a small wayside station, illuminated by a single lamp, which gave no information as to the name. They were the only passengers who alighted, and the train rolled on for Portsmouth, leaving them with their trunks upon the dark and narrow platform. It was a dark night with a bitter wind which carried with it a suspicion of dampness, which might have been rain, or might have been the drift of the neighboring ocean. Kate was numb with the cold, and even her gaunt companion stamped his feet and shivered as he looked about him.

"I telegraphed for a trap," said he to the guard. "Is there not one waiting?"

"Yes, sir, if you be Mister Girdlestone. Here, Carker, here's your gentleman."

At this summons a rough-looking ostler emerged into the circle of light thrown by the single lamp, and touching his hat, announced in a surly voice that he was the individual in question. The guard and he then proceeded to drag the trunks to the vehicle. It was a small wagonette, with a high seat for the driver in front.

"Where to, sir?" asked the driver, when the travelers had taken their seats.

"To Hampton Priory. Do you know where that is?"

"Better'n two mile from here, and close to the railway line," said the man. "There hain't been no one livin' there for two year at the least."

"We are expected and all will be ready for us," said Girdlestone. "Go as fast as you can, for we are cold." The driver cracked his whip, and the horse started at a brisk trot down the dark country road.

Looking round her Kate saw that they were passing through a large country village, consisting of a broad main street, with a few insignificant offshoots branching away on either side. A church stood on one side, and on the other the village inn. The door was open and the light shining through the red curtains of the bar parlor looked warm and cosy. The murmur of cheerful voices sounded from within. Kate as she looked across felt doubly cheerless and lonely by the contrast. Girdlestone looked, too, but with different emotions.

The road was lined on either side by high hedges, which threw a dense shadow over everything. The feeble lamps of the wagonette bored two little yellow tunnels of light on either side. The man let the reins lie loosely upon the horse's back, and the animal picked out the roadway for itself. As they swung round from the narrow lane on to a broader road Kate broke out into a little cry of pleasure.

"There's the sea," she exclaimed joyfully. The moon had broken from behind the clouds, and glittered on the vast silvery expanse.

"Yes, that's the sea," the driver said, "and them lights down yonder is at Lea Claxton, where the fisher folk live; and over there," pointing with his whip to a long dark shadow on the waters, "is the "Oilywoite."

"The what?"

"The Isle of Wight, he means," said Girdlestone.

The driver looked at him reproachfully. "Of course," said he, "if you Lunnon folks knows more about it than we who are born and bred in the place, it's no matter o' use our tryin' to teach you." With this sarcastic comment he withdrew into himself, and refused to utter another word until the end of their journey.

It was not long before this was attained. Passing down a deeply rutted lane they came to a high stone wall which extended for a couple of hundred yards. It had a crumbling, decaying appearance, as far as could be judged in the uncertain light. This wall was broken by a single iron gate, flanked by two high pillars, each of which was surmounted by some weather-beaten heraldic device. Passing through they turned up a winding avenue, with lines of trees on either side, which shot their branches so thickly above them that they might have been driving through some somber tunnel. This avenue terminated in an open space, in the midst of which towered a great irregular whitewashed building, which was the old Priory. All below it was swathed in darkness, but the upper windows caught the glint of the moon, and emitted a pallid and sickly glimmer. The whole effect was so weird and gloomy that Kate felt her heart sink within her. The wagonette pulled up in front of the door, and Girdlestone assisted her to alight.

There had been no lights or any symptoms of welcome, but as they pulled down the trunks the door opened and a little old woman appeared with a candle in her hand, which she carefully shaded from the wind while she peered out into the darkness.

"Is that Mr. Girdlestone?" she cried.

"Of course it is," the merchant said impatiently. "Did I not telegraph and tell you that I was coming?"

"Yes, yes," she answered, hobbling forward with the light. "And this is the young lady? Come in, my dear; come in. We have not got things very smart yet, but they will soon come right."

She led the way through a lofty hall into a large sitting room, which, no doubt, had been the monkish refectory in bygone days. It looked very bleak and cold now, although a small fire sputtered and sparkled in the corner of the great iron grate. There was a pan upon the fire, and the deal table in the center of the room was laid out roughly as for a meal. The candle, which the old woman had carried in, was the only light, though the flickering fire cast strange fantastic shadows in the further corners and among the great oaken rafters which formed the ceiling.

"Come up to the fire, my dear," said the old woman. "Take off your cloak and warm yourself." She held her own shriveled arms towards the blaze, as though her short exposure to the night air had chilled her. Glancing at her, Kate saw that her face was sharp-featured and cunning, with a loose lower lip which exposed a line of yellow teeth, and a chin which bristled with a tuft of long grey hairs.

From without there came the crunching of gravel as the wagonette turned and rattled down the avenue. Kate listened to the sound of the wheels until they died away in the distance. They seemed somehow to be the last link which bound her to the human race. Her heart failed her completely, and she burst into tears.

"What's the matter then?" the old woman asked, looking up at her. "What are ye crying about?"

"Oh, I am so miserable and so lonely," she cried. "What have I done that I should be so unhappy? Why should I be taken to this horrible, horrible place?"

"What's the matter with the place?" asked her withered companion, "I don't see nought amiss with it. Here's Mr. Girdlestone a-comin'. He don't grumble at the place, I warrant."

The merchant was not in the best of tempers, for he had had an altercation with the driver about the fare, and was cold into the bargain. "At it again," he said roughly, as he entered. "It is I who ought to weep, I think, who have been put to all this trouble and inconvenience by your disobedience and weakness of mind."

Kate did not answer, but sat upon a coarse deal chair beside the fire, and buried her face in her hands. All manner of vague fears and fancies filled her mind. What was Tom doing now? How quickly he would fly to her rescue did he but know how strangely she was situated. She determined that her very first action next morning should be to write to Mrs. Dimsdale, and to tell her, not only where she was, but all that had occurred. The reflection that she could do this cheered her heart, and she managed to eat a little of the supper which the old woman had now placed upon the table. It was a rough stew of some sort, but the long journey had given an edge to their appetites, and the merchant, though usually epicurean in his tastes, ate a hearty meal.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

The Miami County Council at Peru has made an appropriation of $16,000 to purchase voting machines for that county.

The strawboard plant at Rockport, one of the largest industries of the town, is to be enlarged, and will give employment to additional men.

The dress of the infant child of Edward Beck, of Petersburg, who was standing in front of an open grate, caught on fire, and the child was seriously burned before the blaze was extinguished.

The country home of Mr. and Mrs. Andy Rosenbaim, south of Martinsville, was destroyed by fire recently. Only their four children were at home. Nothing was saved, and there was no insurance.

The Civic Improvement Committee, an organization composed of representatives of the various public improvement institutions, has been organized for the purpose of formulating a plan to make of South Bend a city beautiful.

Lee O. Wright, son of Jonas Wright, of Lyons, who was recommended by Congressman Chaney to a cadetship at West Point, has passed the last competitive examination. He has resigned his place as teacher of the Wells school near Lyons and will leave soon for West Point.

The Winona Interurban Railway Company, which is now constructing a line from Warsaw to Peru, has closed a contract with the Pittsburg Underground Company for 526,000 pounds of copper cable, to cost $76,270. As the price of copper was 29 cents a pound a year ago and is now only 14½ cents a pound, the company profited by waiting for a drop.

Hearing that certain persons in the employ of the city of Muncie were in arrears with their taxes, the Board of Public Works has entered an order that every city officer or employe, in whatever capacity he may be retained, shall be discharged on his failure to pay at once all taxes due by him to the city or county. A great scrambling on the part of city employes to pay back taxes has been the result of this order.

The aged widow of Capt. J. D. Hardy, of Logansport, frightened by a prowling cat on the roof beneath her window, thought that burglars were attempting an entrance to the second story of her home, and she ran for the stairway. In her haste, she missed her footing and plunged headlong to the bottom of the steep stairs. While no bones were broken, she is in a very bad condition, and it is feared that her injuries, due to her age, may prove fatal.

During exercises commemorating Washington's birthday in the High School building at Newcastle, the fire alarm was sounded and the 1,100 scholars, teachers and visitors rushed from the building panic-stricken, but no one was seriously injured. The G. A. R. and W. R. C. were inattendance and it was with difficulty that some of the aged spectators were taken from the building. The fire was located in the basement and was quickly extinguished.

Angry at City Judge Hughes, because he refused to send her husband to jail, Mrs. George Waser left the court room in a huf at Elkhart recently, after the husband, who was arrested at her instigation, had pleaded guilty to the charge of assault and was assessed a fine of $5 and costs. "It's no use; it's no use," remonstrated the woman addressing the court. "Just keep him in jail, that's the only cure. When he comes home he will be as bad as ever," she protested.

William E. Heffien, a farmer living near Edinburg, has bought a farm known as the Jacob Hartman farm, for $16,000. In making out the deed for this property it was found that three original land grants on the property had never been entered for record. Two of these were made by President James Madison to John Pence, and the other was made by President Andrew Jackson to Jacob Hartman. The three grants are made on sheepskin and are in as good condition as they were the day they were taken out.

Mrs. Lucy Lewis, widow of Charles Lewis, editor of the Kersey (Colo.) Enterprise, who was killed in the streets of Greeley because of a publication in his newspaper, has been elected secretary of the Tri-State Literary Society, composed of the States of Indiana, Ohio and Illinois. Her selection came as a surprise, as she had made no application for the position. Most of her work will be at Indianapolis, which will be headquarters of the society. Mrs. Lewis, before her marriage, was Miss Hoggatt, daughter of Captain Hoggatt, of Petersburg. Her ability as a writer was tested several years ago, when in the Tri-State contest her works carried off a number of prizes.

The clothing of Isabelle Brewer, of Greenwood, aged 12, caught fire and she was fatally burned.

A gasoline lamp in the pool room of Rolla Method, at Milford, exploded, and loss to the amount of $250 resulted.

While crossing a street, Abijah Teague, of Wabash, was knocked down by a team of horses and suffered a fracture of several ribs.

Frank Buddle, of Bicknell, miner, was caught by falling coal, smashing his foot so badly that it was amputated at the ankle. He is 20 years old and unmarried.

Congressman Brick has introduced in Congress bills appropriating $100,000 for a postoffice building at Mishawaka and a like sum for a similar building at Goshen.

John A. Richardson, a well-known farmer, six miles west of Nashville, was caught in a standing position between two rolling logs. His right leg was mashed almost to a pulp.

The Postal Telegraph Company has installed an office at Logansport, getting into the city by leasing wires of the Bell Telephone Company, which it will use for telegraph purposes.

Robert J. Hyatt has filed suit against Mrs. Mary Morgan, of Greenfield, for $10,000 damages for the death of his son, 12 years old, who fell from a cherry tree at Mrs. Morgan's home and was killed by the paling of an iron fence while picking cherries in July, 1906.

Three new altars have been contracted for by the building committee of St. Joseph's Catholic church, which is in course of construction at Shelbyville. The altars will cost $5,000, and they have been contributed by some of the wealthy members of the congregation.

Dr. Edmund Devel, of New Albany who has been practicing medicine in New York City for the last eight years, has notified relatives that he has received a legacy of $10,000 by the will of an aged woman whom he had attended for several years before her death. He is arranging for an European trip.

John W. Elder, of Warsaw, has spent 18,993 consecutive nights in his home in that city; in fact, he has never been away from home over night, and he observed his fifty-second birthday anniversary. The record is a remarkable one, and it is doubtful whether there is another person in the county who can make a similar claim.

During a performance at the Eagles' theater in Wabash, some boy threw Japanese snuff on the patrons of the first floor of the theater. The result was that both audience and actors were thrown into fits of sneezing. One of the actors, during a tender love scene was forced to pause in his declaration long enough to sneeze. Manager Holden from the stage offered a reward for information that would lead to the arrest of the person guilty of throwing the snuff into the audience.

Rev. D. W. Abbott, an aged retired minister at Craigville, was found lying unconscious in the roadway, one leg imprisoned beneath a sled which he had loaded with poles. In some manner he fell or was jerked from the sled in such a way that one of the runners of the sled caught his leg. The horses had stopped, but whether at the command of the driver as he fell or because the sled became clogged is not known. Rev. Mr. Abbott, who is 70 years of age, may not survive his injuries.

Vernon Wolfe, a lad of 14 years, underwent a strange operation at Oaktown recently. The bone of his forearm has been afflicted by a strange disease for some time, and it was removed and the bone from the leg of a large St. Bernard dog was substituted. The dog was killed with chloroform in a room adjoining the room where the bone was taken from the arm of the lad and the dog's bone was substituted before it had become cold. The operation is said to have been very successful, and the attending physicians believe the boy will have perfect use of the member when the wound heals.

W. E. Woolen and his wife, Olive Woolen, of Franklin, have patented a bed which, if they realize their expectations, will make them wealthy. While Mrs. Woolen was ill several months ago, she conceived the idea of making an invalid bed. Her husband, who is a plumber, and her husband's father, who is a cabinet maker, assisted her and together the trio patented a bed which, they say, makes it possible for an invalid to sit up in bed or be turned over without the patient being disturbed. Different stories have been circulated through this community about sums of money having been offered the patentees for the invention, but they are confident they will profit thereby.

Prohibition Column.

The Liquor Educational Bureau is flooding the country with a two-color poster addressed to farmers and working men, sounding alarm over the dire results that would follow the suppression of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor in this country, now threatened. It closes with the assertion that "this growing evil of prohibition and hypocritical humbug, if allowed to prevail, will create a financial crisis such as the world has never seen."

This poster and accompanying circulars are being mailed by a company engaged in the manufacture of bar fixtures, billiard tables, etc. A circular letter addressed to saloon men and liquor dealers reads in part: "Will you please display the posters herewith some place about your premises, where they will attract the greatest amount of attention, especially from farmers and others who do not patronize saloons?"

For years Prohibition speakers and writers have been trying to gain the attention of the public upon the money side of the liquor problem. But it is only of late that tax-papers and business men have partially awakened to the fearful loss being inflicted upon the country by this monster parasite. So this raising of the monetary side of the question by the liquor men themselves is very welcome. Its effect will doubtless be to gain for the Prohibition side a more ready hearing—many people will want to know how these assertions and figures of the liquor men can be answered.

An excellent reply to this liquor circular by Wm. P. F. Ferguson, editor of the National Prohibitionist. Mr. Ferguson has in the past made special study and research along these lines.

And, on the other hand, every public man who dares to be true to his official oath, every minister who dares assail the curse from his pulpit and every business man who dares squarely oppose it is to be branded as a fanatic, a grafter or a hypocrite, as the case may be.

Some men say don't mix your politics with religion. Well, no; not the average latter-day politics but don't fear to mix a little old fashioned religion with your politics.

A political party is a body of men joined together for the purpose of promoting by their joint endeavor the National interest upon some particular principle upon which they are agreed.—Edmund Burk.

No political party has a right to expect nor ought it to expect to receive the support of Christian men so long as it stands committed to the license policy or refuses to put itself on record in an attitude of open hostility to the saloon.—M. E. Church, 1892 and 1900.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is Both Agreeable and Effective.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has no superior for coughs, colds and croup, and the the fact that it is pleasant to take and contains nothing in any way injurious has made it a favorite with mothers. Mr. W. S. Pelham, a merchant of Kirksville, Iowa, says: "For more than twenty years Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has been my leading remedy for throat troubles. It is especially successful in cases of croup. Children like it and my customers who have used it will not take any other." For sale by H. Milliman, St. Joe; F. R. Bowman, Spencerville.

Decay in Wood Prevented.

It is estimated that a fence post, which under ordinary circumstances will last for perhaps two years, will, if given preservative treatment costing about 10 cents, last eighteen years. The service of other timbers, such as railroad ties, telephone poles, and mine props, can be doubled and often trebled by inexpensive preservative treatment. To-day, when the cost of wood is a big item to every farmer, every stockman, every railroad manager—to everyone, in fact, who must use timber where it is likely to decay—this is a fact which should be carefully considered.

It is easy to see that if the length of time timbers can be used is doubled, only half as much timber will be required as before and only half as much money will need to be spent in the purchase of timber. Moreover, many woods which were for a long time considered worthless can be treated and made to last as long as the scarcer and more expensive kinds.

Of the actual saving in dollars and cents through preservative treatment a fence post such as was mentioned at the beginning might serve as one example. The post is of loblolly pine, and costs, untreated, about 8 cents, or, including the cost of setting, 14 cents. It lasts about two years. Compounding interest at 5 per cent, the annual charge of such a post is 7.53 cents; that is, it costs 7.53 cents a year to keep the post in service. Preservative treatment costing 10 cents will increase its length of life about eighteen years. In this case the total cost of the post, set, is 24 cents which compounded at 5 per cent, gives an annual charge of 2.04 cents. Thus the saving due to treatment is 5.49 cents a year. Assuming that there are 200 posts per mile, there is a saving each year for every mile of fence of a sum equivalent to the interest on $219.60.

In the same way preservative treatment will increase the length of life of a loblolly pine railroad tie from five years to twelve years and will reduce the annual charge from 11.52 cents to 9.48 cents, which amounts to a saving of $58.75 per mile.

It is estimated that 150,000 acres are required each year to grow timber for the anthracite coal mines alone. The average life of an untreated mine prop is not more than three years. By proper preservative treatment it can be prolonged by many times this figure. Telephone and telegraph poles which in ten or twelve years, or even less decay so badly at the ground line that they have to be removed, can, by a simple treatment of their buts, be made to last twenty or twenty-five years. Sap shingles, which are almost in their natural state, can easily be treated and made to outlast even painted shingles of the most decay-resistant woods. Thousands of dollars are lost every year by the so-called "bluing" of freshly sawed sapwood lumber. This can be prevented by proper treatment, and at a cost so small as to put it within the reach of the smallest operator.

In the South the cheap and abundant loblolly pine, one of the easiest of of all woods to treat, can by proper preparation be made to take the place of the high-grade longleaf pine for many purposes. Black and tupelo gums and other little-used woods have a new and increasing importance because of the possibility of preserving them from decay at small cost. In the Northeastern and Lake States are tamarack, hemlock, beech, birch, and maple, and the red and black oaks, all which by proper treatment may help to replace the fast-diminishing white oak and cedar. In the States of the Mississippi Valley the pressing fence-post problem may be greatly relieved by treating such species as cottonwood, willow, and hackberry.

Circular 139 of the Forest Service, "A Primer of Wood Preservation," tells in simple terms what decay is and how it can be retarded, describes briefly certain preservatives and processes, gives examples of the saving in dollars and cents, and tells what wood preservation can do in the future. The circular can be had free upon application to the Forester, Forest Service, Washington, D. C.

The Annihilation of Distance.

How much nearer to each other the nations of the world are to-day than they were a few decades ago! When weeks and months were required to get news across the ocean and the old world seemed to be a long way off. Now the whole earth is belted with telegraph and cable lines, and yesterday's happenings in Europe, Asia, Africa, South America, Australia and the islands of the sea are read at this morning's breakfast table. Distance is annihilated and the nations are becoming friendly neighbors in consequence. The marvelous change is brought home to the mind most strikingly upon reading a great modern newspaper whose telegraphic news covers the whole world each day—a paper such as The Chicago Record-Herald, which has a veritable army of correspondents in every important city. In addition to its own staff of correspondents The Record-Herald has the benefit of the foreign news service of the New York Herald, famous for its world wide cable system and for the reliability of its foreign news; also that of the New York world and the New York Journal of Commerce, besides that great co-operative news-gathering organization, the Associated Press.

An Open Letter.

replying to the many requests for information as to how I stand on various important questions. The views above stated represent my position precisely. I would not accept a nomination or make the race for an office with my hands tied by any pledge other than that of loyally supporting the party platform and its several candidates, and to do what I believe to be in strict accord with an adherence to Democratic principles. I have never considered that a public official could discharge his full duty unless free to be guided by his convictions, and I now sincerely announce that unless permitted to make the campaign on the principles above enunciated I would prefer defeat in the nominating convention. To be elected in the face of such an overwhelming majority as that which defeated the Democratic party at the last election means that a candidate must first be right in order to command the confidence of voters. My sympathies are entirely with the class of citizens which furnishes a majority of votes, and to that class I now look for support. An investigation of my past record will prove the truthfulness of that assertion. If on that record I receive the nomination it will then be my own fault should I not in the coming campaign succeed in convincing the public of my worthiness of an election. On the other hand should the nominating convention rejects my candidacy I shall be satisfied if the publication of this letter results in a reorganization of the party under new and more worthy leaders, and in restoring peace and harmony among the warring factions that the Democracy of Indiana may be restored to its old time voting strength, vigor and influence.

be no favoritism manifested, nor impartiality shown which would not result in public good. Official life considered from this point of view is not a sinecure. It is not a position in which the incumbent may take his ease at public expense. It is not a politician's dream of riches to be acquired by serving corporate interests. It is not a place where public welfare may be ignored and private gain augmented.

Another thing about a government and the exercise of governmental functions which should not be overlooked. The welfare of working people must of necessity be promoted if a country would prosper. The rich and well-to-do are capable of taking care of themselves, and they also desire to force riches from those who serve them. For that reason it should be the duty of those who administer governmental affairs to wage earners from that form of greed, and to invoke the machinery of the law, if necessary, in affording them relief. Unless wage earners thrive and are enabled to support their families and educate their children in a reasonable way through the receipt of fair wages and steady employment, there can be no universal prosperity. In addition to this method of fair dealing with those who first create wealth there should be a constant encouragement of conservatism in all things connected with public affairs, also of a continued and never ceasing attempt at right living. That may not properly be a function of government, but it should inspire the deeds of government officials and govern them in the discharge of their duties.

The above comments on the condition of the Democratic organization and on its regrettable departure from recognized Democratic methods were prompted by an unfair opposition to my candidacy for the Gubernatorial nomination. Up to this writing I have had nothing to do with furthering this candicacy, it having been exploited by my Democratic friends. Nor would I now have published this letter had it not been for this opposition and for the necessity of publicly

Democrat Love Feast

The Coliseum in this city was the scene of a great rally in Democracy in our county Wednesday March 4. The special invitations sent out to those in the county as well as those outside were well responded to and the committe in charge was well paid for the efforts to make it a great success.

All the speakers were present, Miles Baxter, county chairman, rapped the audience down and in a few well chosen words extended the hand of welcome to visiting democrats. Ed Hoffman of Ft. Wayne, district chairman, arrived too late to give the response and Frank Duntin "filled in."

Fifteen minute talks by the three congressional candidates were followed by L. Ert Slack of Franklin, and Thos. R. Marshal of Columbia City, both gubernatorial candidates.

The meeting was adjourned to meet in the evening to devour Bryan dollar dinner in the K of P. banquet hall.

Frank Herring of South Bend, candidate for the second place on the democratic state ticket was present and was called upon for a speech. He sent the committee a telegram the night beford stating that he would be here. He is a very pleasing man and leaves a favorable impression on those whom he meets.

The climax of the democratic love feast was reached in the evening when about 200 gathered at the Coliseum and marched to the K. of P. hall and there found a four-course banquet awaiting them. With the Pythian Sisters as caterers and waitresses the delicious spread was served in true table d'hote style and such an abundance! If the "windjamming" portion of the political function had been as well supplied with staple food for the mind as the banquet for the physical man those in attendance would have been filled so full that the region enclosed within the hat band would have had more of the appearance of that portion within the belt.

Hon. E. B. Dunten of Butler, presided as toastmaster and added to his reputation as a presiding officer. Toasts were responded to as arranged on the program as follows:

Do Not Crowd the Season.

The first warm days of spring bring with them a desire to get out and enjoy the exhilarating air and sunshine. Children that have been housed up all winter are brought out and you wonder where they all come from. The heavy winter clothing is thrown aside and many shed their flannels. Then a cold wave comes and people say that grip is epidemic Colds at this season are more dangerous than in mid winter, as there is much more danger of pneumonia. The General Demand of the Well-Informed of the World has always been for a simple, pleasant and efficient liquid laxative remedy of known value; a laxative which physicians could sanction for family use because its component parts are known to them to be wholesome and truly beneficial in effect, acceptable to the system and gentle, yet prompt, in action.

In supplying that demand with its excellent combination of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, the California Fig Syrup Co. proceeds along ethical lines and relies on the merits of the laxative for its remarkable success.

That is one of many reasons why Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is given the preference by the Well-Informed. To get its beneficial effects always buy the genuine—manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., only, and for sale by all leading druggists. Price fifty cents per bottle.

A Bell Ridden Town.

A well-known tourist of the world has stated as his opinion that Lucerne is the most bell-ridden town in Europe. He had assuredly never been to Schwyz. To begin with, the countless cattle that pass through the streets in the small hours of the morning on their way to or from the upland pastures wear bells as big as buckets. And there are church bells, too. A fine peal they are, no doubt, but the noble art of bellringing either never existed or has been lost here. The bells are rung by being smitten or banged together by two small boys, whose legs are plainly visible—an alluring mark for an airgun—through the open louvres of the church tower, the sounds produced being about as edifying as the music of a donkey engine in full play. The performance begins at 4:30 a. m. and continues until early service at 5, and if there is a funeral—which is every other day or so—there will be another sustained burst of melody from 6 to 7. During the remainder of the day the ringing is varied and persistent, but it lacks the irritating power of the early morning exercises. Sooner or later public opinion will be aroused. Those boys will be dragged from their perch, figuratively, if not literally, and peace and quiet will reign in the eponymous capital of the confederacy.—Blackwood's Magazine.

THE DOCTOR'S GIFT.

Food Worth Its Weight in Gold.

We usually expect the doctor to put us on some kind of penance and give us bitter medicines.

A Penn. doctor brought a patient something entirely different and the results are truly interesting.

"Two years ago," writes this patient, "I was a frequent victim of acute indigestion and biliousness, being allowed to eat very few things. One day our family doctor brought me a small package, saying he had found something for me to eat at last.

"He said it was a food called Grape-Nuts and even as its golden color might suggest, it was worth its weight in gold. I was sick and tired, trying one thing after another to no avail, but at last consented to try this new food.

"Well! It surpassed my doctor's fondest anticipation and every day since then I have blessed the good doctor and the inventor of Grape-Nuts.

"I noticed improvement at once and in a month's time my former spells of indigestion had disappeared. In two months I felt like a new man. My brain was much clearer and keener, my body took on the vitality of youth, and this condition has continued."

INSPIRATION OF HOPE.

By Rev. Guy A. Jamieson.

Rejoicing in hope.—Romans xii., 12.

This is but one link in a chain of tersely put elements that go into the making of Christian character. But without this one link, that St. Paul has in the very heart of the chain, the strength of the chain, whatever the beauty and power of the other links, will be a rope of sand.

When the soul has no longer the power to hope, no matter what the darkness of the passing hour, it has lost the divine spark that makes life worth while. As long as the soul has hope it has courage, it has faith, it has life—and it will fight and struggle and refuse to know defeat.

Hope engenders all the qualities of strength—it is the very foundation of them. It gives joy and sunshine to life, to work, to every aspiration. We can rejoice in hope, but without it we can only wail and mourn. Out of hope grows patience and endurance, and these virtues are twins. Patience to endure; endure because we are patient, and both because we have hope—because we can look beyond the moment and see the flush of sunrise on the distant horizon.

Hope enables a man to keep a cool head, a dumb tongue, a sweet temper under the most trying circumstances, because he can rejoice in hope in the knowledge that nothing lasts forever, that perhaps the next turn of the wheel of fortune may lift him to the coveted height and if it doesn't because of his hope he does not despair, but silently works and struggles on.

But let the man lose hope, let the divine spark die in his bosom and set him down amid all that perplexes, annoys, condemns and hinders and you make of him a weakling or a madman. But all these are insignificant things when the soul that hopes compares them with the victories and achievements he believes await him in the future and he finds strength to master the spirit of resentment, anger and despair.

It was a hope of this kind that enabled St. Paul to say: "Our light afflictions, which are but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

So hope not only works in us the power to endure present struggles and hardships but it gives us the opportunity to develop the strength through which we are to overcome in the end.

Find the strongest and most firmly rooted oak of a forest and you will find one that has best combatted the fury of a thousand storms. Go find a man who stands high among his fellows and you will find a man who has passed through some of the hard places of life, who has suffered and fought, but because of his hope and the vision it inspired has overcome and won. He rejoiced in hope. Go find the saint, the beautiful poised Christian character, who breathes the spirit of the Christ, who is touched with sympathy and loves everything that is weak and helpless, everything that struggles and suffers, and you will find a soul that has passed through the fire, a soul that has met temptation and has fought and fallen and got up and struggled on till with the fighting there has come strength and understanding and the spirit that in the end has conquered, rejoicing in the hope, rejoicing in the victory seen from afar.

We must not despair; we cannot afford to grow skeptical because the Christ does not come in our own way and in our day. But He is coming. He is here, if the world will only look up and behold Him. It is only by rejoicing in hope that we will in a measure attain. I know how disappointed we are often with our lives, how sometimes we almost despair of ever making of them the beautiful thing we would like to see them, but, rejoicing in hope, in patience, we must endure till the Christ comes to us, till we come to Christ. Hope will steady our lives, fill them with visions of attainment, with inspiration that will carry us toward the heights and anchor our soul to the eternal.

CHRISTIAN MEEKNESS.

By Rev. John J. Donlan.

Blessed are the meek, for they shall possess the land.—Matthew 5, 4.

The world does not esteem meekness. This virtue is looked upon as impracticable because it is held as a negative quality among the forces required of practical living.

The error most persons make is in identifying meekness with weakness. But Jesus Christ would not have counseled meekness as one of the finer qualities of life if it were a drawback to legitimate endeavor in our workaday struggles. It is not reasonable to suppose that He would have placed a heavy handicap on those who seek to follow after Him.

No, indeed. Christ left us in His own life a beautiful example of what meekness may accomplish, and yet He was one of the bravest of men in that He lay down His life for His friends. The scriptures, too, tell us that "Moses was a man exceeding meek above all men that dwelt on earth," but he stands out prominently as a man who did things.

The meek man is a type of a great moral force among us, for he is capable of self-control and self-denial. At all times he is master of himself and is able to limit his activity within the bounds of solid principles. This is the acme of perfect strength, to be able to do and yet exercise restraint. The meek man may be compared with the stoic, but with this difference, that while the stoic made passivity of emotions the end for which he labored, the meek man exercises or restrains his passions out of love of God. He but follows the example of Christ, who said, "Learn of me, for I am meek and humble of heart," and for this came the promise of reward in the words, "and you shall find rest for your souls."

The weak man, on the other hand, never has a chance of exercising meekness. He never overcomes, but yields to the opposing currents of nature. "The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune" behold him bending as the willow before the storm. But as only he who bears the brunt of the battle really knows the danger of the fight, so also it is only the man of strong impulses that knows the difficulty of conquering them.

"Do thy work in meekness," says Ecclesiasticus, "and thou shalt be beloved above the glory of men." It is, moreover, a mistake to fancy that meekness can come from flying from your fellow men or by living a life of do-nothing, for meekness is not to be found in conditions, but in the hearts and characters of men—in a heart that palpitates with a fellow feeling and in a character that grows broader with loving activity.

In the acquirement of meekness neither submission, surrender nor self-effacement count unless these are fortified by the enduring grace of enlightenment reflected in the gospel's teaching. To be like clay in the potter's hands, to assume a "worm of the dust" attitude, to become a door mat for all men—this is not meekness, but a degradation that affronts God who made men to His own image. So the task of the meek man is not to crush the thought of his mind, but to train it; not to break his will, but to strengthen it; not to drag out of him his affections, but to purify them. And in this way he shall grasp the golden cup of opportunity and drink of it whenever it is passed.

In this manner the meek "shall possess the land," because such a man shall command every resource within reach; he shall compel permanence of perfection; he shall have superabundant energy for proper moments, but with all there shall be a perfect unfolding of his soul in the calm of a fixed purpose, co-operating with Him who was the personification of meekness, who was indeed

Meek and lowly, pure and holy,

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't imagine that support of your church will gain for you a place in heaven. Your support of Christ is a much better guaranty.

Don't overestimate the importance of creeds, which have their place but are not as helpful to Christian living as the simple creeds of Christ, the only true example to be followed.

HYMNS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

The Ninety and Nine.

There were ninety and nine that safely lay
In the shelter of the fold,
But one was out on the hills away,
Far off from the gates of gold;
Away on the mountains, cold and bare,
Away from the shepherd's tender care.

Lord, thou hast here thy ninety and nine;
Are they not enough for thee?
But the Shepherd answered: "One of mine
Has wandered away from me.
And tho' the way be rough and steep,
I go to the desert to find my sheep."

But none of the ransomed ever knew
How deep were the waters crossed,
Nor how dark the night which the Lord went thro'
Ere he found the sheep that was lost.
Out in the desert he heard its cry;
'Twas sick, and helpless, and ready to die.

But all thro' the mountains, thunder riven,
And up from the rocky steep,
There rose a cry to the gates of heaven:
"Rejoice! I have found my sheep!"
And the angels echoed around the throne:
"Rejoice! for the Lord brings back his own!"

WHAT WINTER WHEAT IS DOING FOR SOUTHERN ALBERTA.

Splendid Crops on the Former Ranching Plains of Canadian West.

That portion of the country in Western Canada formerly recognized as ranching country has developed into one of the best winter wheat districts in the continent. Yields are quoted running from 30 to 60 bushels to the acre, and giving a return to the farmer of from $25 to $50 per acre. These lands are now selling at from $12 to $20 per acre, and pay well at that figure. H. Howes, of Magrath, Alberta, Western Canada, had 50 acres of land in wheat, which averaged 45 bushels to the acre; his yield of oats was 35 bushels. The value to him per acre of wheat was $35. J. F. Haycock of the same place says, "I had 65 acres of wheat, 35 acres of oats and 4 acres of barley. My average yield of oats to the acre was 80 bushels; wheat—winter—60 bushels and Red Fyfe 33 bushels, and barley 50 bushels. The value to me per acre was wheat, $28; oats, $32, and barley, $24." J. F. Bradshaw, of Magrath, had 1,030 acres of wheat in crop that averaged 39½ bushels to the acre, his oats 32 bushels, barley 53 bushels. He threshed 31,000 bushels of wheat from 540 acres. He also had 250 tons of sugar beets from 25 acres worth $5.62½ per ton. W. S. Sherod, of Lethbridge, says, "I came to Lethbridge from Souris, North Dakota, in April, 1907, having purchased 900 acres of land in this district last fall. I had 128 acres of Alberta Red Winter wheat, which was put in on breaking in the fall of 1906, which yielded forty-one and a half bushels to the acre, for which I received 87½ cents per bushel, which paid me $36.30 per acre. I had 190 acres "stubbled in;" that is, disced in on the stubble, which yielded 22 bushels to the acre at 87½ cents per bushel, which paid me $19.25 to the acre. I also had 350 acres of strictly volunteer crop, which it was intended to prepare in the summer; but when it was seen that it was a good-looking crop, it was allowed to go. From this we threshed 15 bushels to the acre, which paid us at the rate of 87½ cents per bushel, or $13.12 per acre. Our total crop yielded us 14,742 bushels of first-class wheat. Taking it as a whole, I consider that I had a first-class crop all through; and, taking into consideration the fact of part of the crop having been "stubbled in," and part strictly volunteer (which was never touched at all until the binder was put into it) I consider I had a heavy crop. I might say that I was in North Dakota five years, and I never grew as heavy a crop during that time. This is the 25th day of November, and my teams are still ploughing, and from the appearance of the weather, will be for some time yet." R. W. Bradshaw, of Magrath, says, "I had this year 400 acres in crop; viz., 200 acres of wheat and 200 acres in oats. My average yield of oats to the acre was 50 bushels, and wheat 22½ bushels. The value to me per acre for wheat was $19 and oats $17. The highest price obtained by me this year or offered me for my grain was for wheat 82 cents per bushel and $1.05 per hundred for oats. I also had 100 tons of hay worth $12 per ton, and will say my wheat was all volunteer this year. Lots of wheat is averaging from 50 to 60 bushels per acre on summer fallow, and on new breaking, when the breaking was done early in the spring." Writing from Spring Coulee, Alberta, W. L. Thompson says, "I had this year 3,000 acres in crop; viz., 2,000 acres of wheat and 1,000 acres of oats. My average yield of oats to the acre was 80 bushels and of wheat 35 bushels. The value to me per acre for wheat was $27 and for oats $15."

"So you are not in favor of having the government own the railways?"

"No," answered Farmer Corntossel. "It strikes me that the government has enough sinfulness of its own to keep it busy for the present."—Washington Star.

An Object Lesson.

"Miranda," said the mistress, "you are a good cook, and I just know that you are too good for us to keep any length of time. Some man will come along one of these days and induce you to marry him."

"Oh, no, mum," answered Miranda fervently. "I've lived with you and your 'usband too long to want ever to get married."

There are two conclusions to be drawn from the reply of the faithful servant. One is that she was loyal to her employers; the other is as it may be.—Chicago Post.

UP-TO-DATE DESIGNS FOR THE HOME DRESSMAKER

Shirt Waist or Blouse.

Every woman likes to own a variety of shirt waists, and plain simple ones such as this make an important feature in the collection. Linen, madras and a variety of inexpensive wash fabrics are worn at all seasons of the year, while the model also suits the taffeta and the wash flannels and the still lighter wools, such as cashmere, which are so serviceable during the colder months. The roll-over collar and the three quarter sleeves are ideally comfortable and are very apt to be becoming, but this season that style and the plain one with stock collar, and long regulation sleeves are equally correct and the model provides both.

The above pattern will be mailed to your address on receipt of 10 cents. Send all orders to the Pattern Department of this paper. Be sure to give both the number and size of pattern wanted, and write very plainly.

ished with a hem-stitched edge, so that while it is essentially simple it also can be made in many charming and attractive ways. The round yoke with the little gathered frill is becoming to most children, but there is a choice allowed between that and the square one and the sleeves can be made either long or short. In this case fine white batiste is made with a yoke of inserted tucking and frill of embroidery, but in the back view the little dress is shown made of flouncing with yoke of all-over embroidery so becoming a bit more elaborate in style.

How Her Life Was Saved When Bitten by a Large Snake.

How few people there are who are not afraid of snakes. Not long ago a harmless little garter snake fell on the wheel of an automobile which was being driven by a woman. The woman promptly fainted and the car, left to its own resources, ran into a stone wall and caused a serious accident.

The bite of a poisonous snake needs prompt attention. Mrs. K. M. Fishel, Route No. 1, Box 40, Dillsburg, Pa., tells how she saved her life when bitten by a large snake.

"On August 29, 1906, I was bitten on the hand twice by a large copperhead snake. Being a distance from any medical aid, as a last resort I used Sloan's Liniment, and to my astonishment found it killed all pain and was the means of saving my life. I am the mother of four children and am never without your Liniment."

On the Road.

"Guests without baggage are required to pay in advance," significantly remarked the new clerk at the hotel.

"How much baggage is required?" asked the plainly dressed traveler, who was signing his name in the register.

"Something more than that little old valise."

"Well, I have thirty-six cars of baggage, but it won't be here till Thursday of next week."

"Thirty-six cars of baggage? What kind?"

"Merely a circus and menagerie I happen to own."

"Oh, I beg your pardon!"

A WELL MAN AT 81.

The Interesting Experience of an Old Settler of Virginia.

Daniel S. Queen, Burrell Street, Salem, Va., says: "Years ago while lifting a heavy weight, a sudden pain shot through my back and after that I was in constant misery from kidney trouble. One spell kept me in bed six weeks. My arms and legs were stiff and I was helpless as a child. The urine was disordered and though I used one remedy after another, I was not helped until I used Doan's Kidney Pills and I was so bad then that the first box made only a slight change. Today, however, I am a well man, at 81, and I owe my life and health to the use of Doan's Kidney Pills."

Sold by all dealers. 50 cents a box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address: F. J. A terrible fire occured at Collinwood, a suburb of Cleveland, Ohio, on last Wednesday, when the ward school building was burned to the ground. One hundred and sixty-eight children and two teachers were burned alive. The loss of life was caused by an inability to get the doors open. The children burned were between the ages of eight and eleven years.

Hillery Shuff has been on the sick list.

Seats for next number of lecture course can now be reserved at Milliman's.

Miss Mae Silberg accompanied the Heilman family to their new abode and will abide with them for some time.

Edward Beams, the owner of the Bell Telephone Exchange of this place is enlarging his wire capacity in order to accomodate the increase of subscribers.

While in the act of coming down the flight of stairs at the post office, Jack Beams fell and cut a deep gash in his wrist on a piece of tin roofing which was laying edge upward against the building. An artery was cut and might have resulted in death if help had not been at hand.

The high water at this place breaks all records since the year 1887. The road leading south from this place was impassable and the cemetery bridge and the road east of here was nearly so. At this writing (Monday evening) the water is still raising and it is not known how high it will reach yet. Murray Bros. were working Sunday and Monday to keep the water from breaking through at the race near the dam, and the embankment farther up.

The condition of our side walks and street crossings is very bad during this muddy weather and makes it almost impossible for anybody to go about the town without getting in mud and water over shoe tops. Aged people find it difficult to even attend church services on this account. Strangers cannot enjoy a visit where they cannot move about to see the town. A few citizens are contemplating building cement walks in front of their residences this spring. Cement is reasonable in price and gravel and there is no reason why we could not have a good system of modern underfooting the same as other town of this size. If all would go together, material and labor could be obtained cheaper and some good level graded walks could be had all over town.

The many friends of the two young people, the chief actors in the matrimonial event, will be surprised when the Courier announces the marriage of Miss Faye Baker of Spencerville, and Mr. Will C. Henderson of this city, the deputy recorder of this county. The marriage license was secured late Saturday evening and immediately after the young people left for Spencerville, where, it is said, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Baker, the marriage ceremony was performed. The bride is well known here and is a charming young lady. Mr. Henderson is popular and has a wide circle of friends in Auburn and throughout the county. —Auburn Courier.

Mrs. Geo. T. Walter

Succumbs to the Fatal Disease, Spinal Meningatas, After a Short Illness.

The people of St. Joe and vicinity were deeply grieved last Friday morning to hear of the death of Mrs. Geo. Walter, who had been ill at the home of her parents at this place for the past three weeks. Mrs. Walter was a highly esteemed young women and respected by all who knew her.

The funeral services were held in the Methodist Protestant church at this place. Sunday afternoon, conducted by the pastor, Rev. S. Heilinger. Interment in Riverside cemetery. Undertakers Beums & Baker.

OBITUARY.

Pearl Mae Walters nee Koch was born May 30, 1884 in Concord township, DeKalb County, Ind., and died in St. Joe, Indiana, March 13, 1908, aged 23 years, 9 months and 13 days In early life she accepted Christ as her personal Saviour and on the 27th of June 1897, she united with the Methodist Protestant church at Fairview under the pastorate of C. W. Evans and remained an honored member of the same until called to her eternal home. On the 17th of February 1903, she was married to George T. Walter, with whom she shared the joys and cares of a home. She proved to be an excellent wife and affectionate mother. Two daughters were born to them. She leaves to mourn her early death, her deeply afflicted husband, the two dear little children, her father and mother, who so keenly feel the departure of their only daughter; besides many other relatives and friends. May a loving heavenly Father sustain them all and may all prepare well for a happy reunion where separation never comes.

CARD OF THANKS.

We desire to express our thanks to all our friends and neighbors, who during the sickness and death of our loved one have so kindly assisted us. May God bless you all.

A Lively Caucus.

The Democrats met, pursuant to the call made by the county chairman Miles Baxter, in Widney's opera house last Saturday afternoon, to select the delegates to the State, Congressional and Senatorial conventions. Committeeman Ex-sheriff Bleeks called the meeting to order at 2:30 p. m. Dr. Sheffer was chosen as the chairman and F. A. Jenkins as secretary of the caucus. Frank Sechler and J. C. Hull were elected tellers. In selecting the delegates for state convention Sam Mumaw received 28 votes and F. A. Jenkins 26. Congressional, Frank E. Rhoads 40 and Grover Curie 18. Senatorial, Frank Sechler and Sam Hindman. The meeting was largely attended and the interest shown was more than anticipated.

Onion sets, 5 cts. per quart at Milliman's.

We have heard from several of our statements which we have sent out, but but there are still a great many who have not responded. Don't put it off as the time is near at hand when your name will be removed from our mailing list and the accounts left for collection. Don't neglect this matter any longer. We don't want the money, but it is the ones that we owe. What can you do for us?

The last number of the lecture course was given last Saturday evening to a fair-sized crowd. The speaker, S. Platt Jones, deserved a full house. His impersonations were excellent and received hearty applauses. The lecture course this year has been made up of good talent and those who stayed away, have missed something good. The course was nearly as expensive as we have have had before, but the people seemed to be backward in taking hold of it. When the course was bought no one felt like backing it alone, so a paper was circulated among the business men and 22 signers were secured. We have not been informed how the course stands but the signers will have to dig down a little.

No Use to Die.

"I have found that there is no use to die of lung trouble as long as you can get Dr. King's New Discovery," says Mrs. J. P. White, of Rushboro, Pa. "I would not be alive to-day only for that wonderful medicine. It loosens up a cough quicker than anything else, and cures lung disease even after the case is pronounced hopeless." This most reliable remedy for coughs and colds, la-grippe, asthma, bronchitis and hoarseness, is sold under guarantee at H. Milliman's drug store. 50c. and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Telegraphic Information Gathered by the Few for the Enlightenment of the Many.

Fleet Reaches Magdalena Bay.

A wireless message just received by the government wireless station at San Diego, Cal., was to the effect that Rear Admiral Robley Evans and his big battleship fleet had arrived off Magdalena Bay. News that the big fleet has already arrived at Magdalena Bay comes as a big surprise. The itinerary of the long voyage, beginning with the start from Hampton Roads on December 16th last, did not call for the arrival of the ships at Magdlena Bay until Sunday, so with their arrival at the Mexican bay Wednesday night the fleet is almost four days ahead of time. It has been known for some weeks past that the "big sixteen" would arrive at its practicing ground ahead of time, but it was never suspected that such an excellent showing as this would be made. The important fact about it is the most of the four days' gain in time which was made on the last stretch of the voyage from Callao, South America. Previous to the visit at that port the fleet was kept on schedule time, making the various stops the full length called for in the itinerary.

Plan Wreck of Suburban Train.

Discharged section hands, mostly Italians, living in the railroad camp near Hegewisch, Ill., are now believed to have been responsible for the attempt made to wreck a Pennsylvania suburban train at 119th street, South Chicago. There were 200 passenger aboard, and a disastrous crash was averted by Special Policeman Thomas Yarrick, who discovered a pile of ties on the track and flagged the train. The engineer could not stop in the short distance, and when the locomotive struck the logs it was derailed. The train was bound for Chicago, and most of the passengers were section bosses and laborers from Indiana towns. Recently the railroad has been discharging the foreigners at work on the tracks between Hegewisch and South Chicago.

South Bend Firemen Have Close Call.

While battling with flames at the plant of the McHenry mill, house roofing manufacturers, at South Bend, Ind., three firemen narrowly escaped death when a barrel containing naphtha exploded, wrecking the entire structure. William Freeh, Lieutenant Joseph Shirk and Chief Wilfred Grant were blown thirty feet. With terrific force the barrel, which was constructed of iron, was hurled nearly three-quarters of a block, crashing into a box car on the Vandalia railroad tracks. None of the firemen was seriously injured. Hallice Swinehart was severely burned by gasoline about the hands and face while assisting the firemen.

Guiseppe Alia to Die.

Giuseppe Alia, who shot and killed Father Leo in St. Elizabeth's church in Denver, Col., February 23, was found guilty of murder in the first degree. Hanging was fixed by the jury as the penalty.

Divorce Papers Served on Thaw.

Papers in the suit of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw for the annulment of her marriage with Harry K. Thaw were served Friday upon Thaw at the insane asylum at Mattewan, N. Y.

Mauretania Makes New Record.

The steamer Mauretania established a new transatlantic record by making the trip in five days and five minutes.

Eight Hurt in Wreck.

Eight persons were injured at New Albany, Ind., when a Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern passenger train from Cincinnati ran into a trolley car near the bridge over the Ohio river. The injured live in New Albany.

Incendiary Fire in Toledo.

A fire supposed to be of incendiary origin in the furniture manufacturing plant of Keiser Brothers, Toledo, Ohio, entailed a loss of $75,000.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

The Mt. Pleasant district school near Warsaw is closed because of pupils sick with whooping cough. Twenty-one cases have developed.

Arthur Roberts, a young farmer near Noblesville, was struck by a falling tree, crushing him to the ground and breaking both legs.

Alfred Ragsdale and Otto Brauet, drivers in the Shirley mine near Linton, were caught between the mules and the cars and severely injured.

James Schee, a pioneer, is dead at his home north of Terre Haute, aged 76 years. He had a stone quarry in flatboat days, and shipped the product down the Wabash and the Ohio rivers to a market.

In spite of the fact that three physicians did all that they could to save her life, little Catherine Pickett, the 3-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Pickett, of Frankfort, slowly strangled to death. A grain of corn had entered the windpipe and all efforts to remove it were unavailing.

Joseph Hagan, coal driver, of Evansville, attempted to control his horse, which was suddenly seized of a paroxysm, and the animal caught his left hand between its teeth and mangled it so badly that amputation followed. The animal had to be knocked down before it would release its grip.

Fleming Dickerson, the oldest man of Hendricks County, is dead at his home in Pittsboro, at the age of 96 years. He is supposed to have been the oldest Mason in Indiana, and up to within a few days of his death was in possession of all his faculties. He was the father of four children, three of whom are living.

Richard Adams, foreman in Griffin's harness shop at Bloomington, received word of the death of his father in Germany, through whom he inherits $125,000. Adams did not know his father was so wealthy. He left Germany twenty-seven years ago. He will remain in the harness business notwithstanding his good fortune.

Ellis W. Foster, of Hobb's Station, while seated by a stove at his home, suddenly died. Seemingly he was in usual health, and he had spent the day shucking corn. Mr. Foster was 71 years old, and one of the wealthiest farmers in the Hoggs neighborhood. During the War of the Rebellion he served in the Thirty-seventh Indiana infantry.

The town of Oakland City has a new industry, a creamery which opens for business this week. The plant cost about $6,500 and has a capacity for handling milk from 600 cows. It is owned by Oakland City business men and farmers. This county now has three creameries and practically the output of all of them is sold in Princeton.

The last will and testament of Mrs. Rosanna Michael, widow of the wealthy manufacturer, who recently died at Laporte, was filed for probate, but objections were entered by some of the heirs. Mrs. Michael recently deeded nearly $30,000 worth of land to her daughter, Miss Anna Michael. In the will she divided her personal property among her children and grandchildren, but it is alleged that she showed partiality. Mrs. Elizabeth Hoops, of Kokomo, is one of the protesting heirs. The principal fight, it is understood, will be to set aside the deed to Miss Anna Michael.

The will of Walter E. Petty, the wealthy young business man and polo magnate of Muncie, who died a few weeks ago in Phoenix, Ariz., where he had gone for the benefit of his health, awards his entire estate to his mother, Mrs. James B. Fiske, and leaves his only other near relative, Alonzo, entirely out. The document expressly prescribes, not only that his brother shall receive none of the estate, but forbids his mother to bequeath any part of it on her death to Alonzo Petty, or to his heirs. He requested that a mausoleum, to cost $7,000, be erected at once in the Muncie cemetery.

An interesting relic of the log school house and log church days of Indiana that are now only a memory even in the minds of the older generations, stands near Coal City. It is old Salem church, built of the best logs in this part of the country back in 1840, and so well put together that although now abandoned for church purposes, it is still a most substantial structure. Now it is occupied only by passing tramps and gypsies, and it has taken a tilt on its stone foundation. The church was erected by the Christian congregation in the year when the popularity of the log cabin was shown by its being recorded in history as the year of the "log cabin and hard cider" campaign. The church, after being occupied by the Christian congregation thirty years, was sold in 1870 to the United Brethren, by whom it was named Salem church and was occupied for many years.

Mrs. Mary Bilby, of Terre Haute, was fatally shot while scuffling with Robert Booth, a youth of 16, for the possession of a target rifle.

The Ministerial Association has undertaken the work of establishing a Y. M. C. A. in Elkhart, only the railroads being represented by the present organization.

Fire in the Globe clothing store in Huntington resulted in $2,000 loss to stock, caused by a falling stovepipe. C. A. Edwards, brother-in-law of Congressman Rauch, owns the store.

Manual Gentry, 30 years old, of Folsomville, died suddenly while visiting at the home of B. F. Johnson of Booneville. The death is attributed to tuberculosis, the result of excessive use of cigarettes.

Olive, 10 years old, daughter of Perry Hulwick, of Goshen, after being disciplined by her mother, packed a grip, took her savings bank and ran away. After a long search the child was found at a farmhouse.

The Ohio Falls Iron Company at New Albany has resumed operations in its rolling mill department, giving employment to six hundred men. The mills have been operated only a few days since the beginning of the year.

Mrs. Amanda Corn, near Stendel, recently celebrated her ninety-ninth birthday anniversary. She was born near Augusta, and is the oldest living pioneer of the county. She has more relatives than any other person in Pike County, her descendants numbering nearly one hundred.

James Cuthbertson, said to be the oldest coal miner in point of service in the State, died of asthma at his home in Cardonia. He was 71 years old, and at the time of his death was employed as mine superintendent. He was employed in the mines of England and this country over sixty years, and he aided in developing the coal mining wealth of Indiana, working many years as a bank boss.

His nervous system shattered with almost continuous loss of sleep for three weeks, with attending poor health, John Riley shot himself twice in his store in Greencastle recently, but did not inflict fatal wounds. The bullets were fired from below his chin, but ranged forward and passed out just under the nose, not reaching the brain. He was found by his son Frank, who heard the shots fired. When taken to his home he told members of his family he did not want to recover. Mr. Riley has been in business in Greencastle for many years.

George W. Kellar, a well-known Democratic politician at Curtice, may lose his left eye as a result of a peculiar accident that befell him recently. Kelair's son, a lad of 14 years, patented a miniature airship, the device being constructed of a cigar box and some old clock-works. The senior Kellar entered the room while the boy was experimenting. Startled by the intrusion, the boy lost his hold on the machine, and it dashed across the room, striking Kellar in the head in the region of the eye. The machine continued to fly about the room, striking pieces of furniture and demolishing it, until the works of the clock ran down.

Carr Service, the 6-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. William Service, of Greenfield, recently saved the life of his 2-year-old sister by remarkable presence of mind for one so young. The parents were at a neighbor's, and the children were alone at the time, when in some manner the baby girl's dress caught on fire from a gas stove. Instead of calling for assistance the boy picked up a rug from the floor and wrapped it about his sister, smothering the flames. Fearing he had not entirely extinguished the flames he took his sister into the kitchen and threw water on her, then called for assistance. The child was severely burned, but its condition is not serious.

T. F. Vandegrift, of Shelbyville, known as the inventor of Shelby County, has just obtained a patent for his latest invention, a shaft-coupling clutch, which is now used in four of the local factories. Mr. Vandegrift's first invention, patented in 1870, was a draft equalizer, from which he realized $400. He then invented the clod fender, which he sold for $2,000. In 1874 he invented the three-horse equalizer, getting $800 for this. Next was a two-horse corn plow, which brought him $2,500. He then invented the vibrating tongue for a cultivator, making $500 off of this invention. Mr. Vandegrift was the inventor of the wire-fence machine which is used for weaving wire fences. He made $10,000 on this invention. He is the inventor of nine wrenches. One is used all over the world and thousands of them are being manufactured every week. He invented the two shaft coupling compression, and has sold this invention to Albert J. Ott and has realized $3,000 on this.

FUTILE ATTEMPT TO KILL KING OF NORWAY

Supposed Lunatic Fires Fusillade of Shots Into the Royal Castle at Christiania.

IS ARRESTED BY THE POLICE.

Bullets Are Imbedded in Walls, but Norse Monarch and Queen Maud Are Absent.

An attempt Tuesday to kill the King of Norway proved a failure. A Swede, apparently insane, bombarded the royal castle at Christiania with a rifle. He fired a dozen bullets, several of which crashed through the windows and imbedded themselves in the interior walls of the castle. The man was seized by the police and disarmed. At the police station he declared that it was his intention to kill King Haakon. He still had forty or fifty cartridges in his pockets. King Haakon and Queen Maud were not in the castle at the time of the shooting, having moved recently to the royal residence at Voxenkollern. None of the palace officials or servants was injured.

King Haakon VII. of Norway, who has occupied the throne of that country since Nov. 18, 1905, is the second son of King Frederick of Denmark. He was born Aug. 3, 1872, and shortly after the dissolution of the union of Norway and Sweden was elected ruler of the former country by the Norwegian Storthing. He accepted the crown of Norway through his grandfather, the late King Christian of Denmark.

King Haakon married Princess Maud, the third daughter of King Edward of Great Britain, July 22, 1896, and they have one son, the Crown Prince Olaf, who was born July 2, 1903.

WANTS LAND WORTH MILLIONS.

Farmer Starts Suit Against Residents of Pelham Manor, N. Y.

Edmund C. Jessup, a farmer living in northern Connecticut, has brought suit against the holders of 50 acres of land in Pelham Manor, N. Y., on which are built the homes of a number of prominent New Yorkers, to recover the property which he claims belongs to him. The property is valued at $3,000,000. Jessup's father owned the property and used it as a farm until he died and left it to the present plaintiff and his three sisters. Some years later Jessup disappeared from home and his sisters, thinking him dead, sold the property, which has since rapidly gained in value. The three sisters are now dead and, neither of them having ever married, Jessup is the sole heir. His suit is based on the fact that he owned an undivided one-fourth of the land and is now the sole heir of his sisters and that he never consented to the sale of the property.

WAR ON LIQUOR.

How the Railroads Are Enforcing Temperance Among Employes.

All over the land railroads are frowning more and more upon the use of intoxicating liquors by employes. A new chapter is being written in the history of the remarkable prohibition wave that is sweeping the country.

The first of the new year 25,000 employes of the Chicago and Northwestern railroad became total abstainers. A few weeks later the management of the Baltimore and Ohio issued an order prohibiting its employes who had anything to do with the running of trains from using intoxicants whether on or off duty. Thousands of men were affected by the order. Other railroads have adopted a similar policy until now it is estimated that nearly 1,000,000 railroad men are living under what amounts to a practical rule of total abstinence.

WORK OF CONGRESS

Immediately after the opening prayer the Senate Thursday morning adjourned out of respect of the memory of the late Senator Proctor of Vermont, who died the previous day. Without transacting any business the House adjourned out of respect to the memory of Senator Proctor.

-:—:-

The Senate Friday passed the army pay bill increasing the pay of officers from 5 to 25 per cent and the average pay of enlisted men 40 per cent. Mr. Depew spoke in favor of the Aldrich currency bill. The House unanimously adopted a resolution to investigate the charges brought by Representative Lilley of Connecticut of corrupt influences upon members of the House naval affairs committee in connection with authorizations for submarine torpedo boats. The bill to pay to the archbishop of Manila, of the Roman Catholic church, $403,000 for damages to church property by the forces of the United States was passed.

-:—:-

The Senate was not in session Saturday. A part of the session of the House was devoted to the consideration of private claims bills. A number were passed, after which the remainder of the day was given to eulogies of the late Representative Campbell Stemp of Virginia. As a further mark of respect the House adjourned until Monday.

-:—:-

Senator Bailey of Texas, a member of the Finance Committee, which reported the Aldrich currency bill in the Senate Monday, spoke in opposition to the measure. The Senate also spent over an hour in debating the Frye bill providing that materials and supplies shipped from the United States for the Panama Canal shall be transported only in American vessels. Resolutions of sorrow upon the announcement of the death of Representative Adolph Meyer of Louisiana were adopted, and at 4:30 o'clock the Senate adjourned as a further mark of respect to his memory. The House was in session but a few minutes, adjourning at 12:12 upon announcement of Mr. Meyer's death.

-:—:-

Cotton as a basis for the issuance of treasury notes in times of money stringency was the chief feature of a speech in the Senate Tuesday on the pending currency bill by Senator McLaurin of Mississippi. Senator Gallinger secured an agreement to vote on the ocean mail ship subsidy bill March 20. After passing several bills on the calendar the Senate adjourned. Consideration of the postoffice appropriation bill was resumed in the House. A speech by Mr. Hamilton of Michigan upholding the right of the federal government to control corporations and sustaining the President in his attitude toward them, was the feature of the day's proceedings. Small of North Carolina and Finley of South Carolina attacked the proposition to increase the pay for ocean mail service on the ground that it was a subterfuge for a ship subsidy.

-:—:-

A message from the Presidents and reports from the committee on military affairs on the Brownsville affray consumed the time of the Senate during the early part of the session Wednesday. A brief debate brought out a statement by Senator Warren, chairman of the committee on military affairs, that a bill will soon be introduced for the reinstatement of the discharged colored soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Regiment under certain conditions. The Aldrich bill was discussed by Senator Clarke of Arkansas, who declared that he would vote for neither the Aldrich nor the Bailey substitute. After the passage of several bills on the calendar the Senate adjourned. Persistent assaults on the postoffice appropriation bill in the House resulted in the amplification of that measure in many important parts despite the protests of Chairman Overstreet and the committee. The letter carriers finally won their fight for $1,200 salaries. The House also allowed an additional $25,000 for clerks in third class offices and $15,000 additional for contract stations. There were incorporated in the bill a provision prohibiting the transmission through the mails of intoxicating liquors, which was later modified to include cocaine and its derivatives. Altogether the appropriations carried by the bill were increased $1,223,000.

NATIONAL CAPITOL NOTES.

James Speyer, banker, had a long conference with the President on business conditions. He declined to discuss the details of the interview.

N. B. Thistlewood was sworn in as a member of the House of Representatives from the Twenty-fifth District of Illinois in succession to the late George W. Smith.

Secretary Metcalf received from Admiral Washington L. Capps, chief constructor of the navy, a report refuting criticisms which have appeared regarding naval construction.

The naval board, headed by Commander Frank Fletcher, which examined into the recent drownings of Privates Steenersen and McIntosh of the Marine Corps at Newport, R. I., has reported that in its opinion the deaths were purely accidental.

A subcommittee of the House committee on labor gave a hearing on the bill introduced by Chairman Gardner, limiting to eight hours a day the time of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States.

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

A. CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER XV.

When supper was over the crone, who was addressed by Girdlestone as Jorrocks, led the way upstairs and showed Kate to her room. If the furniture of the dining room had been Spartan in its simplicity, this was even more so, for there was nothing in it save a small iron bedstead, much rusted from want of use, and a high wooden box on which stood the simplest toilet requisites. In spite of the poverty of the apartment Kate had never been more glad to enter her luxurious chamber at home. The little carpetless room was a haven of rest where she would be left, for one night at least, to her own thoughts. As she lay in bed, however, she could hear far away the subdued murmur of Girdlestone's voice and the shrill tones of the old woman. They were in deep and animated converse. Though they were too far distant for her to distinguish a word, something told her that their talk was about herself, and the same instinct assured her that it boded her little good.

When Kate awoke in the morning it was some little time before she could realize where she was, or recall the events which had made such a sudden change in her life. The small window of her apartment was covered by a dirty muslin blind. She rose, and, drawing it aside, looked eagerly out. From what she had seen the night before she had hoped that this prison to which she had been conveyed might make amends for its loneliness by some degree of natural beauty. The scene which now met her eyes soon dispelled any expectations of the sort. The avenue with its trees lay on the other side of the house. From her window nothing was visible but a dreary expanse of bogland and mudbanks, stretching down to the sea. At high tide this enormous waste of dreariness and filth was covered by the water, but at present it lay before her in all its naked hideousness, the very type of dullness and of desolation. Here and there a few scattered reeds, or an unhealthy greenish scum upon the mud, gave a touch of color to the scene, but for the most part the great plain was all of the same somber mud tint, with its monotony broken only by the white flecks where the swarms of gulls and kittiewakes had settled in the hope of picking up whatever had been left by the receding tide. Away across the broad surface a line of sparkling foam marked the fringe of the ocean, which stretched away to the horizon.

A mile or two to the eastward of her Kate saw some sign of houses, and a blue smoke which flickered up into the air. This she guessed to be the fishing village of Lea Claxton, which the driver had mentioned the night before. She felt as she gazed at the little hamlet, and the masts of the boats in front of it, that she was not alone in the world, and that even in this strange and desolate place there were honest hearts to whom as a last resource she could appeal.

She was still standing at the window when there came a knocking at the door, and she heard the voice of the old woman asking if she were awake. "Breakfast is ready," she said, "and the master is a-wondering why you bean't down."

On this summons Kate hastened her toilet and made her way down the old winding stair to the room in which they had supped the night before. Surely Girdlestone must have had a heart of flint not to be melted by the sight of that fair, fresh face. His features set as hard as adamant as she entered the room, and he looked at her with eyes which were puckered and angry.

"You are late," he said coldly. "You must remember that you are not in Eccleston square. You are here to be disciplined, and disciplined you shall be."

"I am sorry," she answered. "I think I must have been tired by our journey."

The vast room looked even more comfortless and bleak than on the preceding evening. On the table was a plate of ham and eggs. John Girdlestone served out a portion, and pushed it in her direction. She sat down on one of the rough wooden chairs and ate listlessly, wondering how all this was going to end.

After breakfast Girdlestone ordered the old woman out of the room, and, standing in front of the fire with his long legs apart and his hands behind his back, he told her in harsh concise language what his intentions were.

"I had long determined," he said, "that if you ran counter to my wishes, and persisted in your infatuated affection for that scapegrace, I should remove you to some secluded spot where you might reconsider your conduct and form better resolutions for the future. This country house answered the purpose admirably, and as an old servant of mine, Mrs. Jorrocks, chanced to reside in the neighborhood, I had warned her that at any time I might come down and should expect to find things ready. Your rash and heartless conduct has, however, precipitated matters, and we have arrived before her preparations were complete. Our future arrangements will therefore be less primitive than they are at present. Here you shall remain, young lady, until you show signs of repentance, and of a willingness to undo the harm you have done."

"If you mean until I consent to marry your son, then I shall live and die here," the girl said bravely.

"That rests with yourself. As I said before, you are under discipline here, and you may not find existence such a bed of roses as it was in Eccleston square."

"Can I have my maid?" Kate asked. "I can hardly stay here with no one but the old woman in the house."

"Rebecca is coming down. I had a telegram from Ezra to that effect, and he will himself join us for a day or two in each week."

"Ezra here!" Kate cried in horror. Her chief consolation through all her troubles had been that there seemed to be some chance of getting rid of her terrible suitor.

"And why not?" the old man asked angrily. "Are you so bitter against the lad as to grudge him the society of his own father?"

Kate was saved from further reproaches by the entrance of the old woman to clean the table. The last item of intelligence, however, had given her a terrible shock, and at the same time had filled her with astonishment. What could the fast-living, comfort-seeking man about town want in this dreary abode? She knew Ezra well, and was sure that he was not a man to alter his ways of life or suffer discomfort of any kind without some very definite object. It seemed to her that this was a new mesh in the net which was being drawn round her.

When her guardian had left the room Kate asked Mrs. Jorrocks for a sheet of paper. The crone shook her head and wagged her pendulous lip in derision.

"Mister Girdlestone thought as you would be after that," she said. "There ain't no paper here, nor pens, neither, nor ink, neither."

"What, none! Dear Mrs. Jorrocks, do have pity on me, and get me a sheet, however old and soiled. See, here is some silver! You are very welcome to it if you will give me the materials for writing one letter."

Mrs. Jorrocks looked longingly with her bleared eyes at the few shillings which the girl held out to her, but she shook her head. "I dursn't do it," she said. "It's as much as my place is worth."

"Then I shall walk down to Bedsworth myself," said Kate angrily. "I have no doubt that the people in the postoffice will let me sit there and write it."

The old hag laughed hoarsely to herself until the scraggy sinews of her withered neck stood out like whipcord. She was still chuckling and coughing when the merchant came back into the room.

"What then?" he asked sternly, looking from one to the other. He was himself constitutionally averse to merriment, and he was irritated by it in others. "Why are you laughing, Mrs. Jorrocks?"

"I was a-laughing at her," the woman wheezed, pointing with tremulous fingers. "She was askin' me for paper, and sayin' as she would go and write a letter at the Bedsworth postoffice."

"You must understand once for all," Girdlestone roared, turning savagely upon the girl, "that you are cut off entirely from the outer world. I shall give you no loophole which you may utilize to continue your intimacy with undesirable people. I have given orders that you should not be provided with either paper or ink."

Poor Kate's last hope seemed to be fading away. Her heart sank within her, but she kept a brave face, for she did not wish him to see how his words had stricken her. She had a desperate plan in her head, which would be more likely to be successful could she but put him off his guard.

She spent the morning in her own little room. About one o'clock she heard the clatter of hoofs and the sound of wheels on the drive. Going down she found that it was a cart which had come from Bedsworth with furniture. There were carpets, a chest of drawers, tables, and several other articles, which the driver proceeded to carry upstairs, helped by John Girdlestone. The old woman was in the upper room. It seemed to Kate that she might never again have such an opportunity of carrying out the resolve which she had formed. She put on her bonnet and began to stroll listlessly about in front of the door, picking a few straggling leaves from the neglected lawn. Gradually she sauntered away in this manner to the head of the avenue, and then taking one swift, timid glance around, she slipped in among the trees, and made the best of her way, half-walking, half-running, down the dark winding drive.

Oh, the joy of the moment when the great white house which had already become so hateful to her was obscured among the trees behind her! She had some idea of the road which she had traversed the night before. Behind her were all her troubles. In front the avenue gate, Bedsworth and freedom. She would send both a telegram and a letter to Dr. Dimsdale, and explain to him her exact situation. If the kind-hearted and energetic physician once knew of it, he would take care that no harm befell her. She could return then, and face with a light heart the worst which her guardian could do to her. Here was the avenue entrance now, the high lichen-eaten stone pillars, with the battered device upon the top. The iron gate between was open. With a glad cry she quickened her pace, and in another moment would have been in the high road, when——

"Now then, where are you a-comin' to?" cried a gruff voice from among the bushes which flanked the gate.

The girl stopped all in a tremble. In the shadow of the trees there was a camp stool, and on the camp stool sat a savage looking man, dressed in a dark corduroy suit, with a blackened clay pipe stuck in the corner of his mouth. His weather-beaten mahogany face was plentifully covered with smallpox marks, and one of his eyes was sightless and white from the effects of the same disease. He rose now, and interposed himself between her and the gate.

"My good man," she said in a trembling voice, for his appearance was far from reassuring, "I wish to go past and to get to Bedsworth. Here is a shilling, and I beg that you will not detain me."

Her companion stretched out a very dirty hand, took the coin, spun it up in the air, caught it, bit it, and finally plunged it into the depths of his trouser pockets. "No road this way, missy," he said, "I've given my word to the guv'nor, and I can't go back from it."

"You have no right to detain me," Kate cried angrily. "I have good friends in London who will make you suffer for this."

She was only a dozen yards from the lane which led to freedom, so she made a quick little feminine rush in the hope of avoiding this dreadful sentinel which barred her passage. He caught her round the waist, however, and hurled her back with such violence that she staggered across the path and would have fallen had she not struck violently against a tree.

Kate turned and retraced her steps slowly and sadly up the avenue. As she glanced back she saw a gaunt, hard-featured woman trudging up the lane with a tin can in her hand. Lonely and forlorn, but not yet quite destitute of hope, she turned to the right among the trees, and pushed her way through bushes and brambles to the boundary of the Priory grounds. It was a lofty wall, at least nine feet in height, with a coping that bristled with jagged pieces of glass. Kate walked along the base o it, her fair skin all torn and bleeding with scratches from the briars, until she satisfied herself that there was no break in it. There was one small wooden door on the side which was skirted by the railway line, but it was locked and impassable. The only opening through which a human being could pass was that which was guarded in the manner she had seen. The sickening conviction took possession of her mind that without wings it was an utter impossibility either to get away or to give the least information to any one in the world as to where she was or what might befall her.

When she came back to the house, tired and disheveled after her journey of exploration, Girdlestone was standing by the door to receive her with a sardonic smile upon his thin lips. "How do you like the grounds, then?" he asked, with the nearest approach to hilarity which she had ever heard from him. "And the ornamental fencing? and the lodge keeper? How did you like them all?" Kate tried for a moment to make some brave retort, but it was a useless attempt. Her lips trembled, her eyes filled, and with a cry of grief and despair which might have moved a wild beast, she fled to her room, and, throwing herself upon her bed, burst into such scalding tears as few women are ever called upon to shed.

CHAPTER XVI.

It would be impossible to describe the suspense in which Tom Dimsdale lived during these weeks. In vain he tried in every manner to find some way of tracing the fugitives. He wandered aimlessly about London from one inquiry office to another, telling his story and appealing for assistance. He advertised in papers and cross-questioned every one who might know anything of the matter. There were none, however, who could help him, or throw any light upon the mystery. No one at the office knew anything of the movements of the senior partner. To all inquiries Ezra replied that he had been ordered by the doctors to seek complete repose in the country.

His father became seriously anxious about the young fellow's health. He ate nothing, and his sleep was much broken. Both the old people tried to inculcate patience and moderation.

"That fellow, Ezra Girdlestone, knows where they are," Tom would cry, striding wildly up and down the room with unkempt hair and clenched hands. "I will have his secret, if I have to tear it out of him."

"Steady, lad, steady!" the doctor replied to one of these outbursts. "There is nothing to be gained by violence. They are on the right side of the law at present, and you will be on the wrong if you do anything rash. The girl could have written if she were uncomfortable."

"Ah, so she could. She must have forgotten us. How could she, after all that has passed?"

"Let us hope for the best, let us hope for the best," the doctor would say soothingly. Yet it must be confessed that he was considerably staggered by the turn which things had taken. He had seen so much of the world in his professional capacity that he had become a very reliable judge of character. All his instincts told him that Kate Harrison was a true-hearted and well-principled girl. It was not in her nature to leave London and never to send a single line to her friends to tell them where or why she had gone. There must, he was sure, be some good reason for her silence, and this reason resolved itself into one of two things—either she was ill and unable to hold a pen, or she had lost her freedom and was restrained from writing to them. The last supposition seemed to the doctor to be the more serious of the two.

Had he known the instability of the Girdlestone firm, and the necessity they were under of getting ready money, he would at once have held the key to the enigma. He had no idea of that, but in spite of his ignorance he was deeply distrustful of both father and son. He knew and had often deplored the clause in John Harston's will by which the ward's money reverted to the guardian. Forty thousand pounds was a bait which might tempt even a wealthy man into crooked paths.

SELF-MASTERY.

By Rev. Junius B. Remensnyder

But I keep under my body and bring it into subjection.—I. Cor. ix. 27.

Every man is a king, and to him is given the scepter of a kingdom. His body is full of vital forces and his spirit of vast and turbulent powers. If he controls, masters, holds these well in hand his will be a successful and happy life. But if he allows these powers to run wild, to know no firm rein, to riot at caprice, his life will be a failure and wreck.

The apostle here, first of all, calls attention to the need of bodily self-mastery. "I keep under my body." The body is our most excellent servant, but a tyrannous master. Its appetites and passions must be governed, subjected to discipline. That the body is largely the seat of temptation and that, as our text says, "It must be kept under" is the secret of the value of the church season of Lent. It means that it is better to deny the body than to lose the soul.

Again, keep under the heart, the affections and temper. The heart feeds the engines of the soul and is the nursing fire that moves it to deeds. A real man will be master of his thoughts, feelings and desires. That the world does not see them does not concern him. He sees them and he will not tolerate that which is not clean, just and noble.

Here it is, in this inner secret chamber, that men and women are made or unmade. As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he. He who keeps under discipline his impulses and affections will be master of his words. He will not be at the mercy of his temper. He will not speak hasty words. His outbreaks will not pain those who love him. He will be cool under public stress, judicious in speech, calm under trial, kind and gentle in his home. In any test he will illustrate the Scripture: "He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city."

To a true self-mastery we must keep under the spirit of selfishness. This tendency is one of the most insidious and powerful in human nature. The great majority of people almost unconsciously lead selfish lives. Their hearts do not go out in true brotherhood. They do not enter into fellowship with need and suffering. They "pass by on the other side" of scenes of sorrow and woe.

Sir Philip Sidney, as writer, soldier and courtier, was the admiration of his age. But his noblest act was when dying from a bullet wound on the field of battle, he instantly handed the water brought to quench his burning thirst to a wounded soldier carried by whom he saw looking eagerly at it, with the remark, "They necessity is yet greater than mine." Such fine self-repression can come alone from a discipline of obedience to the rule: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

The struggle for self-mastery is the secret of individual fate. Victory or defeat, salvation or ruin hang on the issue. This is the temptation that puts every man, woman and youth to the test, to tell of what moral stuff they are made.

"It is ruin to anyone," says Ruskin, "if he lets himself alone, does not keep himself under the curb and spur of discipline."

So Virgil in Dante's great poem first takes the poet through all the experiences of hell and purgatory and then leaves him to be his own guide, saying: "Master over thyself I now crown and mitre thee."

To gain this self-control requires a sharp fight against our lower nature and success can alone be won with the the help of God. Here religion offers her supreme aids: Prayer, the Bible and the church, with her uplift to heaven's altar, and perilous and wonderful is that course before every soul—life on earth, with its dangers and triumphs and then the spirit's flight amid the stars.

And the first requisite needed for this great venture is self-mastery, that thou hast thyself, body and spirit, all thy powers and fates under wise and firm control.

THOUGHTLESSNESS.

By Rev. George D. Sparks.

Israel doth not know; my people doth not consider.—Isaiah 1, 3.

I suppose more unhappiness and distress are occasioned in this workaday world by thoughtlessness than anyone dreams of. Take a majority of the tragedies which wreck human life. If we were to go back far enough we would find that a little thought, a little consideration, would have caused it all to turn out differently and the disgrace, the shame, the bitterness would never have happened.

If we could keep the words "don't be thoughtless" ever before our mind's eye we would be changed men and women, and, as a result, would find this world a very different place to live in.

In that last disagreement we had with our neighbor, could it not have been avoided by a little thought on our part? We would have refrained from alluding to that old sore or kept silent about that transaction which really was no concern of ours. No, just as Isaiah said long, long ago, we did not stop to think or weigh our speech, but thoughtlessly, roughly, cruelly spoke the unkind word and so infuriated our neighbor, making him our enemy instead of our friend.

How many of us are thoughtful? The old excuse, "I didn't know; I didn't think," will not undo the past. We ought to have known; we ought to have thought. We will not have the audacity to offer that excuse when he stand in the presence of the Master. Are parents considerate of their children? Are children thoughtful for their parents? Do husbands take into account the feelings of their wives? Do wives study the wishes of their husbands? Do men and women—take them as you find them—ever ponder over the duty they owe to their God? I am sure the majority of us will wince as we think of the wrongs and injuries done through our thoughtlessness. We have injured that brother, and now there is no chance of our ever telling him we are sorry; that we did not mean what we said.

We shudder at the petty cruelty we have meted out to those who were wearied and burdened with the heat of the day. Through our inconsiderate neglect to render a helping hand we have driven back into despair other souls trying to escape their unhappy surroundings, and through our lack of attention we have pained and grieved hearts infinitely nobler than our own when they have been trying to help us.

Ah, yes, how easy life would be if we all made up our minds to be more thoughtful and considerate. How its friction, its wear and tear, its ragged edges would largely disappear.

Christ, a short time before His death, drew a marvelous picture of the last judgment. It forms a striking commentary upon the words of Isaiah. Who are they that are praised, and why do they win the approval of the Judge? They who have been unselfish, considerate, merciful are the chosen ones, because they have practiced that virtue of thoughtfulness which goes so far toward making a new heaven and a new earth.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't expect religion to do much for you unless you do all you can for your religion.

Don't place too much stress on doctrine. Sound doctrine even can not cure a diseased heart.

Don't try to have faith without prayer, for faith dies quickly when one fails to live close to God.

Don't reject what you can not immediately understand regarding the plan of salvation. Remember that finite mind is not supposed fully to comprehend infinite purpose.

HYMNS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

At the Door.

O Jesus, thou art standing,
Outside the fast closed door,
In lowly patience waiting
To pass the threshold o'er;
We bear the name of Christians,
His name and sign we bear;
O, shame, thrice shame upon us,
To keep him standing there!

O Jesus, thou art knocking:
And lo! that hand is scarred,
And thorns thy brow encircle,
And tears thy face have marred;
O love that passeth knowledge,
So patiently to wait:
O sin that hath no equal,
So fast to bar the gate.

O Jesus, thou are pleading
In accents meek and low—
"I died for you, my children,
And will ye treat me so?"
O Lord, with shame and sorrow
We open now the door;
Dear Savior, enter, enter,
And leave us nevermore!

Remedy for Anarchism.

It is encouraging to learn from the statement of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that there is already enough law on the statute books to deal very largely with the problem of anarchy in this country simply by enforcing the present laws and without waiting for fresh legislation. It is almost a waste of time to refer to the senselessness of the anarchist's creed or to the constant menace that he is to society. It has been proved only too often that forbearance is not a virtue that he appreciates. He is as irresponsible as any other lunatic and there is never any telling the next point at which he is going to break out. Americans are a long time suffering people and too apt to pass lightly over crime of all sorts. But the anarchist with his crazy doctrines has shown in the past few years that nobody is safe from him from the President in the White House to the Priest at the altar. The time has come to deal with him swiftly and harshly. Where it is possible to deport him, that action should be satisfactory to this country, but where it is not, life imprisonment on conviction is none too drastic a method of removing him from the temptation of a senseless murder. Secretary Strauss says that the police do not seem to appreciate the fact that there is already a sufficient law against alien anarchists. They are excluded from the country along with habitual criminals and persons convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude. They can be picked up at any time within three years of their entry to this country and summarily deported to the land whence they came. The police are now waking up to the existence of this law and it is being brought to their attention by the immigration inspectors under the special orders of the Secretary of Commerce. Already several arrests have been made under this law and municipalities all over the country. The local police in every city know their own alien anarchists and habitual criminals and in the present crusade they have an excellent chance to get rid of them by turning them over to the immigration authorities. Perhaps in time we will get the life imprisonment law for anarchists, too.

New and Greater production of Gen. Lew Wallace's Mighty Biblical Romance "Ben-Hur," to be Staged at the Majestic Theatre, Fort Wayne.

When the curtain is drawn at the Majestic Theatre, Fort Wayne on Monday evening, March 30, the most elaborate, magnificent and historically correct production will be disclosed that has ever charmed and enthralled a theatre audience, for this will be the premiere of the Chicago Auditorium production of "Ben-Hur" in Fort Wayne. At that time hundreds from this vicinity to witness it. No doubt the same excellent patronage will mark the forthcoming engagement.

"Ben-Hur", with its lustrous Star of Bethlehem, its camels, Arabian steeds, Oriental trappery, and mimic splendor of the "gorgeous East" is beyond dispute the most elaborate spectacle ever staged in the history of the world. Its series of 17 scenes present to the eye a feast of multifarous beauty and variety, all set to a symphonic accompaniment of graceful music. The exciting episodes, such as the galley scene with its horde of chained slaves; the sea-fight, the rescue in mid-sea and the thrilling race with two chariots and eight horses, combined with the picturesque scenes illustrating the Wise Men in the desert the moonlit lake in the Orchard of Palms where Ben-Hur and Iras enjoy seclusion and make love in Iras' barge the palm-waving worshippers on Mt. Olivet, and the Grove of Daphne with its many nymphs dancing in the skins of beasts to the music of kissing cymbals—simply captivate audiences wherever it is enacted.

"Ben-Hur" appeals to all classes, all ages and all denominations of the Christian faith, and draws to it, as to a place of worship hundreds of thousands who seldom, if ever, set foot within a theatre. The person of the Saviour is never made to appear bodily in the play, yet in the scene in which the healing of the lepers is implied the approach of the Master is indicated by a stream of pure white light amazing in its effectiveness. This scene is the most remarkable of the play and is heightened in impressiveness by the singing of a chorus of one hundred voices, joining in "Hosannas" of praise to the Lord.

The engagement of "Ben-Hur" is for three nights only, opening on Monday, March 30, with a special matinee performance on Wednesday, April 1. Seats for the "Ben-Hur" season will be placed on sale Thursday March 26, and the scale of prices will be from 50c to $2.00. Mail orders (accompanied by remittance) will be filled in order of receipt. All communications should be addressed to Manager Rice of the Majestic Theatre, Fort Wayne.

Sleep

Sleep is nature's rebuilding period, when the energy used by the brain, muscles and organs is renewed. If you lose sleep, your system is robbed of the strength sleep should give. Continued loss of sleep multiplies this loss until you become a physical wreck. Dr. Miles' Nervine quiets the irritated nerves and brings refreshing, invigorating sleep. Nervine contains no opiates, and therefor leaves no bad after-effects.

"For over two years I suffered untold agonies; my friends thought I was going crazy. I could not sleep nor rest at all. I tried different doctors, but failed to find relief. My head would ache all the time; I was like one drunk; could not concentrate my mind, and was so restless and worried that sleep was out of the question. After taking one bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine I felt wonderfully changed. I am now on my third bottle and am gaining all the time. I can lie down and sleep like a child, and am able to do my work." Miss Lora Hull returned Thursday from a week's visit with relatives at South Bend. She was accompanied home by her graddmother, Mrs. Walter, who had been visiting at the above place the past six weeks.

Mrs. Mary Betz and Mrs Ida Woodcox were hostesses for the Rebekah lodge, Friday evening. The guuests went on a tour and engaged in a Tourists contest. Miss Dema Ridgway winning the prize. Popcorn was served and a jolly time was had.

Trustee Wallace Abel of Newville township, DeKalb county has discovered that in 1863, there were 367 persons of school age in his township, while today there are but 187—a reduction of one-half in forty-five years, and there were then seven schools instead of four as at present. There are to-day however, more voters and more adult women in the township than in 1863, demonstrating that the modern family is much smaller than in the early days.—DeKalb Co. Herald.

Parents the country over must mourn and sympathize with the scores of families bereaved through the awful disaster when the Collinwood public school was burned. The lesson of the matter is that the same thing may happen in any community at any time and do expense is too great and no precaution too elaborate to prevent it. This is a rich country and if ground were $100 a square foot, there should never be a school house built more than two stories nigh. One would be better. Construction should be fireproof to the last degree and fire patrol should be kept up as constantly as on the stage of a theatre The result would be well worth the expense.

Do Not Crowd the Season.

The first warm days of spring bring with them a desire to get out and enjoy the exhilarating air and sunshine. Children that have been housed up all winter are brought out and you wonder where they all come from. The heavy winter clothing is thrown aside and many shed their flannels. Then a cold wave comes and people say that grip is epidemic. Colds at this season are more dangerous than in mid winter, as there is much more danger of pneumonia. Take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, however; and you will have nothing to fear. It always cures, and we have never known a cold to result in pneumonia when it was used. It is pleasant and safe to take. Children like it. For sale by H Milliman, St. Joe; F. R. Bowman, Spencerville.

Candidates.

John Hebel and E. W. Atkinson of Auburn are candidates for clerk of the circuit court on the democratic ticket. The former is a member of the firm of Hebel Bros of that place and the latter is now deputy clerk. Ralph W. Thomas of Auburn, is a candidate for sheriff and Geo. Grund also of Auburn, a candidate for recorder, both on the democratic ticket Auburn has four candidates for county offices on the "rooster's" ticket. Garrett wants the nomination for either clerk or sheriff and as their man for clerk, Herschel W. Thomas, is unwilling to make the run, it looks as though they would have to try for sheriff.

PERUNA EDITORIAL NO. 2.

Dr. Hartman has claimed for many years that Peruna is an EXCELLENT CATARRH REMEDY. Some of the doctor's critics have disputed the doctor's claim as to the efficacy of Peruna.

Since the ingredients of Peruna are no longer a secret, what do the medical authorities say concerning the remedies of which Peruna is composed?

Take, for instance, the ingredient HYDRASTIS CANADENSIS, OR GOLDEN SEAL. The United States Dispensatory says of this herbal remedy, that it is largely employed in the treatment of depraved mucous membranes, chronic rhinitis (nasal catarrh), atonic dyspepsia (catarrh of the stomach), chronic intestinal catarrh, catarrhal jaundice (catarrh of the liver), and in diseased mucous membranes of the pelvic organs. It is also recommended for the treatment of various forms of diseases peculiar to women.

Another ingredient of Peruna, CORYDALIS FORMOSA, is classed in the United States Dispensatory as a tonic.

CEDRON SEEDS is another ingredient of Peruna, an excellent drug that has been very largely overlooked by the medical profession for the past fifty years. THE SEEDS ARE TO BE FOUND IN VERY FEW DRUG STORES. The United States Dispensatory says of the action of cedron that it is used as a bitter tonic and in the treatment of dysentery, and in intermittent diseases as a SUBSTITUTE FOR QUININE.

OIL OF COPAIBA, another ingredient of Peruna, is classed by the United States Dispensatory as a mild stimulant and diuretic. It acts on the stomach and intestinal tract. It acts as a stimulant on the genito-urinary membranes. Useful in chronic cystitis, chronic dysentery and diarrhea, and some chronic diseases of the liver and kidneys.

Our Peruna Tablet Is Peruna With Fluid Removed.

These opinions as to the ingredients of Peruna are held by all writers on the subject, including Bartholow and Scudder.

OF HYDRASTIS, BARTHOLOW SAYS it is applicable to stomatitis (catarrh of the mucous surfaces of the mouth), follicular pharyngitis (catarrh of the pharynx), chronic coryza (catarrh of the head). This writer classes hydrastis as a stomachic tonic, useful in atonic dyspepsia (chronic gastric catarrh), catarrh of the duodenum, catarrh of the gall duct, catarrh of the intestines, catarrh of the kidneys (chronic Bright's disease), catarrh of the bladder, and catarrh of other pelvic organs.

BARTHOLOW REGARDS COPAIBA as an excellent remedy for chronic catarrh of the bladder, chronic bronchitis (catarrh of the bronchial tubes).

BARTHOLOW STATES THAT CUBEB, an ingredient of Peruna, promotes the appetite and digestion, increases the circulation of the blood. Useful in chronic nasal catarrh, follicular pharyngitis (catarrh of the pharynx), increasing the tonicity of the mucous membranes of the throat. It also relieves hoarseness. Useful in atonic dyspepsia (catarrh of the stomach), and in chronic catarrh of the colon and rectum, catarrh of the bladder, prostaterrhea, and chronic bronchial affections.

MILLSPAUGH, MEDICINAL PLANTS, one of the most authoritative works on medicinal herbs in the English language, in commenting upon COLLINSONIA CANADENSIS, says that it acts on the pneumogastric and vaso motor nerves. It increases the secretions of the mucous membranes in general. In the mountains of Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee and Carolina, collinsonia canadensis is considered a panacea for many disorders, including headache, colic, cramp, dropsy and indigestion. DR. SCUDDER regards it highly as a remedy in chronic diseases of the lungs, heart disease and asthma.

These citations ought to be sufficient to show to any candid mind that Peruna is a catarrh remedy. Surely, such herbal remedies, that command the enthusiastic confidence of the highest authorities obtainable, brought together in proper combination, ought to make a catarrh remedy of the highest efficacy.

This is our claim, and we are able to substantiate this claim by ample quotations from the HIGHEST MEDICAL AUTHORITIES IN THE WORLD.

UP-TO-DATE DESIGNS FOR THE HOME DRESSMAKER

Circular Empire Skirt.

The circular Empire skirt is a pronounced favorite of the season, and is so graceful and so very generally becoming that its popularity is quite easy to understand. This model is as simple as it is attractive and is adapted to almost every seasonable material. In the illustration it is made of chiffon broadcloth with trimming of velvet and silk braid and is cut in the pretty round length that is so graceful for indoor wear. It could, however, be made short if liked and it would be attractive in the lighter weight materials, such as crepe de Chine, veiling, taffeta and the like, quite as well as in the heavier cloth. Again, it can be made either without a seam at the front or with a straight seam, or if cut from striped material can be seamed in a way to give the fashionable chevron effect. In any case it is arranged over a foundation girdle which is carefully boned and which keeps it perfectly in place and over the upper edge of which the draped girdle is arranged.

The skirt can be made in either one or two pieces and can be laid in double plaits at the back or gathered as may be found most becoming.

THE CLIMATE IS IDEAL.

Great Wealth Acquired in Growing Grain.

Writing from Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada, W. H. Ellwanger, who was formerly a resident of Green Mountain, Iowa, says: "The climate in summer is ideal for growing grain. Long, clear days of sunshine, no bad storms. We never need to guard against cyclones. I never saw a better climate in my life. We made more money during the season of 1906 than any previous five years in Central Iowa—one of the best districts in the State." But Mr. Ellwanger was a resident of the town, and it might be more interesting to read what a farmer has to say about Western Canada. From hundreds of letters, all filled with words of praise, recounting success in Western Canada, there has been one selected. It is as follows:

Paynton, Sask., Canada,
Dec. 10th, 1907.

To Whom This May Concern:

I moved to this address Feb. 3, 1907, from Montgomery, Iowa, and took a homestead 35 miles north of Paynton. It was cold when I moved here, but it did not stay cold long; it broke up the 8th of February, and was not so cold after that; but the spring was late on account of the heavy snow fall, but in spite of the late spring I saw better grain than I ever saw in the States raised this year. I helped a man finish sowing oats the 4th of July, and they made fair oats. In a good year oats will go 100 bushels to the acre, and wheat 25 to 50; all root crops do well here. I saw turnips weigh 7 and 8 pounds. I raised potatoes this year that measured 11½ inches one way and 18½ the other in circumference. This is a fine stock country; hay in abundance, good water, plenty of fuel free and plenty of building material, the government gives us timber to saw into lumber, and we can get it sawed for about $6.00 per thousand. All small fruit grows wild here. Then there are ducks, geese, grouse, pheasants, deer, moose, elk and fish in abundance. I was over to Turtle Lake yesterday, where there is lots of fishing being done this winter. I saw about a carload of white fish in one pile. I gave 25 cents for 86 pounds of fish. What do you think of that, Brother Yankee? I think this is a fine place, both to make money and to live. There was an old man up here visiting his brother-in-law. Now this man owns land close to Des Moines, Iowa, and is in good circumstances, but he took a homestead and says he will be contented if he can only put in the rest of his days in Canada. He would get up in the morning and look out of the door and say: "Well, who wouldn't live in Canada?" Now I have been in 13 different States in the United States and I never saw the chance that there is here for a man that has a little muscle and a little brains.

Three cheers for Canada!

(Signed.) W. A. SPICE.

THREE BOYS HAD ECZEMA.

Were Treated at Dispensary—Did Not Improve — Suffered Five Months—Perfect Cure by Cuticura.

"My three children had eczema for five months. A little sore would appear on the head and seemed very itchy, increasing day after day. The baby had had it about a week when the second boy took the disease and a few sores developed, then the third boy took it. For the first three months I took them to the N— Dispensary, but they did not seem to improve. Then I used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment and in a few weeks they had improved, and when their heads were well you could see nothing of the sores. A Dog's Monument.

In the dog cemetery of Paris there is probably the finest monument ever erected to the memory of a dog.

It represents the famous convent of St. Bernard, with snow-covered rocks all about it, while in the foreground is the brave dog Barry carrying a child whom he has just rescued. Underneath is the inscription: "He saved the lives of forty persons."

Such a dog certainly deserves a monument, that his brave deeds may always be held in loving remembrance.

His Life One Long Laugh.

Finleyville, Pa., a town of 2,500 inhabitants, makes a bid for notoriety with a laughing nuisance. While "laugh and grow fat" seems to be a worthy maxim, yet the Finleyville authorities believe that Henry Green, colored, carries it beyond reason. Green has been sent to jail for laughing. The authorities say that when he laughs he arouses the neighborhood and becomes a nuisance. Mischievous boys take advantage of Green's laughing proclivities and arouse his risibilities until the negro often falls over from exhaustion. Frequently he has been placed in the borough lockup, but finally he became so vociferous that he was arrested on a charge of disorderly conduct, and being unable to pay a fine was sent to the county jail. He has indulged in practically one long laugh since and Sheriff Howe, on complaint of the other prisoners, threatens to muzzle him. Physicians say that Green is suffering from a nervous affliction and that he cannot control his laughter.

MUSIC STUDENTS

Should Have Steady Nerves.

The nervous system of the musician is often very sensitive and any habit like coffee drinking may so upset the nerves as to make regular and necessary daily practice next to impossible.

"I practice from seven to eight hours a day and study Harmony two hours," writes a Mich. music student. "Last September I was so nervous I could only practice a few minutes at a time and mother said I would have to drop my music for a year.

"This was terribly discouraging, as I couldn't bear the thought of losing a whole year of study. Becoming convinced that my nervousness was caused largely by coffee, and seeing Postum so highly spoken of, I decided I would test it for a while.

"Mother followed the directions carefully and I thought I had never tasted such a delicious drink. We drank Postum every morning instead of coffee, and by November I felt more like myself than for years, and was ready to resume my music.

"I now practice as usual, do my studying and when my day's work is finished I am not any more nervous than when I began.

"I cannot too highly recommend Postum to musicians who practice half a day. My father is a physician and recommends Postum to his patients. Words cannot express my appreciation for this most valuable health beverage, and experience has proven its superiority over all others." "There's a Reason."

appeal to the Well-Informed in every walk of life and are essential to permanent success and creditable standing. Accordingly, it is not claimed that Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is the only remedy of known value, but one of many reasons why it is the best of personal and family laxatives is the fact that it cleanses, sweetens and relieves the internal organs on which it acts without any debilitating after effects and without having to increase the quantity from time to time.

It acts pleasantly and naturally and truly as a laxative, and its component parts are known to and approved by physicians, as it is free from all objectionable substances. To get its beneficial effects always purchase the genuine—manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., only, and for sale by all leading druggists.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Large Problem.

The king of the Lilliputians was wondering what he would do with Lemuel Gulliver.

"I've never had the problem of the unemployed looming up before me in such gigantic shape as that," he said. "I don't know of anything useful he can do, and he eats like a regiment of hired men."

Seeing no other way out of the difficulty, he wisely left the solution of it to Dean Swift, the clergy being then, as now, the advisers of kings and the friends of the homeless and hungry.

The cow's udder is kept in a clean, healthy and smooth condition by washing it with Borax and water, a tablespoonful of Borax to two quarts of water. This prevents roughness and soreness or cracked teats which make milking time a dread to the cow and a worry to the milker.

TEN MILLION BOXES A YEAR

The most wonderful record in all history—merit made it. The great sums of money spent in advertising have only served to make CASCARETS known, but the greatest advertisement ever printed could do no more than induce a person to try CASCARETS once—a free sample, or at most, a 10 cent box. Then comes the test, and if CASCARETS had not proved their merit beyond the highest expectations there would not today, after five years on the market, be a sale of nearly a million boxes a month. This great success has been made by the kind words of our friends. No one who has ever tried CASCARETS fails to be pleased and talk nicely about them. CASCARETS are not only easiest to buy, to carry, to take, to give, but are also the best medicine for the bowels ever discovered. Files full of voluntary testimonials prove that Cascarets are a perfect cure for Constipation, Appendicitis, Biliousness, Sour Stomach, Sick Headache, Insomnia, Palpitation of the Heart, Bad Breath, Bad Blood, Pimples, Piles, Worms and all bowel diseases of childhood and old age. They make mother's milk mildly purgative. Mama takes a CASCARET, baby gets the benefit. Children like to take them. They are the one perfect, unequaled family remedy. Nothing more can be said. Everybody should carry a box in the pocket and have another in the house. Don't forget "they work while you sleep," and "a CASCARET at night makes you feel all right—in the morning." The genuine tablet octagonal, stamped CCC, put up in light blue enameled metal boxes, and never sold in bulk. Sold by all druggists, 10c, 25c, 50c.

Good for Everybody.

Mr. Norman R. Coulter, a prominent architect, in the Delbert building, San Francisco, says: "I fully endorse all that has been said of Electric Bitters as a tonic medicine. It is good for everybody. It corrects stomach, liver and kidney disorders in a prompt and efficient manner and builds up the system." Electric Bitters is the best spring medicine ever sold over a druggist's counter; as a blood purifier it is unequaled. 50c. at H. Milliman's drug store.

Does Your Heart Beat

Yes. 100,000 times each day. Does it send out good blood or bad blood? You know, for good blood is good health; bad blood, bad health. And you know precisely what to take for bad blood—Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Doctors have endorsed it for 60 years.

One frequent cause of bad blood is a sluggish liver. This produces constipation. Poisonous substances are then absorbed into the blood. Keep the bowels open with Ayer's Pills.

Our Town— A Pull Together.

There is no room for doubt but that our town, with the united efforts of its enterprising citizens, can greatly increase its business and enhance the value of property. Everything indicates a forward movement. The high standard of morality that exists is inducing many to look this way with a view of locating. Our excellent schools are greatly appreciated by the best people of this section, and are proving attractive features. As a trading and shipping point our town is already ahead of any place in this section of country, having both the B. & O. and Wabash R. R. No place of its size in the county receives greater shipments of merchandise or sends out more live stock and grain. Our business houses are being transformed into beautiful business blocks and residences into modern dwellings and cottages.

Now as many are thinking and talking of coming thither to locate, let all give them words of encouragment and hearty welcome to this goodly land of peace and abundance. Encourage those who are worthy whether they have capital or not. Labor is worth money. Those who have money will buy lots, build houses or remodel old ones. Let us work and stimulate every legitimate enterprise by giving it all the friendly encouragement we can, and unite our industry, intelligence and capital in a common cause for the good of our town. Let us cultivate a public spirit and talk less and work more. Encourage our local authorities in making improvements. Speak up, speak well, talk encouragingly of our town and its bright prospects. It is these many little considerations that makes a town grow. Nature has showered upon us her choicest blessings, and with perfect unity and effort for the good of our common cause, great will be the result.

Raymond Hennesey is working for Chas. Koch in the livery barn.

Wes Mutzfeld and wife spent Sunday with his parents at Butler.

Bert Reasoner and family of Auburn visited relatives at this place, Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. H. L. James and son of Fort Wayne, are guests of Ira Bone and wife, this week.

Glen Abel, who has been operator and agent at the Wabash depot, since its establishment here, has been transferred to New Haven. John D. Milliman will assume the duties of operator here and possibly that of agent, thereby staying for the two evening trains.

N. T. Jackman, has filed with the circuit court his final report as receiver of the defunct Farmers' Bank and placed with the county clerk $1800 to be divided among the creditors of the bank who have not already received their last distributive share, which was nine and onethird percent. This dividend will, be paid to the creditors by calling at the county clerk's office. The whole amount of dividends paid out by Receiver Jackman will aggregate about fifty-nine per cent. This final dividend paid in makes the fifth one. The bank failed about five years ago. Mr. Jackman's fees as receiver are given in the report as being $3441. This final report winds up a matter that has been of considerable of interest and importance to many in DeKalb county.

J. D. Leighty was at Auburn on business, Monday.

Mr. Sipe and family visited a few days with a daughter, near Antwerp.

Isaac Gibford of Ft. Wayne was in town, Monday, calling on his old acquaintances.

Marion Smith and family of Auburn visited over Sunday with Mrs. Nancy Widney and son.

The town dads met Monday with Curie and Sechler present. The clerk read the proceedings of their last meeting and were adopted. A bill of $1.00 was allowed F. R. Leighty for printing road tax receipts. The matter of straightening the road east of town was taken up and the board will go in a body and look over the grounds and see how this should be done. The road will probably be graded so as not to hinder people from coming to town when the high waters are on. The board adjourned to meet in two weeks.

No Use to Die.

"I have found that there is no use to die of lung trouble as long as you can get Dr. King's New Discovery," says Mrs J. P. White, of Rushboro, Pa. "I would not be alive to-day only for that wonderful medicine. It loosens up a cough quicker than anything else, and cures lung disease even after the case is pronounced hopeless." This most reliable remedy for coughs and colds, la-grippe, asthma, bronchitis and hoarseness, is sold under guarantee at H. Milliman's drug store. 50c. and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

All Sides and Conditions of Things are Shown. Nothing Overlooked to make it Complete.

Liner is Rammed During Fog.

While the great trans-Atlantic liner Kron Prinz Wilhelm, of the North German Lloyd line, lay at anchor in a thick fog off Staten Island, the steamer Crown of Castile ran into the liner and tore a hole more than ten feet in diameter in the overhanging stern. The bow of the Crown of Castile penetrated the steward's quarters on the Kron Prinz Wilhelm to a distance of about fifteen feet, but nobody was injured. Water-tight doors on the hull of the Kron Prinz Wilhelm were promptly closed, but it was quickly ascertained that she had suffered no damage below the water line and after a wait of several hours for the fog to lift she proceeded to her dock at Hoboken, N. J.

New York Central to Spend $30,000,000

Orders for 136 new locomotives and 34,000 tons of steel rails have just been placed by the New York Central Railroad Company, according to an announcement made in New York City. The order for locomotives is one of the largest which has been received by the builders since unsettled business conditions began. The new equipment is for the company's lines east of Buffalo. The money for the purchase, according to an official of the company, is provided for in the recent issue of $30,000,000 equipment trust notes.

Plate Glass Works Closed Down.

The Penn-American Plate Glass Company, of Alexandria, Ind., has closed its factory, turning out of employment 500 men. It is the city's biggest industry and has run steadily for almost twenty years till Christmas. No definite time is set for its resumption. It is one of the independent factories, and it is probable that the recent cut made in plate glass by the combine had a part in its shutting down.

Big Fire in Washington, D. C.

Fire broke out in the lumber yards of Eissinger Bros. at Seventh and U streets, Northwest, in Washington, D. C., and quickly spread to a number of residences. The American League ball park was threatened and the building recently vacated by the Freedman's Hospital was partially destroyed. The lumber yard is the largest in that City. The loss, estimated at $500,000, is mostly confined to the lumber yards.

Many Arrests in Berlin.

Forty-seven arrests were made in connection with the suffrage demonstrations in Berlin, Germany. Nine policemen sustained injuries in encounters with the people. It is estimated that fifty of the magnifestants were wounded, but it is probable that many others were hurt, as the authorities have no record of those who went home and dressed their injuries.

Abe Hummel Out of Prison.

Abraham H. Hummel, the lawyer who was sentenced to serve a year in the penitentiary for conspiracy in connection with the Dodge-Morse divorce case at New York City, was released from prison. His term was reduced to about ten months by the allowances for good behavior.

Count Tolstoi Ill.

Reports from St. Petersburg of the illness of Count Leo Tolstoi have been received at Moscow. It is said he fainted and remained unconscious for a considerable time. He is quite weak as the result of an attack of influenza and his condition excites alarm.

Indianapolis Man Burned to Death.

The ignition of a tank containing 5,000 gallons of creosote and other chemicals at the plant of the Republic Creosoting Company caused John Fortune, 63 years old, to be burned to a crisp. Fortune was the engineer of the plant.

Killed by Thrown Ball.

S. H. Smith, a student at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Montgomery, Ala., was struck in the head by a thrown ball in a game and died twelve hours later.

PRICE OF FALSE ECONOMY.

Faulty Construction Cause of Cleveland School Horror.

In his verdict on the Collinwood school horror the coroner blames existing conditions, but no specific fault is charged to any one. Fritz Hirter, the janitor, is exonerated. But, guarded from frantic mothers and cursing fathers, cross-questioned, doubted and probed, three of his own little children burned or trampled to death in the fearful catastrophe, Hirter is said to have gone mad. He was badly burned while trying to save the children.

FRITZ HIRTER.

The coroner found that the fire started in a closet, under the front stairway, and was caused by overheated pipes, which ignited the stairway. The death of the children, he says was due to faulty construction whereby a partition projected in front of the stairway at the bottom, making the children turn out of the way in their rush for the door. He holds that the children became panic-stricken and were jammed in the doorway because of the turn in the hall to get to the door.

One little section of a vestibule partition, two feet and eight inches in width, was directly responsible for the death of 167 children in the burned high school building in North Collinwood. It was an error of false economy, which proved costly beyond compare. There were no storm doors outside the outer doorway. It was cheaper to put a partition across the hallway inside than to build storm doors outside. So the partition was built.

The long black line shows path of exit for children if they had continued through the door. But, coming downstairs in a rush, many swerved toward the right and landed behind the partition to which arrow from right of picture points. As the pile of little bodies grew, the mass extended behind the closed part of the double doors and soon filled all the space at the bottom of the stairs (marked by X), gathering into the tangle all that came later from above.

"The paramount lesson of the catastrophe," said W. S. Lougee, Cleveland City Building Inspector, "is the need of an overhauling of every antiquated school building in the country. In the larger cities, at least, the modern school building is made fireproof. Yet there are hundreds of buildings, scattered through the cities, which were built years ago, are behind the times and positively unsafe. These buildings should be remedied at once."

POLITICS and POLITICIANS

At the recent hearing of the judiciary committee of the New York State Senate on the proposed amendment to strike the word "male" from the State constitution, several specially selected delegates represented the Socialist party. Among these was Morris Hillquit, a New York City attorney. In supporting the proposed amendment Mr. Hillquit drew attention to the fact that the demand for woman suffrage was one of the permanent and material planks of the platform of his party, not only in this country, but throughout the world, considered not as a matter of abstract and sentimental justice to be realised in the dim future, but as an accrued social right already too long withheld.

Samuel Gompers of the American Federation of Labor, when he appeared before the House committee on judiciary to urge the passage of the Pearre bill, expressed confidence that President Roosevelt sincerely sympathized "with all our people," and added, "I have reason to believe that the President is not thoroughly informed as to the real remedy for the cause of complaint." Mr. Gompers made the prediction that the labor organizations would be heard from in the impending campaign.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

A Masonic lodge was recently instituted at Stroh.

Reports show that the municipal water works system of Bloomington has cleared over $30,000 in the last eight years.

Benjamin F. Runyon, proprietor of the Redkey automobile works, and 32 years old, is dead of pneumonia after brief illness.

Claypool citizens will erect a band stand in the central part of the town from which summer night concerts can be played.

James Leachman, a well-known miner in the block coal field, was caught by a fall of slate in a mine near Perth, and crushed to death. He was 50 years old, with a wife and children.

Dorothy, 8 years old, daughter of Mrs. Leona Mason, of South Bend, and her mother were perhaps fatally burned, the girl catching her clothes on fire and running into her mother's arms.

John Miller, a native of South Bend, has just been elected mayor of Seattle, Wash., by a majority of 4,500. He is a Republican and his opponent was Mayor Moore, who was running on a non-partisan ticket.

James E. Gill, of Silver Lake, is the owner of a goose that is twenty years of age and that is still laying eggs. He owned another goose that lived to be nineteen years old and laid every year during its earthly existence.

The scratching of a pet cat which jumped upon the bed of Herman Beisen, whose house in Hammond was afire early as he lay asleep, saved the lives of five inmates who had barely time to escape in their night clothes.

Lewis Stewart, a farmer, accidentally shot himself with a Flobert rifle while in Seymour, the ball entering abobe the right ear, but not penetrating the skull. The concussion was sufficient to render him unconscious for several hours. His injury is serious.

William Rawlings, farmer, was the victim of a serious accident in Sheridan recently. He was loading coal near the railway station, when his horses became frightened at a passing train and dashed away. Mr. Rawlings was thrown out, fracturing his skull and breaking several ribs.

While holding a young horse, which was being offered for sale, William F. Hissem, of South Whitley, was jammed against the side of the barn by the rearing animal, which struck him in the breast with its front feet, breaking several ribs and injuring him internally. Mr. Hissem is a wealthy farmer, who was removing to the city, where he owns a fine home, with a view to spending the remainder of his life at ease.

The burglars who plundered several homes and the postoffice at Logansport are not only experts, but possessed of humor. William Hubler, merchant, who lost $126.38 in the raid, received a receipt for the money, signed "R. U. Next." A brief note accompanied the receipt, reading, "This receipt may help you in auditing your books." The postmark on the letter was so badly blurred that it was impossible to tell where it was mailed.

Lawrence Esterbrook, 10 years old, by heroic effort, saved Carl Payton, a companion, from drowning at Wabash. In order to take a short cut home, they walked across the ice on the canal. The thin covering broke, plunging Esterbrook into deep water. Seeing his playmate disappear, Payton ran back, and he also broke through. After a hard struggle he pulled himself on firm ice, and after encouraging his companion to hold steadily, he started for help and soon succeeded in rescuing his playmate.

The City Council has granted T. O. Ballard and others the right to establish an electric light plant in Franklin. The question has been under consideration for sixteen months, and has been carefully looked into. Another proposition was submitted by the Franklin Water, Light and Power Company, but it was not considered so favorable to the city as the Ballard, and was turned down. The Ballard plant is to be ready for operation by January, 1910, at which time the present franchise expires.

While cutting down a large wild cherry tree in the Ladoga cemetery, south of Crawfordsville, workmen found that the tree had enveloped a marble tombstone, two feet in height and about fourten inches in width. On the tomb was the inscription, "Alma Berard, born January 5, 1774, died May 15, 1830. May she rest in peace." According to old residents of the neighborhood, the tree has enveloped the tombstone for more than half a century. The tree was twelve feet in circumference at the base, and for many years has attracted considerable attention on account of its size.

William Arnold, of Petersburg, was fined $100 and sentenced to serve fifteen days in jail for whipping his wife.

Charles Decker, of Oldenburg, aged 68, fell dead on the street at Brazil. He was well known as a horse trader.

Miss Emma Lerck, who was seriously injured by falling against a stove while taking a bath, died at her home in Hagerstown.

Ira Aubary has filed suit for $10,000 against the Peacock Coal Company, of Indianapolis, for injuries received while working in the company's mines at Massey.

The meat market of John Peck at Fort Branch was destroyed by fire, believed to have been of incendiary origin. The loss is 1,000, half covered by insurance.

Otto Hildebrand, of Gas City, shook hands so vigorously with Ira Hinchman, a barber there, that the barber's shoulder was dislocated and later he suffered a stroke of paralysis.

When John Schram, aged 14 years, was examining a traget rifle in his brother's butcher shop at Fort Wayne he accidentally shot his playmate, John Shoaff, aged 12 years, in the abdomen.

Stanley Pavey, carrier out of Covington, while delivering mail to his patrons on horseback, on account of the bad condition of the roads, had the small bones of his left ankle fractured by his horse falling on him.

Miss Jennie Johnson, the 16-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Johnson, died at the home of her parents near Windfall, as the result of taking carbolic acid with suicidal intent. She had secreted the drug in her bedroom.

Enos T. Taylor, aged 68 years, president of the Citizens' State Bank and the wealthiest man in Huntington County, is dead. Mr. Taylor was a millionaire. Death was due to neuralgia of the heart. He had been sick about tow weeks. He was born at New Carlisle, Ohio, and came to Huntington in 1841.

Raymond Malott, of Bloomington, senior law student in Indiana University, has received notice that he has successfully passed an examination as a teacher in the Philippines. He will sail about July 1. The position is that of assistant superintendent, which means that he will conduct a normal school for native teachers.

Ralph King, 30 years old, was caught by an Indiana Union traction car at Muncie and instantly killed. The interurban tracks parallel that of the Big Four rialway, and King was standing on the interurban track, watching a fast train on the Big Four, when he was run down. The motorman saw King, but supposed he would step aside, and made no effort to stop his car till it was too late.

Despite the fact that February is the shortest month in the year, more births were reported in Richmond than in any other month for two years. There were fifty-seven birth returns, as against thirty-seven for the preceding month. Only one of the fifty-seven was born on the 29th. Death claimed but twenty-five persons in Richmond in February, and more than half of the number were past 65 years.

John W. Shaffer, of Muncie, who survived the perils of the Civil War as a member of the famous One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Indiana Infantry, fell dead recently at the side of a yawning grave. Laborers were completing a grave for Warren Keene, killed by an interurban car, and Shaffer stepped up to look into the excavation. He suddenly threw up his arms and with a piercing shriek fell lifeless. Had not workmen seized him he would have fallen into the grave.

The parishioners of the Congregational church of Alexandria, which, by reason of the removal of many of its members, has lost much of its former strength, at a well-attended meeting, decided against a proposition to disband and sell the church property. The Rev. Thomas Leggette will be retained as minister, and the church organization will be preserved. The congregation owns a fine brick church building in the heart of the city, and formerly was one of the largest and most influential in Alexandria.

The Dramatic Club of Rockfield has adopted a novel plan of raising funds to help pay for street and sidewalk improvements in the village. The club is busy rehearsing the play, "Imogene, or the Witch's Secret," which it will produce first at Rockfield and then will present it in nearby towns. The money raised will be used in paying for cement walks. Rockfield is situated on the Wabash railway and the Fort Wayne & Wabash Valley traction line, and its residents expect to make the place one of the beauty spots along the two railroads.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The weekly review of trade in the Chicago district, published by R. G. Dun & Co., will say:

"Trade exhibits further recovery, seasonable weather proving beneficial, and there is improvement in both production and distribution, together with larger movements of breadstuffs and live stock and a better general demand for money.

"These gratifying developments are also supplemented by a volume of payments through the banks little short of that a year ago and a commercial mortality the lowest in several months. The supply of funds for business purposes is made ample by unusually high deposits, and this encourages more bidding for discounts, with the rate for choice paper easier at 5½ per cent.

"Resumption appears in heavy construction and new building, involving outlays exceeding those at this time last year, but railroad work is in abeyance pending financial arrangements. Conditions favor an early lake traffic, and this stimulates renewed activity throughout the docks and shipyards.

"Factory employment has gained moderately and the idle hands are smaller in number, although new contracts in iron, steel and equipment come forward slowly. Ore piles on hand exceed the normal, but pig iron stocks in this district disclose little accumulation, and with prices down to expectations inquiries become more numerous and suggest increased furnace outputs shortly. Woodworking branches reflect a brighter outlook based upon current demand, and wages of cabinetworkers are advanced, but the aggregate buying of lumber is not yet equaling expectations.

"Tanning indicates some effort to augment stocks, and there is a firmer tone in leather, but the market for hides continues depressed, notwithstanding smaller receipts. Shoe manufacturers are seasonably active, and there is steadiness in novelties and trunks, while furniture leather shows increasing shipments.

"Building materials are in stronger request, lower average of cost inviting more investment in residence property, and the packing industry is exceptionally busy and giving employment to more than the normal forces at good wages.

"Mercantile collections at western points occasion less difficulty, and shipments of general merchandise to the South and the gulf States surpass those at this time last year.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district number 30, against 40 last week and 25 a year ago. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 11, against 13 last week and 8 in 1907."

NEW YORK.

There is quite considerable improvement in both the tone of general distributive trade and in the volume of business actually booked by jobbers. Withal, however, there is little change to be seen in the character of the buying, which is still along very conservative lines, and, while the volume of business doing is larger now than at any time since last fall, the shrinkage from a year ago is distinct and unmistakably large. Collections are still very backward; prices of staples tend lower, as for a long time past; the earning power of employes in many lines of industry is being curtailed by short time or wage reductions, and the threat is made that a refusal to accept lower wages may result in a widespread suspension of activity in the coal trade.

The demand for iron and steel shows little real expansion, aside from some lines like wire and similar goods. Old material tends to ease, and many consuming plants are running on short time. The long standing curtailment of cotton goods production shows no signs of ending; in fact, a continued heavy cut in production is indicated, and notice has been given, in addition, of a 10 per cent reduction in wages at some eastern mills.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending March 12 number 270, against 287 last week, 186 in the like week of 1907, 187 in 1906, 186 in 1905 and 193 in 1904. Failures in Canada for the week number 31, as against 49 last week and 23 this week a year ago.

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

CHAPTER XVI.—(Continued.)

It was Saturday—the third Saturday since Girdlestone and his ward had disappeared. Dimsdale had fully made up his mind that, go where he would, Ezra should not escape him this time. On two consecutive Saturdays the young merchant had managed to get away from him, and had been absent each time until the Monday morning. Tom knew, and the thought was a bitter one, that these days were spent in some unknown retreat in the company of Kate and of her guardian. This time at least he should not get away without revealing his destination.

The two young men remained in the office until two o'clock. Then Ezra put on his hat and overcoat, buttoning it up close, for the weather was bitterly cold. Tom at once picked up his wide-a-wake and followed him out into Fenchurch street, so close to his heels that the swinging door had not shut on the one before the other passed through. Ezra glanced round at him when he heard the footsteps. There was no longer any pretense of civility between the two, and whenever their eyes met it was only to exchange glances of hatred and defiance.

A hansom was passing down the street, and Ezra, with a few muttered words to the driver, sprang in. Fortunately another had just discharged its fare, and was still waiting by the curb. Tom ran up to it. "Keep that red cab in sight," he said. "Whatever you do, don't let it get away from you." The driver, who was a man of few words, nodded, and whipped up his horse.

It chanced that this same horse was either a faster or a fresher one than that which bore the young merchant. The red cab rattled down Fleet street, then doubled on its tracks, and coming back by St. Paul's plunged into a labyrinth of side streets from which it eventually emerged upon the Thames embankment. In spite of all its efforts, however, it was unable to shake off its pursuer. The red cab journeyed on down the Embankment, and across one of the bridges, Tom's able charioteer still keeping only a few yards behind it. Among the narrow streets on the Surrey side Ezra's vehicle pulled up at a public house. Tom waited patiently outside until he should reappear.

In a very few minutes young Girdlestone came out again, accompanied by a tall, burly man, with a bushy red beard, who was miserably dressed. He was helped into the cab by Ezra, and the pair drove off together. Tom was more bewildered than ever. Who was this fellow, and what connection had he with the matter on hand? Like a sleuth hound the pursuing handsom threaded its way through the torrent of vehicles which pour down the London streets, never for one moment losing sight of its quarry. Presently they wheeled into the Waterloo road, close to the Waterloo station. The red cab turned sharp round and rattled up the incline which leads to the main line. Tom sprang out, tossed a sovereign to the driver, and followed on foot at the top of his speed.

As he ran into the station Ezra Girdlestone and the red-bearded stranger were immediately in front of him. There was a great swarm of people all around, for as it was Saturday there were special trains to the country. Tom was afraid of losing sight of the two men in the crowd, so he elbowed his way through as quickly as he could, and got immediately behind them—so close that he could have touched them with his hand. They were approaching the booking office when Ezra glanced round and saw his rival standing behind him. He whispered something to his half-drunken companion. The latter turned, and with an inarticulate cry, like a wild beast, rushed at the young man, and seized him by the throat with his brawny hands.

It is one thing, however, to catch a man by the throat, and another to retain that grip, especially when your antagonist happens to be an International football player. To Tom this red-bearded rough, who charged him so furiously, was nothing more than the thousands of bull-headed forwards who had come upon him like thunderbolts in the days of old. With the ease begotten by practice he circled his assailant with his long muscular arms, and gave a quick convulsive jerk in which every sinew of his body participated. The red-bearded mans stumpy legs described a half-circle in the air, and he came down on the stone pavement with a sounding crash which shook every particle of breath from his enormous body.

Tom's fighting blood was all aflame now, and his grey eyes glittered with joy as he made at Ezra. All the cautions of his father and the exhortations of his mother were cast to the winds as he saw his enemy standing before him. To do him justice Ezra was nothing loth, but sprang forward to meet him, hitting with both hands. They were well matched, for both were trained boxers and exceptionally powerful men. Ezra was perhaps the stronger, but Tom was in better condition. There was a short, eager rally—blow and guard and counter so quick and hard that the eye could hardly follow it. Then a rush of railway servants and bystanders tore them asunder. Tom had a red flush on his forehead where a blow had fallen. Ezra was spitting out the fragments of a broken tooth, and bleeding profusely. Each struggled furiously to get at the other, with the result that they were dragged further apart. Eventually a burly policeman seized Tom by the collar, and held him as in a vice.

"Where is he?" Tom cried, craning his neck to catch a glimpse of his enemy. "He'll get away after all."

"Can't 'elp that," said the guardian of the peace phlegmatically. "A gen'elman like you ought to be ashamed. Keep quiet now! Would yer then!" This last at some specially energetic effort on the part of the prisoner to recover his freedom.

"They'll get away! I know they will!" Tom cried in despair, for both Ezra and his companion, who was none other than Burt, of African notoriety, had disappeared from his sight.

His fears proved to be only too well founded, for when at last he succeeded in wresting himself from the constable's clutches he could find no trace of his enemies. A dozen bystanders gave a dozen different accounts of their movements. He rushed from one platform to another over all the great station. He could have torn his hair at the thought of the way in which he had allowed them to slip through his fingers. It was fully an hour before he finally abandoned the search, and acknowledged to himself that he had been hoodwinked for the third time, and that a long week would elapse before he could have another chance of solving the mystery.

He turned at last sadly and reluctantly away from the station and walked across to Waterloo bridge. It was some consolation, however, that he had had one fair crack at Ezra Girdlestone. He glanced down at his knuckles, which were raw and bleeding, with a mixture of satisfaction and disgust. With a half smile he put his injured hand in his pocket, and looking up once more became aware that a red-faced gentleman was approaching him in a highly excited manner.

It could not be said that the red-faced gentleman walked, neither could it be said that the red-faced gentleman ran. His made of progression might best be described as a succession of short and unwieldy jumps, which, as he was a rather stout gentleman, appeared to indicate some very urgent and pressing need for hurry. His face was bathed in perspiration, and his collar had become flaccid and shapeless from the same cause. It appeared to Tom, as he gazed at those rubicund, though anxious, features, that they should be well known to him. That glossy hat, those speckless gaiters, and the long frock coat, surely they could belong to none other than the gallant Major Tobias Clutterbuck, late of Her Majesty's 119th of the Line.

As the old soldier approached Tom he quickened his pace, so that when he eventually came up with him he could only puff and pant and hold out a soiled letter.

"Read!" he managed to ejaculate.

Tom opened the letter nad glanced his eye over the contents, with a face which had turned as pale as the major's was red. When he finished it he turned without a word and began to run in the direction from which he had come, the major following as quickly as his breath would permit.

CHAPTER XVII.

Kate had come out with some vague idea of making a last struggle for her life and freedom. With the courage of despair, she came straight down to the avenue to the sole spot where escape seemed possible.

"Good-mornin', missy," cried Stevens, as she approached. "You don't look extra bright this mornin', but you ain't as bad as your good guardian made me think. You don't seem to feel no difficulty in gettin' about."

"There is nothing the matter with me," the girl answered earnestly. "I assure you there is not. My mind is as sound as yours."

"That's what they all says," said the ex-warder with a chuckle.

"But it is so. I cannot stay in that house longer. I cannot, Mr. Stevens, I cannot! My guardian will murder me. He means to. I read it in his eyes. He as good as tried this morning. To die without one word to those I love—without any explanation of what has passed—that would give a sting to death."

"Well, if this ain't outragis!" cried the one-eyed man, "perfectly outragis! Going to murder you, says you! What's he a-goin' to do that for?"

"He hates me for some reason. I have never gone against his wishes, save in one respect, and in that I can never obey him, for it is a matter in which he has no right to command."

"Quite so!" said Stevens, winking his one eye. "I knows the feeling myself."

"Why won't you let me pass?" pleaded Kate. "You may have had daughters of your own. What would you do if they were treated as I have been? If I had money you should have it, but I have none. Do, do let me go! Perhaps when you are on your last bed of sickness the memory of this one good deed may outweigh all the evil that you have done. See, here is my watch and my chain. You shall have that if you will let me through."

"Let's see it?" He opened it and examined it critically. "Eighteen carat—it's only a Geneva though. What can you expect for a Geneva?"

"And you shall have fifty pounds when I get back to my friends. Do let me pass, good Mr. Stevens, for my guardian may return at any moment."

"See here, missy," Stevens said solemnly, "dooty is dooty, and I wouldn't let you through that gate. As to this 'ere watch, if so be as you would like to write a line to your friends, I'll post it for you at Bedsworth in exchange for it, though it be only a Geneva."

"You good, kind man," cried Kate, all excitement and delight. "I have a pencil in my pocket. What shall I do for paper?" She looked eagerly round and spied a small piece which lay among the brushwood. With a cry of joy she picked it out. It was very coarse and very dirty, but she managed to scrawl a few lines upon it, describing her situation and asking for aid. "I will write the address upon the back," she said. "When you get to Bedsworth you must buy an envelope and ask the postoffice people to copy the address on it."

"I bargained to post it for the Geneva," he said. "I didn't bargain to buy envelopes and copy addresses. That's a nice pencil case of yourn. Now I'll make a clean job of it if you'll throw that in."

Kate handed it over without a murmur. At last a small ray of light seemed to be finding its way through the darkness which had so long surrounded her. Stevens put the watch and pencil case in his pocket, and took the little scrap of paper on which so much depended. As Kate handed it to him she saw over his shoulder that coming up the lane was a small pony carriage, in which sat a buxom lady and a very small page. The sleek little brown pony which drew it ambled along at a methodical pace which showed that it was entirely master of the situation, while the whole turnout had an indescribable air of comfort and good nature. Poor Kate had been so separated from her kind that the sight of people who, if not friendly, were at least not hostile to her, sent a thrill of pleasure into her heart. There was something wholesome and prosaic, too, about this homely equipage, which was inexpressibly soothing to a mind so worn by successive terrors.

"Here's some one a-comin'," cried Stevens. "Clear out from here—it's the governor's orders."

"Oh, do let me stay and say one word to the lady!"

Stevens seized his great stick savagely, "Clear out!" he cried in a hoarse, angry voice, and made a step towards her as if he would strike her. She shrank away from him, and then a sudden thought seized her, she turned and ran through the woods as fast as her feeble strength would allow. The instant that she was out of sight, Stevens very deliberately and carefully tore up the little slip of paper with which she had entrusted him, and scattered the pieces to the wind.

Kate Harston fled as quickly as she could through the wood, stumbling over the brambles and crashing through the briars, regardless of pain or scratches or anything else which could stand between her and the possibility of safety. She soon gained the shed and managed to mount on the top of it by the aid of the barrel. Craning her neck, she could see the long dusty lane, with the bare, withered hedges upon either side, and the dreary line of the railway embankment beyond. There was no pony carriage in sight.

She hardly expected that there would be, for she had taken a short cut, and the carriage would have to go some distance round. The road along which it was traveling ran at right angles to the one which she was now overlooking, and the chances were equal as to whether the lady would turn round or go straight on. In the latter case, it would not be possible for her to attract her attention. Her heart seemed to stand still with anxiety as she peered over the high wall at the spot where the two roads crossed.

Presently she heard the rattle of wheels, and the brown pony trotted round the corner. The carriage drew up at the end of the lane, and the driver seemed to be uncertain how to proceed. Then she took the reins, and the pony lumbered on along the road. Kate gave a cry of despair, and the last ray of hope died away from her heart.

It chanced, however, that the page in the carriage was just at that happy age when the senses are keen and on the alert. He heard the cry, and glancing round he saw through a break in the hedge that a lady was looking over the wall which skirted the lane they had passed. He mentioned the fact to his mistress. "Maybe we'd better go back, ma'am," he said.

"Maybe we'd better not, John," said the buxom lady. "People can look over their garden walls without our interfering with them, can't they?"

"Yes, mam, but she was a-hollerin' at us."

"No, John, was she though? Maybe this is a private road and we have no right to be on it."

"She gave a holler as if some one was a-hurtin' of her," said John with decision.

"Then we'll go back," said the lady, and turned the pony round.

Hence it came about that just as Kate was descending with a sad heart from her post of observation, she was electrified to see the brown pony reappear, and come trotting round the curve of the lane with a rapidity which was altogether foreign to that quadruped's usual habits. Indeed, the girl turned so very white at the sight, and her face assumed such an expression of relief and delight, that the lady who was approaching saw at once that it was no common matter which had caused her to summon them.

"What is it, my dear?" she cried, pulling up when she came abreast of the place. Her good, kind heart was touched already by the pleading expression upon the girl's sweet face.

"Oh, madam," said Kate, in a low, rapid voice. "I am shut up in these grounds, and shall be murdered unless help comes."

"Be murdered!" cried the lady in the pony carriage, dropping back in her seat and raising her hands in astonishment.

"It is only too true," Kate said, trying to speak concisely and clearly so as to enforce conviction, but feeling a choking sensation about her throat, as though an hysterical attack were impending. "My guardian has shut me up here for some weeks, and I firmly believe that he will never let me out alive. Oh, don't pray don't think me mad! I am as sane as you are." (To be continued.)

UP-TO-DATE DESIGNS FOR THE HOME DRESSMAKER

Blouse Waist with Guimpe.

The over blouses that give a guimpe effect are in the height of style, and this one is susceptible of great variation, while it is both novel and chic. In the illustration louisine silk is piped with velvet and worn over a guimpe of thin lace, but for the blouse itself everything seasonable is appropriate, while the guimpe can be made of lace, embroidery or of the still simpler lingerie material or of chiffon as liked

PATTERN NO. 5891.

It is entirely separate from the blouse and consequently it can be varied as often as may be liked, so that really with very little labor the one blouse can be made to take on two or three quite different shapes. Again, the model is just as well suited to the odd waist as to the entire gown, and consequently is an exceedingly valuable acquisition to the possibilities of the wardrobe. In this case the guimpe is made with the new long sleeves, but it can be made quite sleeveless and those of the blouse only worn if liked.

The above pattern will be mailed to your address on receipt of 10 cents. Send all orders to the Pattern Department of this paper. Be sure to give both the number and size of pattern wanted, and write very plainly. For convenience, write your order on the following coupon:

ish of three sorts and which are adapted to every material in use for such garments. They can be made of canton flannel or of other heavy material for cold weather and finished with the bands in knickerbocker style, or they can be made from nainsook, longcloth and the like and finished either with straight lower edges or with curved ones in French style. In any case they are closed at the sides and are finished with bands, by means of which they are buttoned to the underwaist. In the illustration the knickerbocker and French drawers are trimmed with frills of embroidery, while the plain ones are finished with frills of linen lawn and with a few tucks above.

Japanese Dress Indicates Age.

In Japan social law decrees that every woman, old or young, shall dress according to her age. As she advances from the time she is a little mite in a beflowered kimono until she is elderly, the colors of her garments become more sober, more subdued. And, strangely, the great ambition of a woman's life there is to become old. She rejoices when she can wear plain black and cut the hair off her head. She does this when she is approaching three-score years.

Remarkably pretty are the soft flowing dresses these little Japanese women wear; in early life they disport nearly all the colors of the rainbow. Nothing is more charming to the eye than a bevy of these pretty young girls. No women in late life, perhaps, appear so funereal as the Japanese women when they have laid aside the gaudy livery of their youth.

A REMARKABLE MAN.

Active and Bright, Though Almost a Centenarian.

Shepard Kollock, of 44 Wallace St., Red Bank, N. J., is a remarkable man at the age of 98. For 40 years he was a victim of kidney troubles and doctors said he would never be cured. "I was trying everything," says Mr. Kollock, "but my back was lame and weak and every exertion sent a sharp twinge through me. I had to get up several times each night and the kidney secretions contained a heavy sediment. Recently I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, with fine results. They have given me entire relief."

How They Found Out.

When the Lawtons had lived in Willow Park about a month, they were invited to a succession of little dinners at the houses of their new neighbors. Mr. Lawton was on a dyspeptic's diet, and Mrs. Lawton was endeavoring to reduce her weight. "I suppose we shall have to eat all sorts of things we don't wish, or else seem rude," said Mrs. Lawton, mournfully, as they set out for the first dinner.

To their growing surprise, the bills of fare placed before them at each dinner, although not remarkably varied, were all composed of such dishes as they could both enjoy.

"I don't see how you all hit on the right things, when Mr. Lawton and I really are such difficult guests," said Mrs. Lawton, in a burst of confidence one afternoon when the neighbors were taking tea with her.

The ladies looked at each other, and then one of them spoke.

"You know Mary Sloan, who comes to wash for you Tuesday mornings?" she said. "Well, I have her Mondays, and Mrs. Green has her Wednesdays, and she irons for Mrs. Porter Thursdays and scrubs for Miss Homer Fridays, so you see——"

He voice trailed off into silence, but Mrs. Lawton no longer wondered; she "saw."

Millions for Public Baths.

The Italian ministry of public instruction has decided to reconstruct the Baths of Caracalla to conform to descriptions transmitted by history. It is also the intention to have them used by the people as in olden times. The reconstruction will cost millions of dollars as the marble and statuary which ornamented the baths nearly 2,000 years ago have been removed to decorate churches and houses of the aristocracy in Rome.

HAPPY OLD AGE

Most Likely to Follow Proper Eating.

As old age advances, we require less food to replace waste, and food that will not overtax the digestive organs, while supplying true nourishment.

Such an ideal food is found in Grape-Nuts, made of whole wheat and barley by long baking and action of diastase in the barley which changes the starch into sugar.

The phosphates also, placed up under the bran-coat of the wheat, are included in Grape-Nuts, but left out of white flour. They are necessary to the building of brain and nerve cells.

"I have used Grape-Nuts," writes an Iowa man, "for 8 years and feel as good and am stronger than I was ten years ago. I am over 74 years old and attend to my business every day.

"Among my customers I meet a man every day who is 92 years old and attributes his good health to the use of Grape-Nuts and Postum which he has used for the last 5 years. He mixes Grape-Nuts with Postum and says they go fine together.

"For many years before I began to eat Grape-Nuts I could not say that I enjoyed life or knew what it was to be able to say 'I am well.' I suffered greatly with constipation, now my habits are as regular as ever in my life.

"Whenever I make extra effort I depend on Grape-Nuts food and it just fills the bill. I can think and write a great deal easier."

"There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Editor Adair, of New Era, Tells Why.

Editor E. L. Adair of the Albion New Era comes to the defense of the local editor who is constantly being arraigned by the impatient public for his imperfections. Read carefully what Brother Adair has to say and then see who makes the most errors considering the magnitude and the variety of the vocations, you or the unworthy editor. "The editor of a local paper is often unjustly censured for his mistakes. The wonder is that he does not make more of them. In his paper he must deal with all kinds of subjects, give the names, dates etc. One hour he may be engaged in reporting a religious meeting and the next writing out a street fight. He must condense and fill with his items several columns, whether events are transpiring to throw up material for his use or not. Count the local items in a paper and imagine how many steps they have required, how much mental worry and work and you will get some idea of the actual work. The smallest may have cost him a long walk and much effort to reach the facts. There is no end to his work. When one paper is off the press he turns his attention to the next with promptness and unvarying regularity. He makes the rounds in search of news and may not get a line. From some he must get news without their knowing it, simply by conversation. He may labor for hours in chasing down a rumor only to find there is nothing in it. His local columns stare in the face and demand not to be filled with skim milk, but with cream of the news events and matters of interest. His bounds are limited yet he must find in each day and all through the week, month and year something of interest to the public. No more perfect treadmill could be devised with such a constant strain, producing weariness of the body and mind and an almost endless variety of subjects to be touched upon, is it surprising that he should occasionlly make a mistake? Other people do, why shouldn't an editor?"

Do Not Crowd the Season.

The first warm days of spring bring with them a desire to get out and enjoy the exhilarating air and sunshine. Children that have been housed up all winter are brought out and you wonder where they all come from. The heavy winter clothing is thrown aside and many shed their flannels. Then a cold wave comes and people say that grip is epidemic. Colds at this season are more dangerous than in mid winter, as there is much moredanger of pneumonia Take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, however: and you will have nothing to fear. It always cures, and we have never known a cold to result in pneumonia when it was used. It is pleasant and safe to take. Children like it. For sale by H. Milliman, St. Joe; F. R. Bowman, Spencerville.

Better School Buildings.

Since the burning of the school building at Collinwood, Ohio, and the loss of so many young children, parents have become awakened to the fact that school buildings should be as nearly fireproof as possible. Hitherto not much thought had been given the subject by the average patron. As a rule he bids the little one goodby in the morning feeling sure that all would be well for the day, placing the child's care in the hands of the teacher. In any case of accident a teacher will do all in her power to protect and save the children over whom she has charge. She feels the responsibility of their care and besides this she has an affection for her small charges which of itself would cause her to do everything she was able to do for their welfare. This was only to truly proven by the sacrifice made by the teachers in the recent fire when two or three perished while trying to shield the children from the flames. But all the teacher can do may not save her pupils. Any building in which people congregate should be built with the idea of protection from fire in mind and schoolbuildings are no exceptions. Parents are beginning to realize this and already the state board of health has received twenty-six complaints from as many different sections of the state asking that school buildings be examined and made safer. More care will probably be taken in the future regarding the structure of the school house and ready means of escape will be provided.

By some papers we notice that a number of schools never had fire drills out this hallocaust created them immediately. It does not seem possible that a school board or teachers would neglect this most important feature of schoolwork. Children when being schooled in buildings of two or more stories are in the gravest danger if not drilled to march out systematically and in readiness for any emergency. Parents have a right to demand that these precautions be taken. The Harrison school at Auburn, was given a test in emptying the building of 330 pupils, to show that no great calamity could come to them. Without the pupils knowing it to be a special test, the fire alarm was given and in one minute and ten seconds every person was out. There are eight rooms in the school and this shows training. This matter will be taken up by a great many schools which have never given it a thought. It is also necessary that the doors to such buildings swing both ways.

There is too large a class of young people who have the aspiration to begin at the top rather than to work their way up like their fathers did before them.

The Repp Barber shop at Harlan was entered on Sunday night a week ago and stole twelve razors and one clipper, valued at $15. This burglary has aroused the people at that place to a degree wherein they have bought two blood-hounds to be kept there to protect property. A man-hunting dog owned by a farmer near there was used to track the guilty party, but was of no avail. The people then organized the Maysville Dog Association and raised money necessary for the purchase of blood hounds. These dogs will be available for hire within a radius of fifty miles.

The Wabash sections along the line quit their job last Tuesday on account of a raise in time. Last fall they were receiving $1.50 for 10 hours, later they were cut down to $1.35 for 8 hours work. The company then demanded 9 hours work at the same wages, the strike resulting. Word came Thursday that if the men did not go to work that men would be shipped in, so Friday morning two of the men decided to work. We believe they are wise in staying by it as work is rather slow in showing itself.

Many private bankers in Indiana who neglected to file reports of their condition with the state auditor within five days after the call will be required to pay the penalty prescribed by the law. The last call was made Feb. 23. Many of the private banks have not yet reported. The penalty is a fine of $100 to $500. The inference is that some private banks would sooner pay the penalty than allow their true condition to become known In time depositors will grow suspicious of banks that refuse to comply with the law.

The new law for regulating the wages and setting forth what qualifications teachers must have will go into effect on the first day of next August, and then teachers will likely get more pay. This means that the various township and school corporations of this county will have to pay a great deal more for the services of a teacher next year than last. For beginning teachers, the daily wages shall not be less than an amount determined by multiplying two and one-half cents by the general average given such teachers in his highest grade of license at the time of contracting. For teachers having had a successful experience of one year, the general average shall be multiplied by three cents, and teachers having had a successful experience of three years or more, shall be not less than an amount determined by multiplying three and one-half cents by their general average. Experienced teachers shall have added to their general average of scholarship and success two percent for attending the county institute the full number of days. Beginning teachers may have two per cent added to their average scholarship, not having taught, they have no item of success.

Free Consent of the People.

The "pioneer American Democrat" was the Rev. Thomas Hooker of Connecticut, who, in a sermon in Hartford in the year 1633, said, "The foundation of all authority is firstly laid in the free consent of the people." There, in embryo, were the Revolution and the great republic. In the "Fundamental Orders of Connecticut," inspired by Hooker and adopted at Hartford in 1638, we have the first written constitution known to history that created a government. And that government was as near a perfect democracy as the world has ever seen.—New York American.

THE WILL AND THE WAY.

By Henry F. Cope.

The most important conviction that can come to any man is this, that it is entirely in his own power to determine his destiny. The freedom of the will is more than an abstraction of philosophy; it is a working fact that has, by its realization, brought man to self-realization, to freedom and salvation.

The coward and the weakling may seek refuge in heredity and in environment, but none will escape responsibility for his own life by blaming his grandfather or his neighbor. If circumstances mold you it is because you are pliable; you are the willing clay where you should be the sculptor.

No man who waited for winds of circumstance ever found himself wafted to the skies. Character never is a windfall. Ideals and opportunities offer themselves from without, but we must up and possess them for ourselves. We never shall enter the desirable land of what we would be by any other way than deliberately setting out for it.

How many are going through all their days, drifting, waiting for some favorable tide or heavenly wind to swell the sails and carry them to any desirable haven. They would be good if they could be good without the investment of energy; they would be willing to be wound up and made to run in the right way if some one else would do the winding.

Supposing goodness could be conferred from without, how much good would it do us? Nothing becomes the possession of character except as a result of determination and endeavor on the part of the individual. Beauty of life never is the product of passivity. Character admits of no external compulsions.

No power of heaven or earth can force us to be good either against or even without our wills. The only good we have is that we will to have and to be. There is no power that wills our ill, nor any, outside ourselves, that can take from us the power to choose and to achieve the highest. Any other view of life finds its source either in superstition or in sloth.

The creature of circumstance is a pitiable object, a piece of driftwood where a strong swimmer ought to be, a craven crying for mercy where the courageous rejoicing to find strength and the prize through struggle should be. We ought to make this world so that the weak can develop their wills and find their salvation; but we never can wisely make it so that the deliberate derelicts all can find fair havens.

Life with all it brings of joy and care, of weal and woe, is just the call to eternity to man, crying out to the soul to set itself free, to gain the high prizes, to will to do and be and overcome. Everything is decided by how you face your life, whether with complainings and fear or with rejoicing and resolution for its struggle.

In a world where character is developed by freedom of choice and by exercise of will the greatest curse that could come would be to have no need, no trial, no sorrow, no difficulties, nor disappointments, to be free from the strenuous choices. These are the challenges of fate, the ways to power, the paths to salvation.

What, then, has religion to do with realizing the full life? Does it not offer divine aid which, regardless of our wills, can carry us on to perfection? If it does, it offers that which is valueless because conferred and therefore only external, a robe of righteousness where we need the righteous life within.

This is what religion offers; ideals, opportunities, sympathies, inspiration, environment, and nurture for the realization of the best life. Yet all these wait for our wills. The kingdom of love and peace is thrust on no one; all enter it who set their faces steadily toward it.

Yes, says one, that may be good gospel for the strong; but my will is weak; that is the way of the mighty; I cannot walk in it. If your will is weak it is because it is unused. Your will is as strong as you believe it to be. With what strength you have seek the best, endeavor to breathe the air of heaven; every high thought will be a tonic; in all things will to do the best; your will will respond to the exercise, will find harmony with higher will, and you will find the way of strength.

INFLUENCE OF CHARACTER.

By Rev. J. O. Davis.

They brought forth the sick into the streets * * * that at least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them.—Acts. v. 15.

While we are not told in so many words that those upon whom the shadow of Peter fell were healed, the context implies that those who had faith to be healed received the gift of health. The apostle would have been the first to disclaim that the healing was due to any power or virtue inherent in himself; it was an unconscious pouring forth of power that was his before he had been "with Jesus" and learned of him.

Marvelous as this unconscious pouring forth of power seems, it is a fact that each one of us is constantly exercising an analogous power, not over the bodies of men, but over the minds and souls of those with whom we come into contact. One passes down the street; all unconsciously his shadow falls, for good or for ill, upon some one. An influence, like some subtle perfume, has been exhaled. It is this influence, unconsciously wielded, that really counts, for it depends upon what we are and we show our true selves when we are off our guard.

A man may seem everything that a gentleman should be when away from home. His home life may show that in reality he is a cad or a blackguard. It is the atmosphere of the home that really influences a child's life. If parents are selfish, fault-finding, quarrelsome, the most faithful instruction in unselfishness and love will make little impression. The shadow unconsciously cast is more powerful than any conscious effort.

One occasionally meets a physician whose presence in the sick room is almost as potent an agent of health as his drugs. There are men and women whose presence is a benediction; before them evil seems stilled, the voice of the slanderer is stopped. The whole community is better because they are living in it. On the other hand, there are those whose presence arouses all that is evil in us.

The sort of shadow we are casting depends, to a certain extent, upon treatment, but mostly upon character. If parents have cultivated in themselves a spirit of unselfishness and of love their children will unconsciously breathe in the same spirit—it is the atmosphere of the home in which they live.

If we cultivate a spirit of contentment and of cheerfulness we will unconsciously exhale the same spirit. If we cultivate within ourselves the spirit of love and of meekness and of peace, others will feel better because we have passed by—they will perceive that we, too, have been "with Jesus."

HYMNS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

National Hymn.

My country! 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty,
Of thee I sing;
Land where my fathers died!
Land of the pilgrim's pride!
From every mountain side
Let freedom ring!

My native country, thee,
Land of the noble free,
Thy name I love;
I love thy rocks and rills,
Thy woods and templed hills;
My heart with rapture thrills,
Like that above.

Let music swell the breeze,
And ring from all the trees
Sweet freedom's song:
Let mortal tongues awake;
Let all that breathe partake;
Let rocks their silence break—
The sound prolong.

Our fathers' God, to thee,
Author of liberty,
To thee we sing;
Long may our land be bright
With freedom's holy light;
Protect us by thy might,
Great God, our King.

Punishments for Murder in Europe.

Some interesting information concerning punishments for murder in foreign countries has been issued by the British Home Office. The countries which inflict no death penalty, however brutal or premeditated the crime, are Italy, Holland, Norway, Switzerland, Portugal and Russia, save where the lives of the Emperor, the Empress and the heir to the throne are concerned. The Canton of Zug, in Switzerland, imposes the lowest minimum penalty in the world, three years' imprisonment, for willful homicide, the maximum punishment being imprisonment for life. Of those countries which inflict the death penalty, but rarely carry it out, Sweden is most notable. Capital punishment is inflicted by decapitation, but the penalty imposed for premeditated murder is almost invariably commuted to penal servitude for life. Germany distinguishes between two kinds of murder—one, premeditated and intentional, is punishable by death; the second, intentional homicide without deliberation, is punishable by penal servitude for from five to fifteen years.

WORK OF CONGRESS

Senator Lodge of Masachusetts Thursday strongly indorsed the Aldrich currency bill in the Senate and declared that it would be serviceable as an emergency measure. Senator Paynter of Kentucky opposed the bill. Referring to Senator Depew's recent remarks about "night riders" and barn burning in Kentucky, Senators Paynter and McCreary of that State condemned such lawlessness and denounced the tobacco trust. The post-office appropriation bill had rough sailing in the House. The attacks were begun on the section relating to the pneumatic tube service, which was changed so that extensions of such service should not be confined to the cities named, but should be made wherever the Postmaster General may think best. The House was a unit for withholding a portion of the pay to railroads for transportation of mails until a correct system of weighing should be established. A vigorous but ineffectual fight was made on a proposition to increase by $2,000,000 the appropriation for paying the expenses of railway mail clerks while traveling on business of the department.

-:—:-

Senator Bacon of Georgia in the Senate Friday spoke of executive encroachments on the legislative power of the government and read freely from newspaper reports to show that legislation is being mapped out in the White House at conferences at which Congressmen are not even present. The bill providing for the shipment of material intended for the Panama canal in American ships was passed. Senator Simmons of North Carolina spoke in favor of the ocean mail shipping bill. Carrying the largest appropriation in all its history—$222,190,392—the postoffice appropriation bill the same day passed the House. This is $1,425,000 more than was reported by the committee. Chairman Overstreet opposed the proposition to increase the pay of letter carriers, but that action was confirmed, 136 to 126. The appropriation for the rural delivery service was increased $200,000.

-:—:-

The Senate was not in session Saturday. Members of the House were afforded an opportunity, under license of general debate, to express their views on topics of the day. Among other subjects politics, the recent financial panic, the tariff and the Sherman anti-trust law were discussed while the pension appropriation bill technically was under consideration. Among the speakers were Mr. Hamlin of Missouri, who placed on the shoulders of the Republicans the responsibility for the recent panic; Mr. Langley of Kentucky, who wanted pensions granted certain persons in Kentucky who aided in suppressing the rebellion, and Mr. Hughes of New Jersey, who desired the Sherman anti-trust law amended so as to work less hardship on labor organizations.

-:—:-

Under the guise of discussing legislation the session of the Senate Monday was devoted to a political discussion, in which Senator Tillman of South Carolina and Senator Beveridge of Indiana were the chief participants. The conference report on the Indian appropriation bill was disagreed to and another conference asked. The House bill appropriating $403,030 to pay the archbishop of Manila, as representative of the Roman Catholic Church, for damage to church property during the Spanish war, was passed. The session of the House was devoted to the consideration of bills under suspension of the rules. A number were passed, including one providing for the restoration of the motto, "In God We Trust," on American coins, and another increasing the efficiency of the medical department of the army. Other bills passed were the following: Granting to local steamboat inspectors authority to pass upon the fitness of officers and crews of steam vessels; recognizing the consular service and amending the game laws of Alaska so as to substitute the license system for the present permit system.

-:—:-

After speaking for two and a half hours in the Senate Tuesday on the pending currency bill, Senator La Follette asked permission to suspend his remarks and conclude Wednesday. Senator Aldrich reported from the committee on finance amendments to the bill exempting railroad bonds from the classes of bonds to be used to secure emergency currency, limiting the retirement of such currency and providing that such issues should be permitted up to the par value of bonds used to secure them. Praise of President Roosevelt, Secretary Taft and William J. Bryan was heard in the House during general debate on the pension appropriation bill.

-:—:-

After a ten-minute session the Senate Wednesday morning adjourned out of respect to the memory of the late Senator Whyte of Maryland. General debate on the pension appropriation bill continued for over four hours in the House. The subjects discussed took a wide range, politics, finance, the trusts and the President's last special message all receiving attention. Mr. Mouser of Ohio predicted the election of Secretary Taft for President, while Mr. Hull of Tennessee in an arraignment of the Republican party appeared equally confident that William J. Bryan would be the successful candidate. At 4:24 p. m. the House adjourned out of reject to the memory of the late Senator Whyte.

I AM A MOTHER

How many American women in lonely homes to-day long for this blessing to come into their lives, and to be able to utter these words, but because of some organic derangement this happiness is denied them.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

Mrs. Maggie Gilmer, of West Union, S. C., writes to Mrs. Pinkham: "I was greatly run-down in health from a weakness peculiar to my sex, when Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me. It not only restored me to perfect health, but to my delight I am a mother."

Mrs. Josephine Hall, of Bardstown, Ky., writes: "I was a very great sufferer from female troubles, and my physician failed to help me. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound not only restored me to perfect health, but I am now a proud mother."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness or nervous prostration. Why don't you try it?

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

FIFTEEN YEARS OF ECZEMA.

Terrible Itching Prevented Sleep—Hands, Arms and Legs Affected—Cuticura Cured in 6 Days.

"I had eczema nearly fifteen years. The affected parts were my hands, arms and legs. They were the worst in the winter time, and were always itchy, and I could not keep from scratching them. I had to keep both hands bandaged all the time, and at night I would have to scratch through the bandages as the itching was so severe, and at times I would have to tear everything off my hands to scratch the skin. I could not rest or sleep. I had several physicians treat me but they could not give me a permanent cure nor even could they stop the itching. After using the Cuticura Soap, one box of Cuticura Ointment and two bottles of Cuticura Resolvent for about six days the itching had ceased, and now the sores have disappeared, and I never felt better in my life than I do now. WESTERN CANADA CROPS CANNOT BE CHECKED.

Oats Yielded 90 Bushels to the Acre.

The following letter, written the Dominion Government Commissioner of Emigration, speaks for itself. It proves the story of the agents of the government that on the free homesteads offered by the government it is possible to become comfortably well off in a few years:

Regina, Sask., Nov. 23, 1907.

Commissioner of Immigration, Winnipeg:

Dear Sir—It is with pleasure that I reply to your request. Some years ago I took up a homestead for myself and also one for my son. The half section which we own is situated between Rouleau and Drinkwater, adjoining the Moose Jaw Creek; is a low level and heavy land. We put in 70 acres of wheat in stubble, which went 20 bushels to the acre, and 30 acres of summer fallow, which went 25 bushels to the acre. All the wheat we harvested this year is No. 1 hard. That means the best wheat that can be raised on the earth. We did not sell any wheat yet, as we intend to keep one part for our own seed, and sell the other part to people who want first-class seed, for there is no doubt if you sow good wheat you will harvest good wheat. We also threshed 9,000 bushels of first-class oats out of 160 acres. Eighty acres has been fall plowing, which yielded 90 bushels per acre, and 80 acres stubble, which went 30 bushels to the acre. These oats are the best kind that can be raised. We have shipped three car loads of them, and got 53 cents per bushel clear. All our grain was cut in the last week of the month of August before any frost could touch it.

Notwithstanding the fact that we have had a late spring, and that the weather conditions this year were very adverse and unfavorable, we will make more money out of our crop this year than last.

For myself I feel compelled to say that Western Canada crops cannot be checked, even by unusual conditions.

I am, dear sir, yours truly,

Epilepsy, Fits

Convulsions, or Spasms and St. Vitus' Dance are Nervous Diseases. Most cases can be cured by strengthening and building up the nervous system. To do this a nerve medicine is needed. Dr. Miles' Nervine will be found efficacious and satisfactory. It has cured many cases of these diseases and we believe it will cure you. We can give you names of many who have been cured through its use. Write for advice.

"My son John had epilepsy for years, and after having him treated by specialists for over 2 years he still continued to have spells. I had almost given up in despair, but knowing the virtue of Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills for sick headache, I concluded to try the Nervine. During June, 1906, I gave him a teaspoonful three times a day, then in July I gave it as directed, and I could see that he was improving, and he has not had a spell since August 28, 1906, and has taken no medicine since Jan.-07. I am writing the case just as it is hoping it will induce others to try it."

Cadmir Woodcox of Garrett, visited his mother, who has been quite sick several days this week.

Mrs. Albert Webster was taken to Marysville Thursday, where she will live with her parents in the future. They are very poor people and have received aid from the county during the past winter. They have two small children, the eldest of which is about three years. The affair is rather distressing as Mrs. Webster is subject to epilepsy. While the husband was on his return to St. Joe, his wife phoned on ahead and had a neighbor tell him that she had decided not to live with him any longer This made him despondent, and he brooded over his troubles so much that he decided to take his own life, but was persuaded by neighbors not to do so. He divided his goods and sent her what belonged to her and sent the rest to his mother, who resides in Hicksville. He left here yesterday, stating that he did not know where he would land. In his present condition it would not be surprising to hear of his doing away with himself.

Temporarily idle, its SAFETY should be your first consideration.

The CERTIFICATES of DEPOSIT of THE GRABILL STATE BANK are absolutely safe because our Capital, Surplus, Undivided Profits and Loans exceed our Depositor's liabilities by over 100 per cent. This bank is the authorized depository for Cedar Creek, Springfield and Perry Townships. Our loans are examined and approved by our board of directors. We are under supervision of the State Auditor.

These are some of the reasons why you can have absolute confidence in the CERTIFICATES of DEPOSIT of this bank. They are issued in any sum of $1.00 and upwards, bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent payable semi-annually or annually and are negotiable by endorsement for their face value.

If you have surplus money bringing you less than 4 per cent, or if you want to be perfectly sure that your money is safe, we strongly recommend CERTIFICATES of DEPOSIT of this bank. We also furnish pass book and check book free of charge to those desiring to open checking accounts.

The officers of the bank will appreciate your calling upon them at any time when in Grabill. Our motto, Safe, Conservative and Courteous.

The L. L. C.

There being no Irish in St. Joe to do honor to St. Patrick, the L. L. C. undertook to commemorate the good Saint's day by giving one of their inimitable social functions at the home of Mrs. D. F. Benninghoff, last Wednesday evening, sickness having necessitated a postponement of one week. The house was tastefully decorated with potted plants: flags of Ireland, shamrocks, Irish potatoes and pigs (not live ones.) After the regular program of the evening, various contests were indulged in, all of a character befitting the occasion. Irish stories and anecdotes of Pat, Mike and Bridget helped to make up the pleasantries of the evening. A two course luncheon was served consisting of salad, bread and butter sandwiches, potato chips and olives, for first course. Cake, lemonade and after-dinner mints, second course.

Besides the regular club members, several guests were present, this being a surprise which the committee in charge perpetrated on the rest of the club ladies.

Much credit is due the committee for their efforts in making the evening a success.

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Telegraphic Information Gathered by the Few for the Enlightenment of the Many.

Earthquake Shakes City of Mexico.

Mexico City was visited by two severe earthquake shocks, the first shock lasting four minutes and twenty-eight seconds. No lives were lost and the property damage was insignificant though numerous walls were cracked by the motion of the earth's waves. The shock was very similar to that felt in that city about a year ago. A second and more severe earthquake shock cracked walls and clocks all over the city were stopped. Theatre crowds rushed to the streets. The people are considerably alarmed over the repeated shocks. No great damage has yet been reported, though a number of walls have fallen. For a short time telegraph communication was interrupted. Investigation showed that four people were injured during the quake, one mortally. The shock was felt over an area of some 500 miles from north to south, expending itself at Guanajuato, on the north and Rincon Antonio on the south. Calle San Francisco, the main thoroughfare of the city, was cracked in places for many blocks.

Fire Destroys Well-Known Hotel.

Fire practically destroyed the Leland hotel in Springfield, Ill., one of the best known hotels in the country. The flames originated from some unknown cause in the upper portion of the northwest corner of the building, and driven by a high wind, soon spread throughout the top story and burned through the roof. The Republican State convention was in session at the Armory and all of the delegates were there. Most of them lost their baggage. No lives were lost. The hotel stood at the corner of Sixth street and Capital avenue, and was four and one-half stories high. Total loss estimated at $70,000.

River Steamer Goes Down.

The steamer Columbia, towing a Marietta, Ohio, show boat, was sunk at lock No. 18 in the Ohio river, above Parkersburg, W. Va. The boat ran into the lock wall and sank in two minutes. The crew was saved as were also the actors on the show boat. A misunderstanding of signals is said to have caused the accident. There were several narrow escapes from death which fact led to the circulation of confusing reports. The steamer Columbia wa sa total loss.

Shuts Fifty Firetrap Buildings.

Seventeen schools, nineteen churches, with theatres and public halls in Elgin, Ill., have been condemned by Mayor Price as firetraps and ordered to be closed. Fifty buildings in all have been declared unsafe. Among them are the fine new Y. M. C. A. building, Elgin Academy, one of the finest schools in the West, and the Chicago Telephone Company's building. Enormous expenditures will be necessary to put the structures into proper condition.

Stevens Is Dead from Wounds.

Durham White Stevens, the diplomat who was shot down in San Francisco, Cal., by the Korean, In Whan Chang, on Monday morning, died late Wednesday night at the St. Francis hospital after an operation which disclosed a more serious condition of his wounds than had been apprehended by the surgeons. At his bedside when he died, besides the doctors, was the Japanese consul general, Choso Koike.

One Killed; Two Injured.

One man, Andrew Tusel, was instantly killed and two others seriously injured at Peoria, Ill., by the caving in of a wall of the Hart Weigher Company, which was recently destroyed by fire. The high wind caused the wall to topple over. About fifty men were at work clearing away the debris when the accident occurred.

GET BUSY ON LAWS, DEMAND OF ROOSEVELT

Short, Sharp Message to Congress, Urging Action on Pending Bills.

TO AMEND SHERMAN ACT.

Employers' Liability and Labor Injunction Statutes Need Changing.

President Roosevelt Wednesday sent a special message to Congress which is expected to stir the do-nothing legislators into useful if tardy activity. The communication from the White House is, in fact, a protest against congressional dolce far niente and the slumbrous loquacity of the Senate. In it Mr. Roosevelt outlines and urges action as follows:

Tariff—Immediate placing of wood pulp on the free list, with a reduction of the duty on paper made from wood pulp; also provision for collecting data that tariff revision may be undertaken at the next session of Congress, the necessary information to be gathered by congressional committee and government agents.

Labor—Legislation prohibiting temporary restraining orders without notice in labor disputes. Petitions for permanent injunctions to be heard speedily; issue in contempt proceedings to be decided by another judge; nothing to be done to legalize either the black list or the boycott.

Anti-Trust Law—Amendments permitting industrial, labor and farmers' combinations whose objects do not conflict with the principles of justice and freedom.

Interstate Commerce Law—Amendment giving railways right to form traffic agreements subject to the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Amendment giving power to the commission to make public and pass upon all securities issued by railways.

Financial—Action by Congress at the present session. Establishment of postal savings banks also recommended.

Child Labor—Prohibition throughout the nation. Model law for District of Columbia.

Employers' Liability—Immediate reenactment of a law conforming with Supreme Court's ruling. Also a law giving compensation to employes injured or killed in service of government.

The message is short and to the point. The President confines himself to a discussion of the legislation outlined and avoids subjects which have made his recent communications to Congress the theme of such widespread discussion.

Promise of a purse of $35,000 for his appearance in the ring Labor Day, in a long-distance battle with Jack Johnson, will pass unheeded, declared Champion Jim Jeffries, who said he would not reenter the ring for any purse.

WORK OF CONGRESS

Nearly the entire session of the Senate Friday was consumed by the consideration and final vote on the ship subsidy bill, which was passed without a division being called for. A bill was also passed increasing the salaries of men employed in the life saving service. President Roosevelt was roundly denounced in the House by Mr. Hardwick of Georgia for failing to send to Congress all information regarding corporations which had come into his possession. Mr. Mann of Illinois asserted that the President had acted with the utmost good faith in sending to Congress all information that had come to him. The discussion arose over a resolution by Mr. Hardwick to require the President to supply the House with all data so far obtained by the bureau of corporations. It was tabled, 148 to 115. The fortifications bill was taken up, but sidetracked for general debate.

-:—:-

Almost the entire session of the Senate Saturday was consumed with the consideration of the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, which was passed, carrying an appropriation of $32,945,631, the amount added to the House bill by the Senate being $642,718. Without being materially amended the fortification appropriation bill was passed by the House. During the closing debate the War Department was criticised by several members regarding the money spent on fortifications at Subig Bay. The Democrats procured the adoption of an amendment permitting the Secretary of War to purchase abroad "any" war material, but the Republican leaders soon rallied their members and reversed that action, leaving in the bill a restriction to "limited quantities."

-:—:-

The announcement of the death of Senator William James Bryan of Florida was made in the Senate immediately after the prayer by the chaplain Monday, whereupon, in respect to his memory, the Senate adjourned. In the House Mr. Mann of Illinois charged that Mr. Sulzer of New York had put in the Congressional Record what purported to be a speech delivered by him last Saturday, but which Mr. Mann charged was not the one delivered. A resolution offered by Mr. Mann to expunge the printed speech from the record was adopted by a strict party vote, but not until after the House had been treated to a bitter denunciation of Mr. Mann by Mr. Sulzer and several lively tilts between the latter and the Speaker. After passing a number of measures relating to the District of Columbia the House adjourned out of respect to the memory of the late Senator Bryan.

-:—:-

The currency bill was practically given an exclusive right of way in the Senate Tuesday until finally disposed of by an announcement from Senator Aldrich that he would move Wednesday to give it that status. Senator La Follette concluded the third installment of his speech on the bill. A question brought out a statement by Mr. Aldrich that he hoped to see the creation of a joint commission of the Senate and House authorized to consider permanent currency reform before Congress adjourned. Determination to conduct a filibuster on all occasions where opportunity presented itself, in order to force the Republicans to action on an employers' liability bill and other measures deemed necessary of enactment was announced by Mr. Williams of Mississippi in the House. General debate on the agricultural appropriation bill continued throughout the day, except for a brief time, when Mr. Sulzer of New York, by way of retaliation for the action of the House Monday in eliminating from the record his speech of Saturday last, sought to have expunged some remarks of Mr. Dalzell of Pennsylvania regarding the rules. In that, however, he was unsuccessful.

-:—:-

Voting on amendments to the currency bill consumed nearly the entire session of the Senate Wednesday. All of the committee's amendments were accepted and incorporated in the bill, and all other amendments, except one, were disagreed to, the voting showing conclusively that only with the sanction of the committee could any change be made in the bill. In the course of a bitter denunciation of President Roosevelt on the floor of the House of Representatives Mr. Stanley of Kentucky compared him with Alexander Hamilton, whom he designated as "an obscure adventurer," and both of whom he said had profound contempt for the constitution and displayed everlasting impatience with its restraints. Mr. Bryan, he said, had the respect of the country as a statesman. Apparently ignoring Mr. Stanley's remarks, Mr. Cocks of New York, representing the President's district, defended the President against the recent attack of Mr. Willett. Mr. Willett, replying, declared his complete ability to defend all that he had said. All the remarks were made during general debate on the agricultural appropriation bill, the consideration of which had not been concluded when the House adjourned.

NATIONAL CAPITOL NOTES.

A special committee to consider bills for the establishment of a postal savings bank system was appointed by the committee on postoffices and post-roads in the Senate. The committee is composed of Senators Carter, Proctor, Burrows, Clay and Bankhead.

INDIANA DEMOCRATS DECLARE FOR BRYAN

State Convention Held at Indianapolis and Instructions for Nebraskan Are Framed.

LARGEST MEETING SINCE 1892.

Interest in Selection of Delegates to Denver Who Will Decide on National Committeeman.

Indianapolis correspondence:

The Indiana Democratic Convention Wednesday entered upon its two days' task of adopting a platform, naming a State ticket and selecting delegates to the National Convention at Denver.

All the thirty national delegates, which number includes the four selected by the committee on rules, will vote for William Jennings Bryan for President, and a majority of them will vote for the re-election of National Chairman Thomas Taggart as the Indiana member of the national committee. This will be done at Denver.

The program the first day included a brief session at 11 o'clock, district meetings in the afternoon to select twenty-six delegates to the National Convention and to name convention committees, and a night meeting at which all of the committees except that on resolutions reported, and the convention address was delivered by Robert W. Miers, of Bloomington, former Congressman from the Second District.

Attack Republicans.

Robert W. Miers, temporary chairman of the convention, in addressing the delegates alluded to William Jennings Bryan as the "idol of the people." He referred to the principles held by the fathers of the republic, and continued:

"The leaders of the Republican party have done nearly everything that the fathers feared. They have gone into a far country to spend their substance in riotous living. They have quadrupled the standing army. The doctrine of Alexander Hamilton is again revived and the doctrine of a strong, centralized government is in control—that a few men shall run the government and fewer control all the business of the country, until by reason of legislation by the Republican party along that line trusts have been formed by the thousands.

"We have to-day combinations and trusts controlling stocks of over $8,000,000,000, for the purpose of closing down factories, putting out the fires in the furnaces, turning laboring men out by the thousands to starve or crowd out other laboring men, in order that the combines and the trusts may control the output of the manufactories and fix the prices thereon.

"This enormous power has taken hold of every business and controls everything that the American people eat or wear, or with which the country is developed, until to-day many of the articles manufactured in this country are sold at a higher price at home than they are laid down in the markets of the world.

"They say that new trade has brought about new conditions which require large aggregations of wealth to handle. Is the expansion of trade only for the purpose of adding to the millions of the millionaire, and is its effect to be loss to thousands of men of small means? If that is the new trade we are expanding into, let us drop it, because it is a losing trade."

The session Thursday adopted a platform, named four delegates-at-large to the National Convention and selected a State ticket among the twenty-seven candidates, of whom seven were aspirants for the gubernatorial nomination.

The platform instructed the thirty Indiana National delegates to vote for Bryan and was unanimously adopted. The platform pledged the party, "when returned to power, to correct the evils that have grown out of Republican official shortcomings to an economical administration of public affairs and to a consistent enforcement of the laws relating to public welfare." "For nearly twelve years," says the platform, "the Republican party has been in absolute control of all the departments of national government, yet during that time colossal combinations of capital have dominated the people and illegal perversions of corporate laws have stifled competition and unfairly limited the opportunity of the individual citizen. We denounce the hypocrisy of the Republican party, which, while pretending to legislate against these conditions, deals only with the symptoms and not with the disease."

The candidates for Governor were Samuel M. Ralston of Lebanon, Carroll K. McCullough of Anderson, Thomas R. Marshall of Columbia City, L. E. Slack of Franklin, Thomas M. Kuhn of Richmond, C. G. Conn of Elkhart and William O'Keefe of Plymouth. For Lieutenant Governor the candidates were Frank E. Herring of South Bend, William P. O'Neill of Mishawaka and Frank J. Hall of Rushville.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Trade conditions in Chicago for the week are summarized by R. G. Dun & Co. as follows:

"Seasonable conditions have imparted a more hopeful tone to industry, and new demands make an improving exhibit in iron, steel, metal and woodworking, there being also steady additions to the machinery and hands employed. Building operations and heavy construction open promptly, the work in sight assuring a busy year, with heavy capital investment and the outlook strengthens the buying of structural needs, lumber and quarry products. Navigation between near-by lake ports is effected, thereby widening the general movement of freight, which aggregates heavier tonnage by rail than a month ago, although marketing of grain has slackened. Farm reports indicate widespread preparatory work and improvements.

"A healthy indication of the improvement under way is a better offering of commercial paper and an easier tendency in the cost of money. Currency shipments to the interior have fallen behind those at this time last year, but larger sums are being reserved for use in manufacturing and other property extensions while savings deposits are on the upturn. Few commodities disclose any significant decline in prices.

"Mercantile collections generally reflect increasing promptness, and credits are less disturbed by the lower commercial mortality this week. Retail trade progresses encouragingly, and is relatively very good at outside points, where higher temperatures have prevailed. Wholesale dealings in the principal staples include a very satisfactory gain in the number of new accounts, and the aggregate sales of textiles, footwear, men and women's wear, food products and hardware compare favorably with a year ago, although many buyers anticipated forward requirements more conservatively.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district number 32, against 30 last week and 20 a year ago. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 10, against 11 last week and 6 in 1907."

NEW YORK.

Improvement in sentiment and in actual demand continues, but it proceeds under the check rein of conservatism which limits buying to small lots of staple goods. Spring jobbing trade has apparently passed its zenith with a total trade larger perhaps than was expected some months ago, but smaller by far than a year ago. Fall trade is four to six weeks late in opening up. As hitherto the chief activity has been in dry goods and allied lines, especially millinery, which, so far as spring trade preparations are concerned, makes relatively one of the best showings. In industrial lines there is a good deal of irregularity. About 80,000 mill hands in New England have had wages reduced in the past ten days and production is only 65 to 75 per cent of the full possible output. The reduction in output in all textile lines has been so great as to cause question as to its being overdone. As regards the future, it might be said that while the outlook is hopeful, prospects seem to indicate a fluctuating trade in forthcoming months, or at least until probable crop yields can be pretty well measured.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending March 19 number 298, against 278 last week, 137 in the like week of 1907, 170 in 1906, 204 in 1905 and 215 in 1904. Canadian failures for the week number 39, as against 31 last week and 32 in this week a year ago.—Bradstreet's Commercial Report.

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY

CHAPTER XVII.—(Continued.)

This last appeal of Kate's was in answer to an expression of incredulity and doubt which had passed over the face of the lady below. It was successful in its object, for the ring of truth with which she spoke and the look of anxiety and terror upon her face were too genuine to be mistaken. The lady drew her rein so as to bring the carriage as near the wall as was possible without losing sight of Kate's face.

"My dear," she said, "you may safely tell me everything. Whatever I can do to help you shall be done, and where I am powerless there are others who are my friends and may be of assistance. Scully is my name—Mrs. Lavinia Scully of London. Don't cry, my poor girl, but tell me all about it, and let us see how we can put matters right."

Thus encouraged, Kate wiped away the tears which had been brought to her eyes by the unwonted sound of a friendly voice. Leaning forward as far as she could, and preventing herself from falling by passing her arm round a great branch which shot across the top of the shed, she gave in as few words as she could a detailed account of all that had befallen her. She described her guardian's anxiety that she should marry his son, her refusal, their sudden departure from London, her life at the Priory, the manner in which she was cut off from all human aid, and the reasons which made her believe that an attempt would be made upon her life. In conclusion, she narrated the scene which had occurred that very morning, when her guardian had tempted her to commit suicide. The only incident which she omitted from her story was that which had occurred the night before, for she felt that it might put too severe a tax upon Mrs. Scully's credulity. Indeed, looking back at it she almost persuaded herself that the sight which she had seen might be some phantom conjured up by her own imagination, weakened as she was in mind and in body.

Having concluded her narrative, she wound up by imploring her new-found friend to assist her by letting her friends in London know what had become of her and where she was. Mrs. Scully listened with a face which expressed alternately the most profound pity and the most burning indignation. When Kate had finished she sat silent for a minute or more entirely absorbed in her own thoughts. She switched her whip up and down viciously, and her usually placid countenance assumed an expression so fierce that Kate, looking down at her, feared that she had given her offense. When she looked up at last, however, she smiled so pleasantly that the poor girl was reassured, and felt instinctively that she had really found a true and effective friend at last.

"We must act promptly," she said, "for we don't know what they may be about, or what their plans are for the future. Who did you say your friends were?"

"Dr. Dimsdale, of Phillimore Gardens, Kensington."

"Hasn't he got a grown-up son?"

"Yes," said Kate, with a slight flush on her pale cheeks.

"Ah!" cried the good lady, with a very roguish smile. "I see how the land lies. Of course, of course, why shouldn't it? I remember hearing about that young man. I have heard about the Girdlestones also. African merchants they were in the city. You see I know all about you."

"You know Tom?" Kate cried in astonishment.

"Oh, don't let us get talking of Tom," said Mrs. Scully, good-humoredly. "When girls get on a subject of that sort there's an end to everything. What I want to know is business. In the first place, I shall drive down to Bedsworth and I shall send to London. But not to Phillimore Gardens. Hot-headed young men do foolish things under such circumstances as these. This is a case that wants careful management. I know a gentleman in London who is just the man, and who I know would be only too proud to help a lady in distress. He is a retired officer, and his name is Major Clutterbuck—Major Tobias Clutterbuck."

"Oh, I know him very well, and I have heard of you, too," said Kate with a smile. "I remember your name now in connection with his."

It was Mrs. Scully's turn to blush now. "Never mind that," she said. "I can trust the major, and I know he will be down here at a word from me. I shall let him have the facts, and he can tell the Dimsdales if he thinks it best. Good-by, dear, don't be unhappy any more, but remember that you have friends outside who will very quickly set all right. Good-by!" and waving her hand in encouragement, the good widow woke up the pony, which had fallen fast asleep, and rattled away down the lane in the direction from which she had come.

CHAPTER XVIII.

At four o'clock Mr. Girdlestone stepped into the Bedsworth telegraph office and wired his short message. It ran thus: "Case hopeless. Come on to-morrow with a doctor." On receipt of this he knew by their agreement that his son would come down. There was nothing for it now but that his ward should die. If he delayed longer the crash might come before her money was available, and then how vain all regrets would be.

It seemed to him that there was very little risk in the matter. The girl had had no communication with any one. Even of those around her Mrs. Jorrocks was in her dotage, Rebecca Taylforth was staunch and true, and Stevens knew nothing. Every one on the country side had heard of the invalid young lady at the Priory. Who would be surprised to hear that she had passed away? He dare not call in any local medical man, but his inventive brain had overcome the difficulty, and had hit upon a device by which he might defy both doctors and coroner. If all went as he had planned it, it was difficult to see any chance of detection. In the case of a poorer man the fact that the girl's money reverted to him might arouse suspicion, but he rightly argued that with his great reputation no one would ever dream that such a consideration could have weight with him.

Having sent the telegram off and so taken a final step, John Girdlestone felt more at his ease. He was proud of his own energy and decision. As he walked very pompously and gravely down the village street his heart glowed within him at the thought of the long struggle which he had maintained against misfortune. He passed over in his mind all the successive borrowings and speculations and makeshifts and ruses which the firm had resorted to.

Yet in spite of every danger and difficulty it still held up its head with the best, and would weather the storm at last. He reflected proudly that there was no other man in the city who would have had the dogged tenacity and the grim resolution which he had displayed during the last twelve months. "If ever any one should put it all in a book," he said to himself, "there are few who would believe it possible. It is not by my own strength that I have done it."

When he was half way to the Priory he met a small pony carriage which was rattling towards Bedsworth at a great pace, driven by a good-looking middle-aged lady with a small page by her side. The merchant encountered this equipage in a narrow country lane without a footpath, and as it approached him he could not help observing that the lady wore an indignant and gloomy look upon her features which was out of keeping with their general contour. Her forehead was contracted into a very decided frown, and her lips were gathered into what might be described as a negative smile. Girdlestone stood aside to let her pass, but the lady by a sudden twitch of her right hand rein brought the wheels across in so sudden a manner that they were within an ace of going over his toes. He only saved himself by springing back into a gap of the hedge. As it was, he found on looking down that his pearl-grey trousers were covered with flakes of wet mud. What made the incident more perplexing was that both the middle-aged lady and the page laughed very heartily as they rattled away to the village. The merchant proceeded on his way marveling in his heart at the uncharitableness and innate wickedness of unregenerated human nature.

Good Mrs. Scully little dreamed of the urgency of the case. Had she seen the telegram which John Girdlestone had just dispatched, it is conceivable that she might have read between the words, and by acting more promptly have prevented a terrible crime. As a matter of fact, with all her sympathy the worthy woman had taken a large part of Kate's story with the proverbial grain of salt. It seemed to her to be incredible and impossible that in this nineteenth century such a thing as deliberate and carefully planned murder should occur in Christian England. That these things occur in the abstract we are ready to admit, but we find it very difficult to realize that they may come within the horizon of our own experience. Hence Mrs. Scully set no importance upon Kate's fears for her life, and put them down to the excited state of the girl's imagination. She did consider it, however, to be a very iniquitous and unjustifiable thing that a young girl should be cooped up and separated from all the world in such a very dreary place of seclusion as the Priory. This consideration and nothing more serious had set that look of wrath upon her pleasant face, and had stirred her up to frustrate Girdlestone and to communicate with Kate's friends.

Her intention had been to telegraph to London, but as she drove to Bedsworth she bethought her how impossible it would be for her within the limits of a telegram to explain to her satisfaction all that she wanted to express. A letter, she reflected, would, if posted now, reach the major by the first post on Saturday morning. It would simply mean a few hours' delay in the taking of steps to relieve Kate, and what difference could a few hours more or less make to the girl? She determined, therefore, that she would write to the major, explaining all the circumstances and leave it to him what course of action should be pursued.

Mrs. Scully was well known at the post-office, and they quickly accommodated her with the requisites for correspondence. Within a quarter of an hour she had written, sealed, stamped and posted the following epistle:

"Dearest Toby—Who do you think I have come across down here? No less a person than that Miss Harston who was Girdlestone's ward. You used to talk about her, I remember, and indeed you were a great admirer of hers. You would be surprised if you saw her now, so thin and worn and pale. Still her face is very sweet and pretty, so I won't deny your good taste—how could I after you have paid your addresses to me?

"Her guardian has brought her down here and has locked her up in a great bleak house called the Priory. She has no one to speak to, and is not allowed to write letters. She seemed to be heart-broken because none of her friends know where she is, and she fears that they may imagine that she has willingly deserted them. Of course, by her friends she means that curly-headed Mr. Dimsdale that you spoke of. The poor girl is in a very low, nervous state, and told me over the wall of the park that she feared her guardian had designs on her life. I can hardly believe that, but I do think that she is far from well, and that it is enough to drive her mad to coop her up like that. We must get her out somehow or another. I suppose that her guardian is within his rights, and that it is not a police matter. You must consider what must be done, and let young Dimsdale know if you think best. He will want to come down to see her, no doubt, and if Toby were to come, too, I should not be sorry.

"I should have telegraphed about it, but I could not explain myself sufficiently. I assure you that the poor girl is in a very bad way, and we can't be too energetic in what we do. It was very sad to hear the positive manner in which she declared that her guardian would murder her, though she did not attempt to give any reason why he should commit such a terrible crime. We saw a horrid one-eyed man at the gate who appeared to be on guard to prevent any one from coming out or in. On our way to Bedworth we met no less a person than the great Mr. Girdlestone himself, and we actually drove so clumsily that we splashed him all over with mud. Wasn't that a very sad and unaccountable thing? I fancy I see Toby smiling over that. Ever yours,

"LAVINIA SCULLY."

The major called a cab and rattled away to Phillimore Gardens and thence to the office, without being able to find the man of whom he was in search. He then rushed down the Strand as quickly as he could, intending to catch the next train and go alone, but on his way to Waterloo station he fell in with Tom Dimsdale, as recorded in a preceding chapter.

The letter was a thunderbolt to Tom. In his worst dreams he had never imagined anything so dark as this. He hurried back to the station at such a pace that the poor major was reduced to a most asthmatical and wheezy condition. He trotted along pluckily, however, and as he went heard the account of Tom's adventures in the morning, and of the departure of Ezra Girdlestone and of his red-bearded companion. The major's face grew more anxious still when he heard of it. "Pray heaven we may not be too late!" he panted.

CHAPTER XIX.

When Kate had made a clean breast of all her troubles to the Widow Scully, and had secured that good woman's co-operation, a great weight seemed to have been lifted from her heart, and she sprang from the shed a different woman. It would soon be like a dream, all these dreary weeks in the grim old house. Within a day she was sure that either Tom or the major would find means of communicating with her. The thought made her so happy that the color stole back into her cheeks, and she sang for very lightness of heart as she made her way back to the Priory.

Mrs. Jorrocks and Rebecca observed the change which had come over her, and marveled at it. Kate attempted to aid the former in her household work, but the old crone refused her assistance, and repulsed her harshly. Her maid, too, answered her curtly when she addressed her, and eyed her in anything but a friendly manner.

She amused herself that morning by reckoning up in her mind what the sequence of events would be in London, and how long it would be before she heard from her friends. If Mrs. Scully had telegraphed, news would have reached them last night. Probably she would write as well, giving all the particulars about her. The post came in about nine o'clock, she thought. Then some time would elapse before the major could find Tom. After that, no doubt they would have to consider what had best be done, and perhaps would go and consult with Dr. Dimsdale. That would occupy the morning and part of the afternoon. They could hardly reach the Priory before nightfall.

Ezra would be down by that time. On the Saturday before he had arrived between five and six. A great dread filled her soul at the thought of meeting the young merchant again. It was merely the natural instinct of a lady shrinking from whatever is rough and coarse and antagonistic. She had no conception of the impending danger, or of what his coming might mean to her.

Mr. Girdlestone was more gracious to her than usual that morning at breakfast. He seemed anxious to efface the remembrance of his fierce and threatening words the day before. Rebecca, who waited upon them, was astonished to hear the way in which he spoke. His whole manner was less heavy and ungainly than usual, for now that the time of action was at hand he felt braced and invigorated, as energetic men do.

"You should study botany while you are down here," he said, blandly. "Depend upon it, one cannot learn too many things in one's youth. Besides a knowledge of natural science teaches us the marvelous harmony which prevails throughout the universe, and so enlarges our mind."

"I should very much like to know something of it," answered Kate. "My only fear is that I should not be clever enough to learn it."

"The wood here is full of wonders. The tiniest mushroom is as extraordinary and as worthy of study as the largest oak. Your father was fond of plants and animals."

"Yes, I can remember that," said Kate, her face growing sad as her mind traveled back to years gone by. What would that same father have thought, she wondered, had he known how this man opposite to her had treated her? What did it matter now though, when she would be out of his power?

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Juda Krim, aged 14, fell into a creek near Evansville and drowned before help could reach her.

Following the river floods at Elkhart, Frank Paulus, of that city, caught a pickerel weighing four pounds in his cellar.

The plant of the Leikauf Packing Company at Fort Wayne was damaged $4,000 by fire, caused by meat falling on smoldering sawdust.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Clymer, of Kosciusko County, have just celebrated near Mentone, the fifty-ninth anniversary of their marriage.

James D. Cole has purchased from William P. Beckett a farm of 200 acres near Aurora for $11,900. Mr. Cole will convert the property into a summer resort and erect on it a $10,000 hotel.

Joseph Troyer, helper at the Hoosier glass factory at Petersburg, fell on a broken bottle, nearly severing his right arm at the wrist. He narrowly escaped bleeding to death before a physician could be called.

Claude Babb, 2 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Babb, of Eaton, fell out of a window while he had a toy rake in his mouth and the prongs were forced through the roof of his mouth into the brain, killing him.

Twin boys of Martin Frye, a prominent farmer near Delphi, played with matches in the barn. Nothing is left of the building and contents, and a straw stack nearby. A horse and a colt, two calves and some hogs were cremated.

Philip LeFree, near Morocco, owns a span of bay mares, 34 and 36 years old, respectively, which are driven to the buggy almost daily, and make a strong team, being active and full of life. Mr. LeFree raised both animals, and, to his knowledge, neither has been sick.

The company of National Guard recently organized in Newcastle has been formally designated as Company K, Second Regiment. Uniforms and other equipment are epected soon. Arrangements are being made to obtain a site for a rifle range for rifle practice during the summer.

John H. Liendecker, 74 years old, and for many years actively identified with the business and political affairs is dead at his home in Newton. He was one of the original stockholders in the Ohio Valley Coffin Company. He represented his ward in the City Council, served as trustee of Zion Evangelical church.

Mrs. Isabelle Gray, a society girl, of Gary, is defendant in a suit in the Lake Superior Court, involving the ownership of sixty lots in the new addition to Gary. The lots are valued at $50,000. The property was of little value when Miss Grey came into possession. The Calumet Land Company is suing for mortgage rights in the property at issue by P. A. Bryan, city treasurer of Gary.

The African Methodist Episcopal church of Crawfordsville has completed the celebration of the sixty-first anniversary of the founding of the church. The anniversary was celebrated in a most fitting manner, special meetings being held for several evenings. There are two members of the church living who were charter members of the organization at the time of its founding in 1847.

While Mrs. Henry Schmitt, wife of a farmer near Evansville, was seated in a wagon holding her baby, the mules ran away at breakneck speed and the baby fell from its mother's lap into the wagon. William B. Clift, a car repairer, leaped into the wagon and seizing the infant, tossed it into the arms of a bystander, and finally brought the team to a standstill, thus saving the baby's life and that of its mother.

Michael J. Ditt, one of the wealthiest men and widely known in Eastern Indiana, was burned to death in a brush pile fire on his home farm near Liberty. He was 81 years old. He lived alone. Witt's wealth was estimated at $500,000. He owned a large tract of land on Millcreek, Cincinnati. Some years ago two of his children, girls, were burned to death, their clothing catching fire from a brush pile.

By terms of the will of August Bergschultze, who died several days ago at Evansville, his body is to be cremated and his ashes are to be buried under the roots of a big tree in Union Park, San Francisco. The executor will endeavor to carry out its provisions. For the last several winters Bergschultze visited in San Francisco, and he daily visited Union Park, where he spent hours at a time under the branches of a big tree known to people of San Francisco as the "McKinley tree." Bergschultze was one of the wealthiest men in Evansville, his estate being valued at several hundred thousand dollars.

Beginning next year Sidney will have a regular four-year High School course.

The Gem Garment store in New Castle was looted of $500 worth of plunder recently. The swag was hauled away in a wagon.

Willis E. Finch, of Elkhart, had his jaw broken when he was struck by the knee of a fellow employe whom he was "boosting" to an elevated place.

A new case was filed in the Circuit Court at Goshen against George S. Cobb, former trustee of Elkhart Township, charging him with embezzlement.

Residents of Somerset, Wabash County, have organized a detective society to catch horse thieves and other violators of the law. There are about fifty members.

While Benjamin Wilerson, of Osgo, was attempting to adjust a bridle on one of his horses the animal turned upon him and bit off the lower portion of one of Mr. Wilkerson's ears.

The Newton County Council at Kentland has refused to appropriate money for an examination of the books of the auditor and treasurer. The commissioners has asked for an appropriation of $600 for this purpose.

But for the timely warning of Andrew Driscoll, several prisoners would have made their escape from the Shelby County jail at Shelbyville recently, as the jail delivery had been planned for that time by the prisoners.

Geo. O. Eldridge, aged 56, vice president of the E. H. Eldridge Lumber Company, killed himself with a revolver in the barn in the rear of his home at Indianapolis. Financial worry is given as the cause of the suicide.

A national bank is being organized at Brownstown with a capital stock of $50,000, most of which has been subscribed. It will occupy the building formerly used by the People's State Bank. It will be called the First National Bank of Brownstown.

Mrs. Lydia P. Pollard, said to be the oldest music teacher in Indiana, and the only honorary member of the Indiana Music Teachers' Association, is dead at her home in Delphi. She was born in Ballymoney, Ireland, December 9, 1822, and she was the thirteenth child in the family.

Charles Kassebaum, 25 years old, was seriously injured while taking the Camp degree, in the I. O. O. F. fraternity at Sheridan. A large instrument, in which powder is held, was lighted and accidentally exploded beneath Kassebaum. An ugly flesh wound was made in his thigh, and he was hurled violently to the floor. Unless blood poisoning sets in it is believed the injury will not prove fatal.

By means of his passport, issued when he left Switzerland, also by means of photographs of his mother and brother, Louis Lauby, janitor at the court house at Washington, has established his identification as the rightful heir to an estate of $30,000 left by his brother, who died in Buck, Switzerland, eight months ago. Lauby left Switzerland for America thirty-seven years ago, and in all that time had written but one letter home.

Despondent over financial troubles, Emerson Posten, of Laporte, aged 42 years, kissed his fiancee, Miss Helen Crane, and, before she could wrest a revolver from his grasp, fired a bullet into his brain. Posten had been engaged in the restaurant business at Westville. The venture was not a success, and he became involved in debt. He was given $150 with which to settle the obligations he had incurred. He squandered the money in dissipation. Suicide followed.

A west-bound trolley car on the Fort Wayne & Wabash Valley line collided recently on a curve east of Delphi with a flatcar loaded with stones. The pilot was torn off the interurban car and the front end of the car was badly damaged. The flat car was completely demolished and the fact that no one was injured is a miracle. The passengers on the interurban were jolted about the car, but no injuries were reported. The work car was being used by trackmen who were filling in low places in the roadbed caused by the high water.

Myron Harrison, a member of the Indiana Boys School at Plainfield, has written a piece of music, entitled "The Golden Eagle," which shows rare merit for an amateur, and promises to become popular among musical organizations. The boy has pronounced musical talent, and the piece is entirely original with him. It is written for a full band of twenty-eight pieces, and Prof. G. W. Milhans, instructor of vocal, band and orchestra music in that institution, says that he has nothing among his many selections to compare with it. The music will be placed on the market.

Easy Confinement

If you have cause to fear the pains of childbirth, remember that they are due to weakness, or disease, of the womanly organs, and that healthy women do not suffer, like weak ones.

The specific, medicinal, vegetable ingredients, of which that famous, female medicine and womanly tonic

WINE OF CARDUI

is composed, will build up the womanly organs to a healthy state and thus prevent needless suffering.

"Before my confinement," writes Mrs. Rose Schubarth, of Monument, Colo., "I had such bearing-down pains I didn't know what to do. Cardui quickly relieved me. Some months later I had a fine 12-lb. baby, was sick only thirty minutes, and did not even have a doctor."

The submarine boat controversy seems to have narrowed down to a "Yes you did" "No I didn't" controversy between Capt. Richmond P. Hobson and ex-constructor Spear. There is no question but that the Electric Boat Company had a big lobby before Congress, and there was easy money around for anyone who was capable of earning it. Congressmen and correspondent alike. But the mere fact that there were so many suspicious circumstances and so few tangible facts developed before the investigating committee shows to what refinement the system of lobbying has been carried.

Both Congress and the President now deprecate the widespread tendency to make them out at odds with each other. Congress perhaps deprecates this more than the President

Both Congress and the President are fishing for the support of the labor unions with rods, nets and handlines. It is needed in the coming campaign, therefore it is reasonably certain that an employers' liability bill will be one of the few measures almost certain to pass out of the mass that are now dragging a snail like way through the halls of a reluctant Congress. The The President will have no need to send in a red hot message on the subject as was predicted In some quarters he would do. Congress is anxious to have the credit of passing such a measure, and it will be passed.

There is some prospect of a physical valuation of railroad property coming as a complement of the Aldrich Currency Bill. If it does, so much the better. But it will be merely a precautionary measure against future wrongdoing on the part of the railroads rather than a corrective measure against what they have already done. It would seem now that there is less likelihood of railroad bonds being used as a basis of banks note circulation under the regenerated currency law, and this too will be the prevention of what would have been a serious evil. If there can be passed a law for the federal supervision of railroad securities to prevent further stock or bonds being issued except against tangible property, it will prevent the injection of additional water into the stock. But it will not squeeze out the water already there. That will have to remain and be taken up by the process of absorption. The most vicious practice in this line in the past has been the issue of bonus stock distributed among the stockholders for no other reason than that the earnings of the road were too great to be decently distributed as a cash dividend or put into extensions and betterments. This added stock was water of the most limpid character. In many cases the increasing value of the railroad properties, due principally to the enhanced value of real estate at the terminals, has enabled some of the roads to grow up to these inflated values. In other cases the actual value is far behind the paper value. A physical appraisement will set forth these things in their true light, and a federal securities law will tend to hold stock issues down closer to real values. There is some chance of such a law being passed, and if it is it will be much needed legislation.

Sunday Recreation.

The clergymen of Rochester, N. Y., have united in a petition to the municipal authorities of that city, asking for the appointment of a recreation commission which shall have charge of Sunday amusements, and shall provide for open-air concerts in the parks and other forms of recreations for the masses on Sundays. These broad-minded clergymen do not attempt to dictate the form or recreation, but specify that it shall be "harmless," leaving the details to the commissioners.

There is no doubt that the tendency in this country is away from the strict Sabbatarianism of the Puritans and Pilgrims. Perhaps there is need for this particularly in the cities. The New England idea was bsed on the Jewish Sabbath. Its sacredness was emphasized by making it commemorative of the rest of Jehovah from the work of creation. The command was to keep it holy, but there was at first no ritualistic duties prescribed or religious services required. The instruction of the law and the prophets grew up later with the synagogues The conditions in this new world two centuries ago, with its scattered population of hard worked farmers, was sufficiently analogous to that in ancient Palestine to make the Jewish Sabbath appropriate.

But conditions have changed. The rural community no longer predominates in social life. Cities, towns and villages have sprung up on every hand The people do not exclusively labor out-of-doors. In the towns but a fraction of them do so. The stores, the manufacturies, the counting houses are full of toiling men, women and children who scarcely get a breath of fresh air or a glimpse of sunshine from early Monday morning until late Saturday evening. The crucial question of Sabbath observance for these—even if the holy day of rest be the criterion—is how shall it be spent to rest and invigorate both soul and body?

Though all religions are permitted and none are prescribed in this country, yet the preponderating sentiment entitles it to be called a Christian nation. Logically, therefore its sacred day should be a Christian Sabbath. This principle is, indeed recognized in the laws that designate Sunday as a legal holiday and prescribe for its observance as the Sabbath. The Jews would have taken Saturday, the Mohammedans Friday, there are certain Christians, such as the Seventh day Adventists, who agree with the Jews. But the overwhelming majority are agreed on Sunday, and the laws respect this opinion.

Granted, then, that it is to be a Christian Sabbath, how shall it be observed? Did the New England father err in modeling their observance of the day upon the Mosaic pattern? Or, if they were right in their day and generation, do the changed conditions demand a different plan for keeping the day sacred and devoting it to its proper purposes? The founder of Christianity is against a bigoted interpretation of the Jewish institution declared that "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." And, again, He said "Is it not lawful to do good on the Sabbath day?"

These expressions reach the pith of the matter. The day of rest from bodily or mental toil is necessary to preserve man in a state of health. Recreation, a change from the routine and surroundings of the week, also conserves the same end. Spiritual upbuilding, the elevating, refining and ennobling effects of worship and meditation are also helpful to the development of character. Music has in all ages been recognized as ennobling, refreshing, exhilarating Communion with nature helps to "look through nature up to nature's God." Fresh air and sunshine are medicine for soul and body. Physical exercise is wholesome for those who have sat by desks and tables, indoors all the week. Books with their stores of intellectual food or emotional stimulant are helpful to some who in their daily avocations are helpful to some who in their daily avocations are drudging with starving souls.

These suggestions arise in considering a proper, reverential and wholesome program for employing a Sabbath made for man. There are, of course, things to be avoided. Drunkenness, boisterousness and riotous conduct, undue excitement and any practices that would interfere with the wholesome enjoyment of the day by another, certainly do not form part of a proper observance of the Sabbath and are not conducive to wholesome Sunday recreation —Editor John B. Stoll in the South Bend Times.

April is an excellent month to hatch goose eggs.

The wife of a henpecked mail carrier usually has a free delivery.

Charcoal is nice to keep the hens and their little folks from having stomach and bowel troubles. Give it daily.

Don't stop feeding the hens just because they can get out on the ground once in a while. There is not much they can get to eat now, unless you give it to them.

In setting hens the forepart of this month, not more than thirteen eggs should be given them, as the nights are still chilly, and the hens cannot always command sufficient heat properly to take care of a larger setting of eggs.

Look out for that old scamp, the crow. He is around in full force now, and has his eye on your chicken coop. You can do this by putting a nice wire roof over the pen that the little fellows run in.

It is said that there are birds that do not like red any better than does the turkey-gobbler. They will some times attack people wearing red hats and have been known to attack women with red hair when out bareheaded. The catbird seems to have great antipathy to a brick red.

Before setting a hen, clean up each nest, scrub it out, and sift a quart of coal ashes into the bottom. Then make a mat of newspapers, saturate well with kerosene and place in the bottom of the nest; upon this sift another quantity of ashes, and then fill up with bright straw or other nesting material. Such nests will practically be louse proof.

Rush for Ben-Hur Seats. Today is Last Day.

The seat sale for Ben Hur, General Lew Wallace's Historical drama at the Majestic Theatre, at Fort Wayne, opened at the Majestic Box office, Monday at 9 o'clock, with about 200 ticket buyers in line, and at 10:30, when there was the first break in the line, over $1800 worth of tickets had been sold. All day long a steady stream of ticket purchasers were at the box office window, and together with the hundreds of out of town orders, which were all given immediate attention, the Majestic Box office had one of the most strenuous days in the history of the theatre.

The Majestic theatre can accomodate about 8,000 people for the four performances of Ben Hur, and while the seat sale was one of the largest in the history of the Majestic, there are still good seats to be had for any one of the performances.

The schedule of price, for this engagement, is, lower floor, $2.00, balcony $1.50 and $1.00

A modification of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law is one of the measures almost certain to pass. Several of the big corporations would feel safer if they were exempted from the operations of this law in more unmistakable terms than they are at present. Of course there is no thought in any quarter that that they might feel freer to give campaign "support" --- far be it from anyone to say "contribution," --- if such a law were on the statute books. Still they might feel that way, and there will be no harm in giving them a chance.

The Evolution of Household Remedies.

The modern patent medicine business is the natural outgrowth of the old-time household remedies.

In the early history of this country, EVERY FAMILY HAD ITS HOME-MADE MEDICINES. Herb teas, bitters, laxatives and tonics, were to be found in almost every house, compounded by the housewife, sometimes assisted by the apothecary or the family doctor. Such remedies as picra, which was aloes and quassia, dissolved in apple brandy. Sometimes a hop tonic, made of whiskey, hops and bitter barks. A score or more of popular, home-made remedies were thus compounded, the formulae for which were passed along from house to house, sometimes written, sometimes verbally communicated.

The patent medicine business is a natural outgrowth from this wholesome, old-time custom. In the beginning, some enterprising doctor, impressed by the usefulness of one of these home-made remedies, would take it up, improve it in many ways, manufacture it on a large scale, advertise it mainly through almanacs for the home, and thus it would become used over a large area. LATTERLY THE HOUSEHOLD REMEDY BUSINESS TOOK A MORE EXACT AND SCIENTIFIC FORM.

Peruna was originally one of these old-time remedies. It was used by the Mennonites, of Pennsylvania, before it was offered to the public for sale. Dr. Hartman, THE ORIGINAL COMPOUNDER OF PERUNA, is of Mennonite origin. First, he prescribed it for his neighbors and his patients. The sale of it increased, and at last he established a manufactory and furnished it to the general drug trade.

Peruna is useful in a great many climatic ailments, such as coughs, colds, sore throat, bronchitis, and catarrhal diseases generally. THOUSANDS OF FAMILIES HAVE LEARNED THE USE OF PERUNA and its value in the treatment of these ailments. They have learned to trust and believe in Dr. Hartman's judgment, and to rely on his remedy, Peruna.

Marriage Dickering in Hungary.

In some parts of Hungary it is the custom for the bridegroom to pay a sum to the bride's parents, and in case the parties cannot agree, the mayor acts as arbitrator. A mayor, who is a cattle dealer, recently had to decide a case of this kind, and after inspecting the bride decided that the bridegroom must pay the parents at the rate of half a crown for each pound that the bride weighed. The verdict was accepted, and the woman weighing eighty-six pounds, the bridegroom handed over the equivalent of $53.75, after which the wedding ceremony was performed.

LANGUID AND WEAK.

A Condition Common with Kidney Trouble and Backache.

Mrs. Marie Sipfle, 416 Miller St., Helena, Mont., says: "Three years ago my back grew weak and lame and I could not stoop without a sharp pain. It was just as bad when I tried to get up from a chair. I was languid and listless and had much pain and trouble with the kidney secretions. This was my state when I began with Doan's Kidney Pills. They helped me from the first and four boxes made a complete, lasting cure."

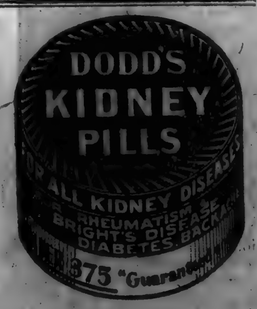
No Smoker.

The bishop of London, at a dinner in Washington, told a story, as the cigars came on, about one of his predecessors.

"When Dr. Creighton was bishop of London," he said, "he rode on a train one day with a small, meek curate. Dr. Creighton, an ardent lover of tobacco, soon took out his cigar case and with a smile, said: "'You don't mind my smoking, I suppose?'

"The meek, pale little curate bowed and answered humbly: 'Not if your lordship doesn't mind my being sick.'"



The Popular Pulpit

THE VOICE DIVINE.

By Henry F. Cope.

"God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets."—Heb. i., 1.

HENRY F. COPE

Through the ages men have waited for voices to speak from out the great unknown. Answering to this universal longing for larger light, to this search for truth, there has been the conviction that where our own scanty knowledge ended, there something akin to revelation would give us light. We have been listening for voices that would speak with an authority transcending that given to our fellows.

Cold reason may mock at revelation, but the soul struggling in darkness, baffled by its problems, lost in the night, still looks up and hopes. For what awaits us but despair if the mysteries of the universe are forever sealed, our questions forever unanswered, and no higher appeal to be known than that to our own selfish interests? It is not strange that men have heeded those who, though often mistaken or but impostors, have cried, "Thus saith the Lord!"

It would be strange if in a world of spirits there might be no communication of spirit. If the fairest thought of our era is that which was given us when man was taught to think of the omnipotent as father, it would be strange if there should be no way by which such a father might speak to his children. Such a world would contradict all our best instincts. Such a world would mean that man was better than his maker.

The divine voice speaks, but we too often listen in the wrong direction. It falls not from the skies; it comes not in strange, unusual ways of visions and portents. But it is ever speaking through the things of daily life; it is ever revealing truth and beauty to the inner ear, for it comes not from without but springs up within; heard by the heart rather than by the ear.

The best things have not dropped down; they have grown up. Life is not from without, but from within. God speaks not in thunders, but in the hopes and the longings of hearts. Even the voice we hear in the sighings of the wind or the message we read in the rays of setting sun must be in us before it means aught to us.

The ten commandments owe their force not to any writing on stone but to their writing on our hearts; to them the soul of man answers affirmatively. The only moral code we can follow is that which speaks with the authority of a conscience convicted. That does not mean that man is his own God, nor that he knows no law higher than himself; it does mean that by the laws of spiritual development the law is being written on every heart.

Every real revelation is a divine revelation, since all truth is divine. Once we thought the scientist the enemy of religion; now we know that whenever science lays bare one of the facts of the universe we do but look on what the finger of the Infinite has written. When religion fights truth simply because truth speaks an unfamiliar tongue or fails to respect her traditions, she is fighting against God himself.

Our need is not some strange, awe inspiring voice that shall break the silence of the midnight sky; our need is an ear trained to hear, a spirit to understand and reverence the sublime voices that are ever speaking in our world, the voices of the beauty of nature, the joy of living, the stories of everyday divine heroism, the forces that are making a new world to-day as truly as ever one was made long ago.

The life of our day has not less of the divine than the life of long ago; but the message is harder to read; it is for an educated race; it is spiritual rather than merely material; it is from within; it is found in every good impulse, in every outgoing sympathy, in the kindling of eye as friend greets friend, in the good that men are doing, in the toleration that is becoming wider, the love stronger between man and man.

God speaks to men now as He spoke to Moses or to David, though the manner may have changed. But the poor in spirit, those with whom pride of the past has not served to make them unwilling to learn, these hear the voice; the pure in heart see Him; the seekers after truth find Him, and to all He comes in the thrilling moment or in the quiet hour when the voice of the heart makes itself heard.

INTEGRITY A STIMULANT.

By Rev. Robert P. Kreitler.

What seest thou? And I said a plumb-line.—Amos vii., 8.

In the prime of his life there was granted the Prophet Amos a vision of a symbolic picture. He saw a master builder testing a wall. The wall and the builder did not attract his attention so much as the implement with which the wall was being tested. Used to determine whether the wall was true or not, it suggested a process by which the characters and lives of men were to be tested.

There is hardly a part of life without its visions, but the vision that counts is that which gives us enough of truth and righteousnes to inspire our lives. There is nothing which stimulates to nobler action more than a vision of integrity. Affection, genius, intellect, inspire men, for they give visions of life. But they count for nothing without integrity at the bottom. It is at the basis of life, individually and collectively.

Uprightness of character will outweigh ability and a clean life overbalances brains. There never was a time when there was greater need than at present to bring down close to the life of the average man the vision of integrity in action. The distressing discoveries that have revealed the lack of it in all walks of life have simply shown that too many of us are concerned with the husk, not the kernel. Character itself may well be regarded as a wall, for there is a kind of masonry which we must test by the plumb of integrity. Analyze character and we find it is the one great silent force which moves through the avenues of thought, feeling and action, until it shows others just what may be expected of us. Only one force reigns supreme in that character and keen observers can tell at a glance what that force is. To use our analogy, there is but one style of architecture influencing our character wall; the sensual man is building on bestial lines, the miser on those of money-getting, the philosopher of wisdom, the broad-minded, spiritual man on those of integrity and uprightness. And so it goes.

There is another point in the analogy. There is a vast amount of different materials being incorporated into our buildings. Earth, lime, stone, brick, wood and iron. But each must be tested by some standard of correctness before it is permitted a place. So in life. Our character wall must not have embodied in it anything but what will stand the highest test. In our use of the mental, moral, muscular, political and religious material heaped about us we must apply the test that will best help to produce a noble result.

As we build, courage comes from the prosaic fact that we can do only a little day by day. Stone upon stone, tier upon tier, is the old, old law. The form, style and expression of life being slowly turned into character, we test each day's work as we look toward a finished result. It is antiquated, but still true, that we do not become a devil or a saint in a day. We, as we grow into something different from all others, must constantly measure ourselves by the standards our visions have granted us.

It is a miserably sad thing to have the one opportunity of life come to us, an opportunity wherein we might show our integrity and our loyalty, and to awaken to the fact that slowly acts have become habits, habits character, and we are unable to live up to the opportunity.

It is a serious thing if we personally fail, but still more serious if we kill consciously the visions of integrity in others. In that sense we become "homocides," for the ancient Greeks believed the "homo" stood for the creature capable of aspiration and imagination.

HYMNS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

Invitation.

Come unto Me, when shadows darkly gather,
When the sad heart is weary and distressed,
Seeking for comfort from your heavenly Father,
Come unto me, and I will give you rest.

Large are the mansions in thy Father's dwelling,
Glad are the homes that sorrows never dim;
Sweet are the harps in holy music swelling,
Soft are the tones which raise the heavenly hymn.

There, like an Eden blossoming in gladness,
Bloom the fair flowers the earth too rudely pressed;
Come unto Me, all ye who droop in sadness,
Come unto me, and I will give you rest.

UP-TO-DATE DESIGNS FOR THE HOME DRESSMAKER

Misses' Blouse.

Even young girls are glad to have at least one blouse in the wardrobe that can be closed at the front and which does not mean the necessity for assistance in the putting on. This one is charmingly girlish and attractive, while it includes that feature and is adapted to a generous variety of materials. In the illustration it is made of taffeta with trimming of velvet ribbon and chemisette of simple embroidered net and is lined to make a thoroughly comfortable waist. But it can be utilized for the lighter silks, such as crepe de Chine and louisine for plaid as well as for plain colors, and also for all seasonable wool waistings and dress materials, while also it would make an excellent model for pique, madras and the like with the Nine Gored Skirt.

The skirt that is made in narrow gores is always a becoming one. It fits with perfect smoothness over the hips, yet it provides abundant and graceful fulness at the lower portion. It is adapted to all of the heavier materials, both the suitings and those designed for gowns and for odd skirts. It can be finished with a simple stitched hem as illustrated, or it can be trimmed with folds or bands or with braid applied in any way that may be liked,

FOUR GIRLS

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Read What They Say.

Miss Lillian Ross, 530 East 84th Street, New York, writes: "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound overcame irregularities, periodic suffering, and nervous headaches, after everything else had failed to help me, and I feel it a duty to let others know of it."

Katharine Craig, 2335 Lafayette St., Denver, Col., writes: "Thanks to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I am well, after suffering for months from nervous prostration."

Miss Marie Stoltzman, of Laurel, Ia., writes: "I was in a run-down condition and suffered from suppression, indigestion, and poor circulation. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me well and strong."

Miss Ellen M. Olson, of 417 N. East St., Kewanee, Ill., says: "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured me of backache, side ache, and established my periods, after the best local doctors had failed to help me."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration. Why don't you try it?

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

GROOMING COUNTS

But it cannot make a Fair Skin or a Glossy Coat.

Women with good complexions cannot be homely. Creams, lotions, washes and powders cannot make a fair skin. Every horseman knows that the satin coat of his thoroughbred comes from the animal's "all-right" condition.

Let the horse get "off his feed" and his coat turns dull. Currying, brushing and rubbing will give him a clean coat, but cannot produce the coveted smoothness and gloss of the horse's skin, which is his complexion. The ladies will see the point.

Lane's Family Medicine

Is the best preparation for ladies who desire a gentle laxative medicine that will give the body perfect cleanliness internally and the wholesomeness that produces such skins as painters love to copy.

FLASHES OF FUN

Farmer Squashleigh—I had a letter from Jack at college yesterday. Farmer Wayback—How much did he strike you for?—Somerville Journal.

"You don't agree then that 'seeing is believing?'" "Not much! I see some people every day that I never could believe."—Philadelphia Press.

Friend—I suppose the baby is fond of you? Papa—Fond of me? Why, he sleeps all day when I'm not at home and stays up all night just to enjoy my society!—Town and Country.

Finnegan—These scales is no good fur me at all, at all. They only weigh the heft of 200 pounds, an' I weigh near to 250. Flanagan—Well, man alive, can't ye git on thim twice?—Philadelphia Ledger.

"Don't you think that some men make a mistake in adopting politics as a career?" "Yes, but it isn't as serious as the mistake that politics makes in adopting some men as its representatives."—Washington Star.

"You paid that man a great compliment when you elected him to office." "Yes," answered Farmer Corntossel, "an' the compliment sort o' started a habit. He has expected everything complimentary ever since."—Washington Star.

Wilkins—Blinks says he does not know you at all. Bilkins—I'm not surprised. He never sees me, you know. Wilkins—But I thought you were members of the same church? Bilkins—Yes, but I invariably take up the collections.

Mr. Green—No, my dear; I will not tell you what I'm going to give you for your birthday. Why can't you women be content to wait and enjoy being surprised? Mrs. Green—Oh, tell me now! If you keep your word, I'll be surprised enough.

"If you marry Grace," exclaimed an irate father to his son, "I'll cut you off without a penny, and you won't have so much as a piece of pork to boil in the pot." "Well," said the young man, "Grace before meat." And he immediately went in search of a minister.

His Fiancee—Oh, yes, it's lovely being engaged to you, Jack. But I do wish you were a rich man, dear. He—How rich, darling? His Fiancee—Oh, rich enough for me to be able to snub the people I detest and still have them call me amiable.—London Opinion.

"And now, Uncle Ezra," she said just before the guests had begun to arrive, "please remember not to eat your pie with your knife." "All right, Lizzie, but I wish you'd tell that young woman that waits on the table to give me an extry spoon."—Chicago Record-Herald.

First Stranger—Excuse me, but that is my umbrella you have. Second Stranger—I don't doubt it. Just wait till I call a policeman. First Stranger—What for? Second Stranger—Burglars broke into my house the other night and left this umbrella.—Exchange.

Oil Magnate—Ah, my boy, a millionaire's position is a hard one. Skeptical Friend—As to how? Oil Magnate—If I hoard my wealth, they say I'm a skinflint, and if I try to give money away they say I am trying to ease my guilty conscience.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Wife (angrily)—Well, there's no use in arguing the matter any longer. When I set my foot down, that covers the entire ground. Husband (calmly)—I wouldn't make it quite that strong, my dear, but your foot certainly does cover a good deal of ground.—Exchange.

Disgusted Wife—Say, niggah, eber sence Ah married yo' yo's dun nuffin 'cept sit round de house. Doan yo' eber feel enny ambishion? Lazy Husband—Ah feels ambishion w'en Ah's sittin' round hyah, honey, but jes' 's soon 's Ah starts ter wo'k Ah gits discouraged.—Judge.

The family were discussing the coming wedding of the only daughter. "Of course," said the bride to be to her father, "you will give me away?" "I'm afraid I have done it already, my dear," he replied. "I told George only this morning that you had a disposition just like your mother's."

The elevated railroad guard resigned his position as an usher at the church. "It mixed me all up," he said. "When I was showing people into the pews on Sunday morning I'd tell 'em to step lively, and once or twice I started to take up a collection in the smoking car."—Chicago Tribune.

On coming home from church on Sunday Archie's mother asked him how he liked it, and Archie said it was fine. "What do you like most in the church?" asked his mother. "Well, the best part is where they pass around the money," and, turning to his father, said: "How much did you get? I got a dime."

FURIOUS HUMOR ON CHILD.

Itching, Bleeding Sores Covered Body—Nothing Helped Her—Cuticura Cures Her in Five Days.

"After my granddaughter of about seven years had been cured of the measles, she was attacked about a fortnight later by a furious itching and painful eruption all over her body, especially the upper part of it, forming watery and bleeding sores, especially under the arms, of considerable size. She suffered a great deal and for three weeks we nursed her every night, using all the remedies we could think of. Nothing would help. We tried the Cuticura Remedies and after twenty-four hours we noted considerable improvement, and after using only one complete set of the Cuticura Remedies, in five consecutive days the little one, much to our joy, had been entirely cured, and has been well for a long time. Mrs. F. Ruefenacht, R. F. D. No. 3, Bakersfield, Cal., June 25 and July 20, 1906."

$16 AN ACRE WAS REALIZED

On a Crop in Western Canada Last Year—Another Farmer Realises $22.50 per Acre from His Wheat Crop.

Charles McCormick, of Kenville, Manitoba, writes:

"During the season of 1907 I had 100 acres in crop on the S. W. quarter of section 18, township 35, range 27, west of the Principal Meridian, Western Canada, yielded as follows:

Eighty acres at 22 bushels per acre, which I sold for 90 cents per bushel, and 20 acres oats yielding 60 bushels per acre I sold for 35 cents per bushel, so that my total crop realized $2,004. From this I deducted for expenses of threshing, hired help, etc., $400, leaving me a net profit on this year's crop of over $1,600."

Thomas Sawatzky, of Herbert, Saskatchewan, says:

"The value of my crop per acre of wheat is $22.50. I threshed 1,750 bushels of wheat from 70 acres, and was offered 90 cents a bushel for it; oats, 15 acres, 500 bushels, and barley, 5 acres, 80 bushels. I do not know if I have been doing the best in this district, but I know if all the farmers were doing as well, Western Canada would have no kick coming as far as grain growing is concerned; and I further say that if you want to put this in one of your advertisements, this is true and I can put my name to it."

The telegraph end of the English post-office loses money.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by the inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

A Woman Tells How To Relieve Rheumatic Pains.

I have been a very great sufferer from the dreadful disease, rheumatism, for a number of years. I have tried many medicines but never got much relief from any of them until two years ago, when I bought a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. I found relief before I had used all of one bottle but kept on applying it and soon felt like a different woman. Through my advice many of my friends have tried it and can tell you how wonderfully it has worked.—Mrs. Sarah A. Cole, 140 S. New St., Dover, Del., Chamberlain's Pain Balm is a liniment The relief from pain which it affords is alone worth many times its cost. It makes rest and sleep possible. For sale by H. Then I was persuaded to try Dr. King's New Discovery. It helped me immediately, and after taking two and a half bottles I was a well man again. I found out that New Discovery is the best remedy for coughs and lung disease in all the world." Sold under guarantee at H. Milliman's drug store. 50c and $1.00 Trial bottle free.

Beef Going Higher.

The price of beef in the Fort Wayne packing houses jumped from 8¼ cents per pound to 10 cents Thursday. It has been on the incline for several days but this sudden leap caused no little complaining. The cause of this jump is due, it is said, to the great scarcity of cattle. Only twenty-five per cent of the stock in the country is being fed now because of the lack of corn and other cattle is not at present fit to kill. Another reason is the big cut in hides from 12 to 13 cents to 6 cents. The price of beef has to go up to counterbalance this loss. The probability is that beef will go still higher in a few days until it reaches 12 cents. Still people wonder why butchers can't sell their meat cheaper. Do you see why?

Prohibition or Party Politics.

The Prohibition party of DeKalb county have called their county convention to meet at Waterloo on Tuesday, the 14th, for the purpose of nominating a party ticket. They seem to want to get in the field early. We are thoroughly in sympathy with the prohibition of the liquor traffic, but if the purpose of the Prohibition party is simply to gain political power in the county, and the real proclaimed purpose of the party is only a secondary matter, then we have no use for such work. It has been our impression that the leaders in that party are looking to party politics with more fervor than to real prohibition, else they would not be in such a hurry about getting a ticket into the field, and would wait to see where they could throw their strength to have the most influence toward securing the end they profess to desire. When a man in the ordinary work of life REALLY desires to accomplish an end, it is the easiest and quickest way to reach that end that he adopts. He not only is willing but eager to adopt such methods, for it is not the method but the end that he desires. Yet the Prohibitionist not only insist on their way or no way, but they have the audacity to claim that what has been done in DeKalb county and in the nation was done by the Prohibition party. The Prohibitionists have been the agitators, the extremists, the fore-runners, but it has been the great conservative element in this county that has been doing things and will do them in the future. Several hundred democrats and republicans in this county are in position to make political concessions to not only hold the prohibition grounds secured in the county but to strengthen it in the county and eventually make the whole state and nation dry. But if the Prohibition party insists on their way and their way only, with no political concessions to any party, then they may gain a little for their party, but while they are doing that the saloon interests will elect their men to public office in the county and at least endanger the work already done if not loses it altogether.

We want to ask, what will a saloon man do when he goes to the polls to vote? Will he stick to any party? Will he vote for a pronounced temperance man on ANY ticket? The Prohibitionists censure democrats and republicans for sticking to their tickets yet the Prohibitionist sticks to his ticket with a tenacity that is blind to reason and conditions. If the Prohibition party men would say we are here to show by our deeds as well as words that we are for prohibition in any honorable way to get it and are ready to vote any ticket or for any candidate that will promote our cause, they would immediately find a large number of men in DeKalb county ready to follow their example and the saloon question in DeKalb county would be settled at once, and the county's influence in the State and finally the influence of the State in the nation would be felt for prohibition in a very short order.

Cut party politice out of the temperance question and the question will be settled right and quick.—Butler Record.

The following remarks on the other side of the question were handed us for publication.

It is indeed a source of satisfaction to those who have their country's welfare at heart, to witness the storm of protest in the form of editorials like the above, that are appearing in newspapers all over the land.

It shows that people are waking up and a free discussion of this all important subject cannot help but result in good. Old party leaders have at last been obliged under pressure of public sentiment to place in their political party a plank that favors local option either by counties or township and from whence came this change of sentiment or temperance wave if not from the one party which dared to come out boldly in defiance of wrong and has had the courage to voice its sentiments in regard to the worst foe that has ever cursed humanity. And yet the editor of the Record would have us desert the clear, clean cut and open declarations of the Prohibition party for a weak compromising measure the best that old party leaders have dared to adopt. Then complain that Prohibition leaders care more for political gain than for the principles advocated by their party. Does it not look as though some other person or persons thought more of political gain than principle when they say "We are thoroughly in sympathp with the prohibition of of the liquor traffic?" yet dare not openly espouse the right. A man is is no stronger than his party (politically). You may favor the the suppression of this business personally, yet if your party has not adopted measures for its entire suppression you count but a cipher. This thing is in politics, and it must be put out by politics, it is absurd to think of its being done any other way. The remonstrance system is at best only a makeshift affair, and besides it is inconsistent. It is inconsistent for it attempts to take the saloon away from the man who has paid his license, one law working against another, and both laws coming from the same source. Yes, Mr. Editor, we are ready to vote any ticket that will promote our cause, but we fail to see how how that cause can be advanced by measures that seek to please both good and bad elements. Liquor men will not vote our way, tney would be fools to jeopardize their interests. The average politician will not, for politicial plums do not grow on the Prohibition bush. Who will then?

Honest God-fearing men who prefer principle to political preferment, men who have not lost faith in humanity, men whom gold cannot buy, and when finally the cause of right shows unmistakable signs of success, the rabble who, having no convictions of their own, flock to the standard of right for no other reason than that of being on the popular side. What matter the party name so that principle be not sacrificed. We must not compromise with evil by favoring any measure that tends to being conciliatory to both evil and good for "They enslave their children's children who make compromise with sin." The Editor of the Record might well read the "Present Crisis" by Lowell and he would find a true parallel in the affairs of this nation to-day with the conditions of affairs at the time this poem written. He might deem it too old fashioned for present day politics. The commercial spirit so dominates this country that many cannot see in politics anything but opportunities for spoils, greed and gain.

The accusation laid at the door of Prohibitionists that it looks as though they were looking for political gain does not come with good grace from one who professes to believe in the cause of Prohibition yet has not the manhood to sacrifice his popularity on the altar of his convictions, but tries to build up with one hand and tear down with the other, it looks to us as if it was a case of save the dear old party at any cost.

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Telegraphic Information Gathered by the Few for the Enlightenment of the Many.

James E. Watson is Victor.

The Indiana Republican State convention at Indianapolis adopted a platform indorsing Vice President Charles W. Fairbanks and instructing the thirty State delegates to the national convention at Chicago to vote and work for his nomination for the presidency and nominated the following State ticket:

For Governor—James E. Watson, Rushville.

For Lieutenant Governor—Fremont C. Goodwine, Williamsport.

For Secretary of State—Fred A. Sims, Frankfort.

For Auditor of State—John C. Billheimer, Washington.

For Treasurer of State—Oscar C. Hadley, Plainfield.

For Attorney General—James Bingham, Muncie.

For Supreme Court Reporter—Geo. W. Self, Corydon.

For Superintendent of Public Instruction—Lawrence McTurnan, Anderson.

For State Statistician—J. L. Peets, Kokomo.

For Judge Supreme Court, Fifth District—Quincy A. Myers, Logansport.

For Judge Appellate Court, First District—David Myers, Greensburg.

Six of the nominations were by acclamation as the candidates were the present Republican State officials and were conceded a second term without opposition. The contest for Governor was eager and it took five ballots to decide it.

Murder in Court Room.

Found guilty of a charge of arson, Henry F. McDonald in the Circuit Court room at Terre Haute, Ind., shot and killed William E. Dwyer, seriously wounded other officers and was himself seriously wounded. The shooting followed the announcement of the verdict of the jury before which McDonald had been tried on a charge of dynamiting stores and a church in Sandford last year. When the jury reported its verdict McDonald jumped to his feet and drew a revolver. He fired at Prosecuting Attorney James A. Cooper, Jr., but missed. Mr. Cooper dodged and McDonald directed his fire at the officers seated around the table. Without an opportunity to defend himself Detective Dwyer was shot down. Almost in an instant police officers and deputy sheriffs in the court room drew their revolvers and opened fire on McDonald. The convicted man fell with half a dozen bullets in his body. Physicians say he cannot live.

Disaster in British Channel.

A dispatch from Portsmouth, Eng., says that during the night maneuvers in the channel, the cruiser Berwick ran down the torpedo boat destroyer Tiger and it is feared several men were drowned. The Tiger was cut in half and speedily sank. Boats from the Berwick and the cruiser Gladiator picked up twenty-two men, one of whom died later of his injuries. It is believed that the Tiger had a crew of forty-five men and that all the others were drowned.

Another Bomb Outrage.

Following the sending of letters demanding money, a bomb was thrown at the home of Joseph Scullitto, in Beaver street, Brooklyn, N. Y. The explosion broke all the windows in the house, blew down the front door and wrecked the vestibule, but the occupants escaped uninjured. The Scullitto home is within a block of that of Selig Silverstein, the man who threw the bomb in Union Square Saturday.

Three Die in Tenement Fire.

Three persons were killed, fifteen were injured, some of them seriously, and the lives of nearly a hundred persons were endangered by fire in a five-story tenement house at 44 Hester street, New York City. The dead are Befel Weinstein, his wife Anna and their 1-year-old son. They were suffocated and burned in their apartments on the fifth floor.

WORK OF CONGRESS

The Senate Thursday devoted considerable time to the credentials of Senator-elect John Walter Smith of Maryland. The result of a long debate was the admission of Mr. Smith. The currency bill was then taken up and amendments were considered. More shafts of sarcasm and invective were aimed at President Roosevelt in the House. Mr. Beall of Texas charged the President with having been guilty of "a disgusting usurpation of power" not only toward the national legislature, but the judiciary as well. God and the future alone knew, he declared, just what niche he was to occupy in the temple of his country. The agricultural appropriation bill was considered for amendment, and when it was laid aside for the day there had been stricken out the provision for new weather stations in the States of Texas, Kansas, Virginia, Michigan, Vermont, Missouri and Indiana.

-:—:-

The Senate devoted its entire session Friday to a consideration of the Aldrich currency bill. After further amending the measure, it was passed by a vote of 42 to 16. The Senate then adjourned until Monday. The question whether or not President Roosevelt is an intolerant man after the fashion of King George III., arose in the House. The discussion was founded on a local newspaper story covering what purported to be the details of an interview between the President and Representative Deikema of Michigan, in which the President was represented as thumping his desk and berating Mr. Deikema for having joined in the report of the subcommittee of the judiciary committee censuring Judge Wilfley of the United States Court in China. Mr. Deikema absolved the President from the suggestion of intolerance, and said he had displayed the greatest liberality in receiving his explanation. The agricultural appropriation bill was taken up, but it had not been materially amended when it was laid aside.

-:—:-

The passage of a large number of bills of minor importance and an extended discussion of a measure to authorize the damming of the Snake River, Washington, occupied the entire time of the Senate Monday. The session was brought to a sudden close by lack of a quorum. Charges of a serious nature against Gifford Pinchot, chief of the forestry bureau, were made in the House by Messrs. Smith of California and Mondell of Wyoming, during the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill. Mr. Smith accused him of entering into a secret understanding with the City of Los Angeles with the view to securing the city valuable water rights in the Owens River Valley as against the interests of private parties having prior claims. Mr. Mondell denounced him for, as he charged, illegally paying the expenses of forest officials in attending conventions in the West. The bill was under discussion all day.

-:—:-

Nearly the entire session of the Senate Tuesday was consumed in consideration of a bill to permit the building of a dam on the Snake river, Washington, and an adjournment was only reached after Mr. Heyburn of Idaho announced that he would not permit a vote to be taken. During the discussion of the bill Senator Teller made a speech against executive encroachment. Several bills of minor importance were passed. After having undergone many changes, the paragraph of the agricultural appropriation bill relating to the bureau of forestry, was finally passed by the House. Messrs. Mondell of Wyoming and Smith of California continued their attacks on the bureau, supported by Messrs. Bonynge of Colorado and Cushman of Washington. These embraced charges that the bureau had created timber monopolies in favor of large corporations, illegally assumed jurisdiction over water rights belonging to the Western States, and juggled with figures in order to obtain large appropriations from Congress. The appropriation for the investigation of soils was increased.

-:—:-

The passage of a bill authorizing the construction of a dam across the Snake River in the State of Washington, and the consideration of a measure for adjudicating the claims of States against the government account of the disposition of the proceeds of public lands, occupied nearly the entire session of the Senate Wednesday. Debate of the agricultural appropriation bill in the House was devoid of the charges and imputations which marked its consideration on Monday and Tuesday. More progress was made with the measure than on any previous day. The discussion dwelt on a proposition for an increased appropriation for the farmers' bulletins, which, however, was refused, and the subject of inquiries into road building, etc., by the department, the trend of opinion being that such work should be encouraged. The session was opened with a bitter attack on Attorney General Bonaparte by Mr. Clark of Florida, who denounced him as being no lawyer, and unfit to hold his office. The occasion for the utterance was the reporting out of committee of a resolution by Mr. Clark calling for a statement of the expense connected with peonage investigations and prosecutions. That the resolution was simply a further and unnecessary attack on the Attorney General by Mr. Clark was the declaration of Mr. Caulfield of Missouri, who led the opposition. The resolution was tabled.

BEVERIDGE APPEALS FOR TARIFF REVISION

Indiana Senator Makes Stirring Appeal for Consideration After Election.

SCORES OPPONENTS OF PLAN.

Republicans in Hoosier State Convention Also Want Local Option and Fairbanks Planks.

Indianapolis correspondence:

Indiana Republicans met in state convention Wednesday to adopt a platform, to present to the country Charles Warren Fairbanks as their choice for the presidency, to instruct the thirty Indiana delegates to the national convention to vote and work for his nomination, and to name a state ticket.

Prior to the opening session the delegates met by districts to name members of the convention committees. The latter met immediately to complete their reports, which, according to the agreement of the party leaders, selected Representative Overstreet of Indianapolis for temporary chairman.

Speech by Beveridge.

Senators Beveridge and Hemenway and Representative Overstreet delivered addresses. Mr. Beveridge in his speech declared the tariff should be revised imediately after the presidential election. He spoke in part as follows:

"It has been the undying struggle for human betterment that has written every reform of the last eight historic years and placed beside the names of Washington, Jackson and Lincoln as a leader of the people toward liberty and light the name of Theodore Roosevelt.

"We must go to the people, not merely boasting of what we did for the people yesterday, but telling them what we are doing for the people to-day and what we will do for the people to-morrow. Every law we have written was bitterly fought and cunningly resisted; yet so wise are those laws that all parties now indorse them, and even men in our own party who secretly opposed them are now publicly their loudest champions.

"The tariff must be revised immediately after the presidential election. To revise it now would lock up business for months of disaster and doubt. He who would refuse to revise the tariff immediately after the presidential election is too ancient to be trusted; he who would revise the tariff on the eve of the presidential election is too hypocritical to be tolerated. But the earliest possible revision of the tariff is the will of the people because it is the demand of conditions and to the people's will and changing conditions Bourbon obstruction must yield.

"Two years ago some of us began this fight. We were met with arrogance from those who think that the world does not move; from interests whom the tariff properly protected when it was made, but whom changed conditions now enable to act like highwaymen to other honest interests; from a purchased press owned by gluttonous corporations and by men whose wealth flowed from obsolete schedules. But success is now in sight, and, as Indiana led the first charge in this battle, so let Indiana lead the last charge that crowns it with victory."

With its organization completed at its first session Wednesday afternoon the Indiana Republican State Convention adopted its platform, elected four delegates-at-large to the National Convention and two National electors-at-large, instructed the thirty Indiana delegates to the National Convention to vote and work persistently for the nomination of Vice President Charles Warren Fairbanks for the Presidency of the United States and took up the task of nominating a State ticket.

Gist of the Platform.

The platform adopted, in addition to instructing for Vice President Fairbanks, indorses President Roosevelt's administration, opposes corporation contributions to campaign funds, favors economy in public expenditures and especially mentioning the army and navy, favors a modification of the financial system without mentioning any particular measure, urges a progressive program of labor legislation, pledges a complete regulation of capitalistic combination in the interest of trade, commerce and the general welfare of the people and urges a revision of the tariff by a special session of Congress to be called early in November, with the recommendation that Congress take immediate steps to secure the proper data by experts. Extension of foreign mail service on the seas is favored, as is the extension of foreign trade, especially with South America. A bureau of mines and mining is urged and waterways improvement is recommended. The abolishment of child labor is demanded. Among the important State issues is a plank favoring a local option law with the county as a unit, the law to be in addition to and supplemental of the present laws regulating the liquor traffic. The platform indorses Gov. Hanly, Chairman Harry S. New of the Republican national committee, United States Senators Beveridge and Hemenway and Chairman Goodrich of the State committee.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade conditions in the Chicago district says:

"The volume of trade, as reflected by payments through the banks, maintains steady recovery, but the commercial mortality is yet high and the process of liquidation, although fatal to many weak concerns, is really placing credit upon a healthier basis. Factory outputs still remain much behind those at this time last year and new demands come forward rather slowly in leading industries, yet there is further evidence of increased distribution, particularly in general merchandise, breadstuffs and provisions.

"Spring exhibits in retail lines command more interest, and wholesale dealings in the staples reach a satisfactory aggregate. Some caution is exercised in making commitments for distant delivery and mail orders from the interior are moderate, but the current buying is well maintained in textiles, footwear, light weight apparel, household needs and food products.

"Mercantile collections throughout the West have almost returned to the normal state, and country storekeepers report seasonable consumption, the buying being much stimulated by warmer weather.

"Farmers, as a rule, find the outlook very promising and, being in a strong position financially, they are expending liberally for machinery and materials for improvements. Country banks are enabled with less difficulty than heretofore to furnish the funds to carry on spring work and shipments of currency from this city are less than at this time last year.

"Financial affairs generally denote decreasing anxiety as to the future, deposits accumulate and the discount rate for choice commercial paper is now more frequently quoted at 5 per cent, although the offerings of manufacturers make a comparatively light showing.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district number 39, against 32 last week and 22 a year ago. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 12, against 10 last week and 4 in 1907."

NEW YORK.

The first week of spring has seen an expansion in retail trade and an enlargement of operations in building lines, especially at the West. Conservative estimates of actual needs govern buying, and replacement of broken stocks is the chief source of jobbing and wholesale demand. Trade in the primary branches is therefore quiet, and operations in industrial lines are below normal. Fall trade is backward, awaiting clearer view of the future crop and price conditions. Industrial conditions are still very irregular, and short or reduced time is practically universal. The iron and steel industry does not show much increase in activity outside of the seasonable lines. The textile trade is still depressed, with short time and wage reductions common in cotton goods manufacture North and South. Fear of a coal strike has subsided and buying is less active in this line. The leather and shoe trades are irregular and unsettled. Shipments of shoes are 26 per cent below last year.

Business failures for the week ending March 26 number in the United States 286, against 303 last week, 166 in the like week of 1907, 169 in 196, 227 in 1905 and 212 in 1904. Canadian failures for the week number 40, as against 39 last week and 21 in this week a year ago.—Bradstreet's Commercial Report.

WHITE PLAGUE NOW DECLARED ON THE WANE

Census Bureau Figures Show a Decrease in Tuberculosis Deaths in 1906.

CANCER IS ON THE INCREASE.

Table of Mortality Rates Announced by Officials of Department at Washington.

Mortality statistics compiled by the census bureau, according to a report recently issued by the government, show a decrease in the death rate among those afflicted with tuberculosis and meningitis and an increase in the mortality from cancer diseases, typhoid fever, whooping cough and violence. The report covers all mortality statistics in the fifteen registration States and the District of Columbia and in seventy-seven cities in non-registration States for the years 1905 and 1906.

The causes of death, with their rates, for 1906, ranked according to the number of deaths for each 100,000, are as follows:

Tuberculosis of lungs	159.4
Pneumonia (including broncho-pneumonia)	149.0
Heart disease	130.7
Diarrhœa and enteritis	122.9
Violence	120.9
Bright's disease and nephritis	99.8
Apoplexy	71.8
Cancer	70.8
Premature birth	34.8
Old age	34.3
Congenital debility	34.2
Typhoid fever	32.1
Bronchitis	30.3
Diphtheria and croup	26.3
Meningitis	25.6

While a part of the decrease in the number of deaths from tuberculosis shown in 1906 as against 1905 is due to the inclusion among the registration States of several with a low mortality rate from this disease, there was also noticeable a noteworthy decrease in the old registration area. Of the total number of deaths 36,032 were shown to be males and 29,309 females, the age of greatest mortality among males ranging from 25 to 29 and among females from 20 to 24 years. South Dakota and Michigan showed the lowest mortality among the States, while Colorado and California had the highest. Neither of the latter States showed an increase in the disease among the native population. New York had the highest mortality rate among the cities, that rate being 503 in 1906, as compared with 536 in 1905.

Cancer was the cause of 29,020 deaths in 1906, of which 11,166 were males and 17,854 females. The age of greatest mortality from this disease is between the ages of 60 and 64. California showed the highest death rate and New Jersey the lowest, while Boston led all the large cities.

Practically all of the increase in the mortality from typhoid fever comes with the inclusion of new registration States. This rate was 28 in 1905 and 32 in 1906. Pennsylvania and Colorado showed the highest death rate from typhoid, while Massachusetts and Rhode Island had the lowest. Pittsburg and Allegheny, Pa., lead the registration cities in mortality from typhoid.

The total number of deaths in the entire registration area for 1906 from all forms of violence was 49,552, corresponding to a death rate of 120.9 per 100,000 of estimated population. The death rate from suicide apparently showed a large increase for each year of the period from 1902 to 1905 and a decrease for 1906.

Deaths from accidental traumatisms numbered 20,842, and the rate was 50.8 per 100,000 of population; the corresponding rate for 1905 was 42.1. Deaths from steam railroad accidents and injuries for the registration area numbered 7,090, and 183 were due to automobile accidents.

Girl's Nerve-Racking Experience.

A midnight battle with three score infuriated blood-sucking bats, which assailed her from all sides, was an experience which came recently to Miss Alice L. Earle of South Norwalk, Conn.

Attacked in bed in the middle of the night, Miss Earle jumped up in alarm, only to be more generally attacked by the vampires. Her nerves stood her in good stead, for she wrapped a bed covering about her head and body, rushed from the room, slammed the door, and fainted in the arms of her maid.

Miss Earle was spending the winter in San Antonio, Texas. Contrary to the custom of these parts, she threw open her window. During the night a terrific thunder storm arose, which drove the bats into the room. When daylight came the attendants of the hotel cabered the room and killed sixty-one bats

CHAPTER XIX.—(Continued.)

She went down the avenue and had a few words with the sentry there. She felt no bitterness against him now—on the contrary, she could afford to laugh at his peculiarities. He was in a very bad humor on account of domestic difficulties. His wife had been abusing him, and had ended by assaulting him. "She used to argey first and then fetch the poker," he said ruefully, "but now it's the poker first and there ain't no argeyment at all."

Kate looked at his savage face and burly figure, and thought what a very courageous woman his wife must be.

"It's all 'cause the fisher lasses won't lemme alone," he explained with a leer. "She don't like it, knock me sideways if she do! It ain't my fault, though, I allers had a kind o' a fetchin' way wi' women."

"Did you post my note?" asked Kate.

"Yes; in course I did," he answered. "It'll be in Lunnon now, most like." His one eye moved about in such a very shifty way as he spoke that she was convinced that he was telling a lie. She could not be sufficiently thankful that she had something else to rely upon besides the old scoundrel's assurances.

There was nothing to be seen down the lane except a single cart with a loutish young man walking at the horse's head. She had a horror of the country folk since her encounter with the two bumpkins upon the Sunday. She therefore slipped away from the gate and went through the wood to the shed, which she mounted. On the other side of the wall there was standing a little boy in buttons, so rigid and motionless that he might be one of Madame Tussaud's figures, were it not for his eyes, which were rolling about in every direction, and which finally fixed themselves on Kate's face.

"Good-mornin', miss," said this apparition.

"Good-morning," she answered. "I think I saw you with Mrs. Scully yesterday?"

"Yes, miss. Missus, she told me to wait here and never to move until I seed you. She said as you would be sure to come. I've been waitin' here for nigh on an hour."

"Your mistress is an angel," Kate said enthusiastically, "and you are a very good little boy."

"Indeed, you've hit it about the missus," said the youth, in a hoarse whisper, nodding his head to emphasize his remarks. "She's got a heart as is big enough for three."

Kate could not help smiling at the enthusiasm with which the little fellow spoke.

"You seem fond of her," she said.

"I'd be a bad 'un if I wasn't. She took me out of the work'us without character or nothing, and she's a-educatin' of me. She sent me 'ere with a message."

"What was it?"

"She said as how she had written instead o' electro-telegraphing, 'cause she had so much to say she couldn't fit it all on a telegraph."

"I thought that would be so," Kate said.

"She wrote to Major—Major—him as is a-follerin' of her. She said as she had no doubt as he'd be down to-day, and you was to keep up your sperrits and let her know by me if any one was a-wexin' you."

"No, no. Not at all," Kate answered, smiling again. "You can tell her that my guardian has been much kinder to-day. I am full of hope now. Give her my warmest thanks for her kindness."

"All right, miss. Say, that chap at the gate hasn't been giving you no cheek, has he—him with the game eye?"

"No, no, John."

John looked at her suspiciously. "If he hasn't it's all right," he said, "but I think as you're one of them as don't complain if you can 'elp it." He opened his hand and showed a great jagged flint which he carried. "I'd ha' knocked his other peeper out with this," he said, "blowed if I wouldn't."

"Don't do anything of the sort, John, but run home like a good little boy."

"All right, miss. Good-by to ye!"

Kate watched him stroll down the lane. He paused at the bottom as if irresolute, and then she was relieved to see him throw the stone over into a turnip field and walk rapidly off in the opposite direction to the Priory gates.

CHAPTER XX.

Late in the afternoon Ezra arrived at the Priory. From one of the passage windows Kate saw him driving up the avenue in a high dogcart. There was a broad-shouldered, red-bearded man sitting beside him, and the ostler from the Flying Bull was perched behind. Kate had rushed to the window on hearing the sound of wheels, with some dim expectation that her friends had come sooner than she anticipated. A glance, however, showed her that the hope was vain. From behind a curtain she watched them alight and come into the house, while the trap wheeled round and rattled off for Bedsworth again.

She went slowly back to her room, wondering what friend this could be whom Ezra had brought with him. She had noticed that he was roughly clad, presenting a contrast to the young merchant, who was vulgarly spruce in his attire. Evidently he intended to pass the night at the Priory, since they had let the trap go back to the village. She was glad that he had come, for his presence would act as a restraint upon the Girdlestones.

As the long afternoon stole away she became more and more impatient and expectant. She had been sewing in her room, but she found that she could no longer keep her attention on the stitches. She paced nervously up and down the little apartment. In the room beneath she could hear the dull, muffled sound of men's voices in a long continuous monotone, broken only by the interposition now and again of one voice which was so deep and loud that it reminded her of the growl of a beast of prey. This must belong to the red-bearded stranger. Kate wondered what it could be that they were talking over so earnestly. City affairs, no doubt, or other business matters of importance. She remembered having once heard it remarked that many of the richest men on 'Change were eccentric and slovenly in their dress, so the newcomer might be a more important person than he seemed.

She had determined to remain in her room all the afternoon to avoid Ezra, but her restlessness was so great that she felt feverish and hot. The fresh air, she thought, would have a reviving effect upon her. She slipped down the staircase, treading as lightly as possible not to disturb the gentlemen in the refectory. They appeared to hear her, however, for the hum of conversation died away, and there was a dead silence until after she had passed.

She went out on to the little lawn which lay in front of the old house. There were some flower beds scattered about on it, but they were overgrown with weeds and in the last stage of neglect. She amused herself by attempting to improve the condition of one of them, and kneeling down beside it she pulled up a number of the weeds which covered it. There was a withered rose bush in the center, so she pulled up that also, and succeeded in imparting some degree of order among the few plants which remained. She worked with unnatural energy, pausing every now and again to glance down the dark avenue, or to listen intently to any chance sound which might catch her ear.

In the course of her work she chanced to look at the Priory. The refectory faced the lawn, and at the window of it there stood the three men looking out at her. The Girdlestones were nodding their heads, as though they were pointing her out to the third man, who stood between them. He was looking at her with an expression of interest. Kate thought as she returned his gaze that she had never seen a more savage and brutal face. He was flushed and laughing, while Ezra beside him appeared to be pale and anxious. They all, when they saw that she noticed them, stepped precipitately back from the window. She had only a momentary glance at them, and yet the three faces, the strange, fierce red one, and the two hard familiar pale ones which flanked it, remained vividly impressed upon her memory.

Girdlestone had been so pleased at the early appearance of his two allies, and the prospect of settling the matter once for all, that he received them with a cordiality which was foreign to his nature.

"Always punctual, my dear son, and always to be relied upon," he said. "You are a model to our young business men. As to you, Mr. Burt," he continued, "I am delighted to see you at the Priory, much as I regret the sad necessity which has brought you down."

"Talk it over afterwards," said Ezra, shortly. "Burt and I have had no luncheon yet."

"I am near starved," the other growled, throwing himself into a chair. Ezra had been careful to keep him from drink on the way down, and he was now sober, or as nearly sober as a brain saturated with liquor could ever be.

Girdlestone called for Mrs. Jorrocks, who laid the cloth. Ezra appeared to have a poor appetite, but Burt ate voraciously. When the meal was finished Ezra drew a chair up to the fire, and his father did the same, after ordering the old woman out of the room, and carefully closing the door behind her.

"You have spoken to our friend here about the business?" Girdlestone asked, nodding his head in the direction of Burt.

"Yes. I have made it all clear."

"Five hundred pounds down, and a free passage to Africa," said Burt.

"An energetic man like you can do a great deal in the colonies with five hundred pounds," Girdlestone remarked.

"What I do with it is nothing to you, gov'nor," Burt remarked surlily. "I does the job, you pays the money, and there's an end as far as you are concerned."

"Quite so," the merchant said in a conciliatory voice. "You are free to do what you like with the money."

"Without axin' your leave," growled Burt. He was a man of such a turbulent and quarrelsome disposition that he was always ready to go out of his way to make himself disagreeable.

"The question is how it is to be done," interposed Ezra. "You've got some plan in your head, I suppose," he said to his father. "It's high time the thing was carried through, or we shall have to put up the shutters in Fenchurch street."

His father shivered at the very thought. "Anything rather than that," he said.

"It will precious soon come to that."

"What's the matter with your lip? It seems to be swollen."

"I had a turn with that fellow Dinsdale," Ezra answered, putting his hand up to his mouth to hide the disfigurement. "He followed us to the station and we had to beat him off, but I think I left my marks upon him."

"He played some hokey-pokey business on me," said Burt. "He tripped me in some new-fangled way, and nigh knocked the breath out of me. I don't fall as light as I used."

"He did not succeed in tracing you?" Girdlestone asked uneasily. "There is no chance of his turning up here, and spoiling the whole business?"

"Not in the least," said Ezra confidently. "He was in the hands of a policeman when I saw him last."

"That is well. Now I should like, before we go further, to say a few words to Mr. Burt as to what has led up to this. I wish you to understand," he said, "that this is no sudden determination of ours, but that events have led up to it in such a way that it was impossible to avoid it. Our commercial honor and integrity are more precious to us than anything else, and we have both agreed that we are ready to sacrifice anything rather than lose it. Unfortunately, our affairs have become somewhat involved, and it was absolutely necessary that the firm should have a sum of money promptly in order to extricate itself from its difficulties. This sum we endeavored to get through a daring speculation in diamonds, which was, though I say it, ingeniously planned and cleverly carried, and which would have succeeded admirably had it not been for an unfortunate chance."

"I remember," said Burt.

"Of course. You were there at the time. We were able to struggle along for some time after this on money which we borrowed and on the profits of our African trade. The time came, however, when the borrowed money was to be repaid, and once again the firm was in danger. It was then that we first thought of the fortune of my ward. It was enough to turn the scale in our favor, could we lay our hands upon it. It was securely tied up, however, in such a way that there were only two means by which we could touch a penny of it. One was by marrying her to my son; the other was by the young lady's death. Do you follow me?"

Burt nodded his shaggy head.

"This being so, we did all that we could to arrange a marriage. Without flattery I may say that no girl was ever approached in a more delicate and honorable way than she was by my son, Ezra. I, for my part, brought all my influence to bear upon her in order to induce her to meet his advances in a proper spirit. In spite of our efforts, she rejected him in the most decided way, and gave us to understand that it was hopeless to attempt to make her change her mind."

"Someone else, maybe," suggested Burt.

"The man who put you on your back at the station," said Ezra.

"Ha! I'll pay him for that," the navvy growled viciously.

"A human life, Mr. Burt," continued Girdlestone, "is a sacred thing, but a human life, when weighed against the existence of a great firm from which hundreds derive their means of livelihood, is a small consideration indeed. When the fate of Miss Harston is put against the fate of the great commercial house of Girdlestone, it is evident which must go to the wall. Our house has for nearly forty years been a bright spot in the darkness. If it should fall now it would be a stumbling block and a scandal. You see, therefore, that greater interests are at stake than the mere dross of this world. Having seen that this sad necessity might arise, I had made every arrangement some time before. This building is, as you may have observed in your drive, situated in a lonely and secluded part of the country. It is walled round, too, in such a manner that any one residing here is practically a prisoner. I removed the lady so suddenly that no one can possibly know where she has gone to, and I have spread such reports as to her condition that no one down here would be surprised to hear of her decease."

"But there is bound to be an inquiry. How about a medical certificate?" asked Ezra.

"I shall insist upon a coroner's inquest," his father answered.

"An inquest! Are you mad?"

"When you have heard me I think that you will come to just the opposite conclusion. I think that I have hit upon a scheme which is really neat—neat in its simplicity." He rubbed his hands together, and showed his long yellow fangs in his enjoyment of his own astuteness.

Burt and Ezra leaned forward to listen, while the old man sank his voice to a whisper.

"They think that she is insane," he said.

"Yes."

"There's a small door in the boundary wall which leads out to the railway line."

"Well, what of that?"

"Suppose that door to be left open, would it be an impossible thing for a crazy woman to slip out through it, and to be run over by the ten o'clock express?"

"If she would only get in the way of it."

"You don't quite catch my idea yet. Suppose that this express ran over the dead body of a woman, would there be anything to prove afterwards that she was dead, and not alive at the time of the accident? Do you think that it would ever occur to any one's mind that the express had run over a dead body?"

"I see your meaning," said his son thoughtfully. "You would settle her and then put her there."

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Larwill is to have a new school building to replace the present dilapidated structure.

Beyer Brothers, of Rochester, have filed incorporation papers in New Jersey. The capital stock is $750,000.

Dr. Amos Carr Jackson, 87 years of age, is dead at Goshen. He had resided in Elkhart County since he was a boy of 8 years.

The Sandusky Portland Cement plant at Syracuse has resumed operations, but with a reduced force, after being closed down for several months.

During an electrical storm recently the residence of Joseph Weaver, near Mt. Etna, Huntington County, was struck by lightning and badly damaged.

Twenty-five people were poisoned recently at Noblesville by canned dried beef. Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Tomlinson and Mrs. John Leonard are in a critical condition.

The Merchants' Hotel, of Elkhart, closed recently by the proprietor, W. H. Riblet, being thrown into a receivership, will be reopened by Edward Williams, of Allegan, Mich.

The ditch which has been ordered to drain the Born's bottoms near Boonville will be twelve feet wide, six feet deep and seven and one-half miles long. It will drain over 1,000 acres of fertile bottom land.

Lightning struck the flagstaff on the Walnut street school building at Washington, completely demolishing it. The electric current followed the copper water troughs to the ground without damaging the building.

George S. Cobb, ex-trustee at Goshen, who was charged with embezzlement, was discharged after the judge had instructed the jury to find for the defendant. The State made out a very weak case against Cobb.

Louis C. Bottorff, of Sellersburg, who is 91 years old, has a handsome black walnut commode that has been in the family for over 200 years, having been brought to this country early in the eighteenth century by Mr. Bottorff's great-grandfather.

Caught by a belt which he was trying to adjust, C. C. Adams, employed at the Indiana Buggy Company's plant in Elkhart, was hurled against the ceiling with frightful force. He escaped, however, with a broken arm and some severe bruises.

An enormous dog owned by William Diffenbaugh near Bippus went mad a few days ago and caused consternation among the residents of all that country as it ran from farm to farm frothing at the mouth and snapping. The animal was finally shot before it had bitten anybody.

James Allen Cook, principal heir of the late John Cook, who left the largest fortune accumulated in Elkhart, and Miss Edith Bailey, stenographer, have been united in marriage. Mr. Cook is director of the First National Bank, of which his father for many years was president.

After two years' constant labor and study, Gustav Mina, florist at the Northern Indiana Hospital for the Insane, at Logansport, has succeeded in producing a deep yellow carnation that is very fragrant. It has attracted much attention. He asserts that it is no freak and says he will grow thousands of them next year.

Many frogs are caught in the Kankakee marshes during the winter months, beginning about the first of November, and continuing through March. One man is credited with having caught 124,000 dozen in a single season, which were shipped to Chicago and sold at a handsome profit. It is not an unusual occurrence for a man to go out and catch enough frogs in a single day to net him from $16 to $20.

James Cromwell, of Terre Haute, has obtained the contract for building the new St. Charles Academy in Crawfordsville, to be erected by the congregation of St. Bernard's Catholic church. Consideration $12,000. There were twenty-six bidders. The new building will be ready for occupancy September 1, at which time the old St. Charles Academy will be abandoned. The old building was one of the landmarks of the city, having been erected in the thirties.

A $10,000 damage suit has been temporarily ended by the death of George Rush, of Logansport. A year ago, while assisting John D. Ferguson, by whom he was employed, in raising a house in the country, he was injured. Ferguson who is a wealthy man, was personally directing the raising of the house, and, with a long scantling, he was trying to pry up one end. He called to Rush to throw his weight on the scantling, and Rush did as ordered. The scantling broke and he fell on one end, receiving internal injuries which caused the death. The damage suit will probably be renewed by his heirs.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Tillman, of Wabash, have just celebrated their golden wedding anniversary.

Blood poisoning in a decayed tooth caused the death of Wilmer McClintock, aged 5, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas McClintock, at Bloomington.

The barn on the farm of Mrs. Noah Miller, near Noblesville, burned recently and seven horses were cremated, besides which a large amount of feed and farming implements were destroyed. The origin of the fire is unknown. The loss will reach $2,600, half covered by insurance.

The sun's rays refracted from a fruit bowl in the display window of the Will Nye jewelry store at Warsaw, ignited the cloth of an umbrella, also on display, and before the condition was discovered the rain-piece had been badly damaged. Mr. Nye has filed a claim with an insurance company with which he holds a policy.

Mrs. Charles Pierce was attacked in her home at Newcastle by a bulldog, secured some time ago for ther protection, as her husband works at night. The dog suddenly became mad and leaped upon the woman. She beat it off with a chair and then seized a gun and killed it. An examination showed the animal had the rabies in a virulent form.

A turtle of large size made its home for several years in a pond on the farm of O. C. Unger, east of Frankfort. It was decided recently to drain the pond and catch the turtle. This was done. When the turtle was caught the figures "'59" were found on its back. It is not known who cut the figures on the shell. Persons who saw the turtle estimated it to be more than one hundred years old.

The report is current that the Hon. George W. Rauch, of Marion, congressman from the Eleventh District, is soon to wed Miss Good, a daughter of Dr. Charles Good, the Republican nominee for the same office which Mr. Rauch now holds. This will make the congressional fight very interesting in case Mr. Rauch is the Democratic candidate for re-election, which he no doubt will be.

The New Washington State Bank, with a capital stock of $25,000 has been opened for business. Over 500 people were present and a banquet was given in honor of the opening. The Directors of the new institution are from the representative business men of the vicinity. The bank will be a great convenience, as the banking business of the community was formerly done at Charlestown and Madison.

Mrs. Ryell T. Miller, a member of the Progress Club of South Bend, and well known in club circles throughout Indiana, has been appointed State delegate by the Indiana State Federation of Clubs to the biennial convention, which will be held at Boston in June. Out of ten delegates from Indiana, Mrs. Miller is the only one to receive the honor by appointment, the others having been elected at the State convention which was held in Indianapolis last fall.

Jefferson Collins, 38 years old, of Columbus, was severely injured by a bolt of lightning while watching a storm from the window of his home. Lightning struck a telephone pole in front of the house, smashing a glass door and entering the house. Collins was holding a piece of a pitchfork handle in his hand, used in poking the fire, and this piece was shattered into many fragments. Collins was unconscious for several hours, but he is convalescing.

An agreement was reached by the city officials of Fort Wayne and the officials of the Fort Wayne Gas Company during a conference before Judge A. B. Anderson, of the Federal Court in Indianapolis, by which the long-standing controversy over the price of gas in Fort Wayne was settled. The company has agreed to furnish gas at 90 cents per 1,000 cubic feet for the first five years and 85 cents per 1,000 for the next five. The city agrees to permit the company to use the natural gas mains.

Jealous because a large bald eagle had been brought to the home as a pet to share the affections of its owners, Tim, the English bull dog of Mr. and Mrs. George Timberlake, of Bloomington, broke through the strong wire cage that held the bird, and after a hard fight killed its rival. When the dog got through with the job his mouth was torn on both sides and his back was covered with welts and scratches. Mr. Timberlake, although he valued the dog highly, was compelled to call in the police to shoot it. The eagle had been captured several weeks ago by school boys who secured it by crippling its wing. Mr. Timberlake had the wing almost healed and was going to ship the bird next week to the Fairmount park, in Philadelphia, having been offered $70 for it.

Pressing Down Pains

are a sign of serious female complaint, that should have immediate attention.

If you begin in time, you can generally treat yourself at home, without the need of consulting a physician, by the regular use of Cardui, the well-known remedy for woman's ills.

Composed of purely vegetable and perfectly harmless medicinal ingredients, being, besides, a gentle, non-intoxicating, strengthening tonic,

WINE OF CARDUI

WOMAN'S RELIEF

relieves all female complaints.

"My wife," writes John A. Rodgers, of Hampden Sidney, Va., "was nothing but a walking skeleton, from female trouble. She suffered agonies with bearing-down pains, backache and headache. Doctors failed to relieve her, so she took Cardui, and is now entirely cured."

Affairs at Congress.

There is very little agreement among members of the House and Senators to what will be accomplished in the way of legislation during the possible two months continuance of the present session of Congress. Two weeks ago it was thought that Congress would adjourn the middle of May. Now it is believed that the earliest day of adjournment will be the first of June. The Republican majority had not intended to do much more than pass the appropriation bills, but the country has been heard from in an emphatic and urgent way and the President, reflecting the demands of the country, has presented several messages to Congress. His admonition, seconded by those of the Democratic leader of the house are evidently having their influence on what the Hon John Sharp Williams calls the "passivity" of the Republican majority. It is believed that Congress is getting busy with the intention of doing all that can be done before adjournment. The bills that will, in all probability be passed are: first, a bill prohibiting child labor in the District of Columbia with possible amendments affecting the general question of child labor. Then, it is probable that a bill appointing a tariff commission will become a law. But, if it is not reached this session, it will surely pass at the next session of the Sixtieth Congress. All shades of political opinion are in agreement that the improvement of the tariff schedules is such a stupendous task that it cannot be accomplished in one session. Hence the wisdom of a commission of experts to classify and tabulate the various articles subject to the tariff.

It is expected that a wise and sane amendment to the Sherman Anti-Trust Law will be passed before before adjournment. With reference to Democratic support, the leader of the Democratic minority in the House, John Sharp Williams says: "In so far as the things urged by the President are good things, I would like the country to know that all he has to do is to deliver twenty or twenty-five Republican votes in favor of them. These, conjoined with the solid Democratic votes, will put them through."

DeKalb County Prohibitionists. Attention!

The Prohibitionists of DeKalb county and all haters of the liquor traffic are invited to meet in convention at Waterloo, Indiana, at two o'clock, April 14th, to select delegates for the State Convention and nominate a county ticket and to attend to other business that may come before the convention,

A grand mass meeting will be held in the evening, which will be addressed by that noble patriot and orator, Michael J. Fanning. We earnestly urge that all Prohibitionists be present at these two meetings as we want to select men who will win in November.

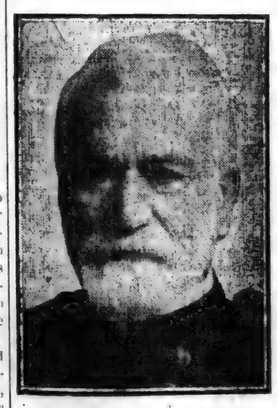
General Howard

Famous Soldier and Philanthropist For Whom a Higher Rank Is Proposed—Once an Indian Fighter.

IT was the late Senator Redfield Proctor of Vermont who introduced in the senate the bill afterward passed by that body placing General Oliver Otis Howard on the retired list of the regular army as a lieutenant general. The movement to honor the distinguished general in this way did not originate with him, for he is as modest as he is courageous. The suggestion was at once indorsed all over the country, for it was felt that such a recognition of the services of the last surviving corps commander of the Federal forces in the civil war would be most fitting. It is considered doubly deserved because of the great value of General Howard's work as a citizen in the field of philanthropy and education as well as his heroism upon many battlefields. He is a veteran of two wars and of numerous Indian campaigns, and as a soldier of the cross and an ambassador of peace he has earned the undying gratitude of his countrymen. He has received the degree of LL. D. from several institutions of learning, has been made a chevalier of the French Legion of Honor, has received a medal of honor from congress and has been president of the Medal of Honor Legion.

General Howard will be seventy-eight in November. Leeds, Me., was his birthplace, and he graduated at twenty from Bowdoin college. Four years later he graduated from West Point academy and saw his first field service in the Seminole campaign in Florida. He was a professor of mathematics at West Point when the civil war broke out and at once asked for a leave of absence, but it was refused him. "Well, then, here is my resignation," said young Howard. "My country needs me." And he left West Point and returned to his native state, where he was given command of the Third Maine volunteers, the first three year regiment from the state. To mention the battles in which he participated would be almost an enumeration of the big battles of the war. He was a leader in twenty-two noted engagements, marched with Sherman to the sea, lost an arm at Fair Oaks, several times had his horse shot under him and in 1864 was appointed commander of the Army of the Tennessee. His great work immediately following the civil war was performed as commissioner of the Freedmen's bureau. During the nine years from 1865 to 1874 he served in this capacity, distributing $13,000,000 and solving for the government the problem of putting the liberated slaves on their feet. Then came his service in Indian campaigns. He commanded in the Nez Perce campaign and in the Bannock war and has written several books about his experiences with Indians, many of whom he has won over from hostility to the United States government to loyalty to it. He reached the rank of major general in 1886 and in 1894 went on the retired list.



GENERAL OLIVER OTIS HOWARD.

General Howard has always been noted for his moral as well as physical courage and stood out against intemperance and profanity in the army when it was not very popular to do so. At Bowdoin he was known as "pious," but he could whip any man in his class. Going through New York on his way to the front in 1861, he was tendered a banquet at the Astor House. Much wine was drunk. When it came his turn to respond to a toast he raised a glass of water and said:

"Gentlemen, our country is in danger. I go at its call to do my duty. The true beverage of the soldier is cold water. In this I pledge you."

It is said that while a student at Bowdoin a classmate went on a disgraceful spree, and report had it that young Howard was the offender. He was engaged at the time to a Miss Walt of Portland, but her parents forbade him to visit their home. It was six months before the real facts became known, and during that time Howard suffered so much that he never afterward touched liquor.

In talking of the battle of Fair Oaks the general once said: "I was shot in the wrist. Twenty minutes after my first wound I was hit by a ball in the left elbow which passed to my right arm and shattered the bone. I was so intent on victory that I did not know I was hurt. Later I was placed on a table and put to sleep, and when I awoke my strong right arm was gone."

Nervous Break-Down

Nerve energy is the force that controls the organs of respiration, circulation, digestion and elimination. When you feel weak, nervous, irritable, sick, it is often because you lack nerve energy, and the process of rebuilding and sustaining life is interfered with. Dr. Miles' Nervine has cured thousands of such cases, and will we believe benefit if not entirely cure you. Try it.

"My nervous system gave away completely, and left me on the verge of the grave. I tried skilled physicians but got no permanent relief. I got so bad I had to give up my business. I began taking Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. In a few days I was much better, and I continued to improve until entirely cured. I am in business again, and never miss an opportunity to recommend this remedy." MRS. W. L. BURKE, Myrtle Creek, Oregon.

A Woman Tells How To Relieve Rheumatic Pains.

I have been a very great sufferer from the dreadful disease, rheumatism, for a number of years. I have tried many medicines but never got much relief from any of th em until two years ago, when I bought a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. I found relief before I had used all of one bottle but kept on applying it and soon felt like a different woman. Through my advice many of my friends have tried it and can tell you how wonderfully it has worked.—Mrs. Sarah A. Cole, 140 S. New St., Dover, Del., Chamberlain's Pain Balm is a liniment The relief from pain which it affords is alone worth many times its cost. It makes rest and sleep possible. For sale by H. Hugh Harter.

The funeral of Hugh Harter Monday afternoon was well attended, showing the respect in which he was held. Hugh Harter was a member of Co. G, 142nd Regt. Ind., in the great War of the Rebellion. During his services he was severely injured which all his life since the war, has incapacitated him from doing manual labor, but notwithstanding his injuries he was active and energetic in supporting his family. He had the reputation of being an honest man and a patriot. He was held in high esteem by his comrades of the war and the public generally. About twenty-five of his old comrades attended his funeral. He was buried by his comrades of the G. A. R. Funeral sermon by Rev. Hill of the U. B. church of which he was a member. Comrades were in attendance from Hicksville, O., and St. Joe., One by one the old soldiers of the great War of the Rebellion are passing away: soon the great army of 1861-5 will be no more. Mr. Harter's death occured Saturday forenoon, April 4, 1908.

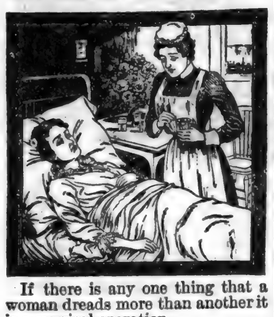
A SURGICAL OPERATION



If there is any one thing that a woman dreads more than another it is a surgical operation.

We can state without fear of a contradiction that there are hundreds, yes, thousands, of operations performed upon women in our hospitals which are entirely unnecessary and many have been avoided by

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

For proof of this statement read the following letters.

Mrs. Barbara Base, of Kingman, Kansas, writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"For eight years I suffered from the most severe form of female troubles and was told that an operation was my only hope of recovery. I wrote Mrs. Pinkham for advice, and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it has saved my life and made me a well woman."

Mrs. Arthur R. House, of Church Road, Moorestown, N. J., writes:

"I feel it is my duty to let people know what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I suffered from female troubles, and last March my physician decided that an operation was necessary. My husband objected, and urged me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and to-day I am well and strong."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, and backache.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

HIS WHEAT WENT 22 BUSHELS TO THE ACRE.

He Realized $18 per Acre from It, While Oats Gave Him $17 an Acre.

Moose Jaw, Sask., Nov. 18, 1907.

Writing from Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, Mr. S. K. Rathwall says:

"I have much pleasure in saying that on my farm this year I had 500 acres in wheat, and 120 acres in oats. My wheat averaged about 22 bushels per acre, and I had 200 acres cut before the frost, which I sold at 85 cents per bushel, thus realizing on that wheat $18 per acre, not counting cost of twine, seed and labor. With regard to the other 300 acres of wheat, it got touched with frost, but is worth 60 cents per bushel. It will net me $13 per acre, but I do not intend to sell it at that price, as I can make more money by feeding it to hogs.

"My oats turned out about 50 bushels to the acre, and at 35 cents per bushel will give me $17 to the acre, not counting seed, twine and labor.

"On account of the late spring, a percentage of the grain was touched with frost; but on account of good prices, farmers will realize a fair profit on their farms even this year. We are as usual up against a shortage of cars to get our grain removed."

During 1906 the telegraph and telephone poles used in this country amounted to 3,574,666, having an average valuation of $2.65 each.

New Style of Sleeping Car.

On the Shore line of the New York & Hartford Railroad a new style of sleeping car has been adopted for the midnight express. It was used for the first time a few nights ago on the express leaving the city at midnight, says the New York Times.

Instead of the berths being separated from the rest of the car by curtains, each passenger will be able to obtain a compartment which approaches in size the average size single rooms of a hotel, and fitted with toilet conveniences. There will be ten of these in each compartment with two berths in each room. The rooms will open out on a corridor running the length of the car, and may be taken in suites. Doors open from one compartment to another so that members of the same party will not be separated.

In the new cars rare woods have been used. In one apartment the finishing is in tigerwood, which resembles the markings of a tiger. In another a wood from the Philippines is used, of which the experts at Washington have not yet determined the origin and species. Jigue wood, Spanish mahogany and goubaril are other of the unusual finishings which have been employed to make these cars luxurious and comfortable.

Flies are not the only things found in amber. In a big mass of clear amber, dredged up out of the Baltic sea recently, there was distinctly visible in its interior a small squirrel—fur, teeth and claws intact.

THEY GROW

Good Humor and Cheerfulness from Right Food.

Cheerfulness is like sunlight. It dispels the clouds from the mind as sunlight chases away the shadows of night.

The good humored man can pick up and carry off a load that the man with a grouch wouldn't attempt to lift.

Anything that interferes with good health is apt to keep cheerfulness and good humor in the background. A Washington lady found that letting coffee alone made things bright for her. She writes:

"Four years ago I was practically given up by my doctor and was not expected to live long. My nervous system was in a bad condition.

"But I was young and did not want to die, so I began to look about for the cause of my chronic trouble. I used to have nervous spells which would exhaust me and after each spell it would take me days before I could sit up in a chair.

"I became convinced my trouble was caused by coffee. I decided to stop it and bought some Postum.

"The first cup, which I made according to directions, had a soothing effect on my nerves and I liked the taste. For a time I nearly lived on Postum and ate little food besides. I am today a healthy woman.

"My family and relatives wonder if I am the same person I was four years ago, when I could do no work on account of nervousness. Now I am doing my own housework, take care of two babies—one twenty, the other two months old. I am so busy that I hardly get time to write a letter, yet I do it all with the cheerfulness and good humor that comes from enjoying good health.

"I tell my friends it is to Postum I owe my life to-day."

The Handy Doctor in Your Vest Pocket

IT'S a thin, round-cornered little Enamel Box—

When carried in your vest pocket it means Health-Insurance.

It contains Six Candy Tablets of pleasant taste, almost as pleasant as Chocolate.

Each tablet is a working dose of Cascarets, which acts like Exercise on the Bowels and Liver.

It will not purge, sicken, nor upset the stomach.

Because it is not a "Bile-driver," like Salts, Sodium, Calomel, Jalap, Senna, nor Aperient Waters.

Neither is it like Castor Oil, Glycerine, or other Oily Laxatives that simply lubricate the Intestines for transit of the food stopped up in them at that particular time.

* * *

The chief cause of Constipation and Indigestion is a weakness of the Muscles that contract the Intestines and Bowels.

Cascarets are practically to the Bowel Muscles what a Massage and Cold Bath are to the Athletic Muscles.

They stimulate the Bowel Muscles to contract, expand, and squeeze the Digestive Juices out of food eaten.

They don't help the Bowels and Liver in such a way as to make them lean upon similar assistance for the future.

This is why, with Cascarets, the dose may be lessened each succeeding time instead of increased, as it must be with all other Cathartics and Laxatives.

Cascarets act like exercise.

If carried in your vest pocket, (or carried in My Lady's Purse,) and eaten just when you suspect you need one, you will never know a sick day from the ordinary ills of life.

Because these ills begin in the Bowels, and pave the way for all other diseases.

"Vest Pocket" box 10 cents. 737

FEED BABY WHAT IT WANTS.

It Lets You Know Unmistakably When It Needs Food.

"A baby knows when he wants to eat, and is provided with an excellent and most musical apparatus for conveying that fact to your apprehension," says Dr. Woods Hutchinson, in the Woman's Home Companion. "He knows what he wants, and will reject vigorously what doesn't suit him. And you may be sure that he knows far better than most adults when he has had enough.

"This faculty is present from his very earliest appearance upon the stage of life. During the first three days of his existence the healthy baby cries but little and sleeps almost constantly; and we have now discovered that during this period he not only requires no food, but is better off without it. He is still digesting and living upon the nourishment in his blood derived from the veins of his mother, and until that process is completed, food in his little stomach is a foreign body. In fact, the impression that colic or 'colickiness' in a baby is a natural characteristic is chiefly due to the senseless insistence of officious nurses and anxious mothers upon crowding things into the baby's stomach during his first three days. There is another clear indication on the part of Nature of this fact, if we had only been open minded enough to see it, in that there is no natural supply of nourishment for the child until the close of these three days. The horrible things that are poked into the unfortunate baby's mouth in order to correct this stupid oversight on the part of Nature and keep it from starving to death would almost stagger credulity.

"His faculty of knowing what he wants in the way of food is equally to be trusted. He is largely a creature of circumstances here, and if what he really likes doesn't happen to be offered him, he of course can indicate no preference for it. He vastly prefers Nature's own source of nourishment, and is a thousand times justified in his preference. Nature has taken a quarter of a million years in fitting a cow's milk to grow not a baby, but a calf, and a mother's milk to grow a baby, and we cannot expect to completely reverse the process in one generation. Not only is the natural supply a far better food, but it is infinitely freer from risks of contamination and the conveyance of disease."

MODEST.

Darwin an Example of the Diffidence of the Truly Great.

Moncure D. Conway, who recently died in Paris, was the friend of many distinguished men, of whom he had interesting things to tell. Especially pleasing was the glimpse he gave of Charles Darwin, at the height of his great fame, in his country home, Down, near Bromley. Mr. Conway, like all who knew the great naturalist well, was impressed by the singular gentleness and modesty of his character. He was one of the best possible listeners; never despising ignorance, drawing the utmost from intelligence, speaking little and almost with humility on matters not specially within his province.

"In the soft spring morning," said Mr. Conway, "before sunrise, I looked out of my bedroom window and saw Darwin in his garden, inspecting his flowers. His gray head was bent to each bush as if bidding it good-morning.

"When we were presently at breakfast the post came—a pile of letters which the daughters began to open, separating those from friends from the large number from strangers in all parts of the world. A few of these were read aloud for our amusement, letters from crude people reporting to Darwin observations which they believed important.

"One American farmer wrote about the marvelous intelligence of his dog, who always knew when he was about to take a walk, dancing about so soon as he touched his cane. One had some commonplaces to tell about his beans, another about his pigeons. The rest of us laughed, but Darwin said, 'Let them all be pleasantly answered. It is something to have people observing the things in their gardens and barnyards.'"

Not only was the great man unspoiled by his world-wide fame—he could never understand it nor believe in it. When Gladstone, visiting in the neighborhood, came to call on him, Darwin said in all simplicity to his daughter afterward:

"To think of such a great man coming to see me!"

THE Popular Pulpit

THE PURPOSE OF LENT.

By Rev. Guy A. Jamieson.

For there is a time for every purpose and every work.—Ecclesiastes III., 17.

So spoke the wise man, and, though he never dreamed of the season we call Lent, we can apply his words to the forty days preceding Easter, for it is a time for a distinct purpose and work.

The theater and card party do not become suddenly wrong during the Lenten season. We do not give them up for that reason, but because we have set our minds and hearts on other definite things and we will not have time to carry on both successfully.

Lent is a time for self-introspection for taking a religious and spiritual inventory as it were. A time to compare our actual lives with the ideal life we would live. But some one might say we ought to live all the year just as we live during Lent. Suppose we were to try it—do you not think we would soon become very gloomy, abnormal, fanatical, self-centered, morbid, unfitted for the common duties of life? And Christ is the last person who would have us become this. He came teaching men how to live so that life would become a beautiful, blessed thing. Religion is not the end of life. It is only a means to an end, and that end is usefulness and happiness.

But in saying that it would not be desirable to live the religious life of Lent during all the year, we do not speak of the Christ life. In fact it is the purpose of Lent through days of prayer and meditation and work to cultivate the spirit that will enable us to live the Christian life through all the year. And if it does not in a measure serve this end it has failed of its purpose. The purpose of Lent should be to become better men and women, that we may be given to nobler thought, gentler words, kindlier act.

To this end we give up the gayeties of life for a season. Not because they are wrong, but because we want to give ourselves to more serious things. But our prayers, our self-examinations, our attendance upon many services, our curtailment of the luxuries of life will profit us but little if they do not assist us to banish from our minds all skeptical, pessimistic and uncharitable thoughts. All these things are to make us better. They are not ends in themselves and the thought, the prayer, the aspiration that should hover in our souls during the whole of Lent should be "Lord, help me to be better. Help me to grow toward my ideal." And we will find that the Lord will help us if we seek to help ourselves by earnest effort at sacrifice, earnest endeavor toward good.

Not only ought we to struggle against weaknesses and wrong habits, but we should start upon a course of positive rightness. The best way to overcome negative faults is to bring to bear upon them positive virtues. Our sins of omission may be as great a hindrance to our living the Christian life as our sins of commission. Our bad habits may best be overcome by seeking to form good ones. This, I think, is the purpose of Lent. This is the work we should seek to do, if we hope to realize permanent spiritual returns from the season.

BELIEF IN FOREIGN MISSIONS.

By Rev. Silvester Horne, A. M.

Text.—"Go ye therefore and make disciples of all nations."—Matthew 28:19.

I think it is impossible to forget that there are many people to-day who are seriously asking the question, "Are foreign missions a failure?" and that missions are passing through a period of somewhat severe criticism. The question is being put from many quarters, "Would it not be better to leave other people alone and attend very specially to a lack of Christianity in our own institutions at home?"

Missionary societies to-day have a very complex policy to pursue. They have to deal with matters of education, with medical missions, with evangelistic missions. They have to live and do their work under many flags. They have to do what the early evangelists did; they have to come into conflict with many customs, practices, laws and institutions among foreign races, and it is very likely that here and there their policy will be open to attack. But I do not admire the common sense of the men who can say, "Because I disagree with this action or the other of a missionary society, therefore I am going to narrow and whittle down the program of Christianity until it applies simply to the England in which I live." It is not fair, it is not just to Christ, and it is not common sense. Let me remove another misconception. Missions are not the same thing as missionaries. I know certain people who have reminded me of a particular missionary who has been a man of indifferent character. I believe that the general average of missionary character is extraordinarily high, and that missionaries are a very light in the Christian church. But, at the same time, if you can show me one who has failed in character you have done nothing whatever to attack the missionary program of the Christian church.

We have to recognize that if Christianity is going to live at all it is going to live by its big ideals. If it once begins to lose its commanding hope and faith, all will be lost. I do not believe any man has ever seen Jesus Christ who has not seen Him as the Savior of the world. You may see a Christ who is a Savior of England. You may see a Christ if you like who is a Savior of Europe, but you have never seen the principal glory of the Christ until you have seen Him as the Savior of the world. What I say is this: if the thing is true here in England, it is true in India; it is true in China. Truth is not a matter of parallels of latitude. If Jesus Christ is the highest and the best here, He is the highest and the best there. If He is the revelation of God here, He is the revelation of God there. If He is the Savior from sin in London, He is the Savior from sin out there. We have got to see Him as the Savior of the world; and I repeat, only the churches that hold by the big ideals are the churches of power.

SHORT METER SERMONS.

To love tradition is to limit truth.

He rejects happiness who refuses all sacrifice.

Success is the ability to make stepping stones out of stumbling blocks.

There must be something queer about any faith that needs perpetual defending.

Many a man hopes to be a saint while mixing with folks who would corrupt an angel.

To be thinking always of your own advantage is the easiest way to advance backward.

Too many want to hide their dodging of the ten commandments behind doubts about Moses.

The man who says he is too poor to give will never be rich enough to be other than poor in heart.

The only people who dare think they have a right to do nothing are those who are fit for nothing.

When you find a man who is too busy to think of religion you usually find one who is afraid to stop and look at his own record.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't try to reform others until you are right yourself.

Don't preach over the heads of sinners. Souls are lifted up by preaching down to them.

Don't try to be a star in the pulpit. The preacher who does invariably shuts off somebody's sunlight.

Don't ask who your neighbor may be when called upon to do a neighborly kindness. He who stands upon ceremony may fail to find one of Christ's children.

Don't abandon your efforts to help your fellow men because you do not succeed as quickly as you think you ought. In the worst of men there is good which can be found by proper effort.

HYMNS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

Guiding Light.

Light of the world! whose kind and gentle care
Is joy and rest;
Whose counsels and commands so gracious are,
Wisest and best—
Shine on my path, dear Lord, and guard the way,
Lest my poor heart, forgetting, go astray.

Lord of my life! my soul's most pure desire,
Its hope and peace;
Let not the faith thy loving words inspire,
Falter, or cease;
But be to me, true friend, my chief delight,
And safely guide, that every step be right.

My blessed Lord! what bliss to feel thee near,
Faithful and true;
To trust in thee, without one doubt or fear,
Thy will to do;
And all the while to know that thou, our friend,
Art blessing us, and wilt bless to the end.

And then, O then! when sorrow's night is o'er,
Life's daylight come,
And we are safe within heaven's golden door,
At home! at home!
How full of glad rejoicing we will raise,
Savior, to thee our everlasting praise.

UP-TO-DATE DESIGNS FOR THE HOME DRESSMAKER

Fancy Collar, Jabot and Bows.

All sorts of pretty and dainty neckwear is being worn just now and there is always a demand for fresh designs. Here is an altogether attractive stock and very charming jabot and two bows. The stock collar is cut after the newer style, which is higher at the back than at the front, and as illustrated is made of the coarse mesh filet net overlaid with soutache in a simple design and with folds of bias silk at top and bottom. All the pretty trifles, however, can be varied almost indefinitely. For the jabot net, fine lawn, chiffon and all-over lace all are appropriate, while the bows can be made of almost any pretty, dainty material, and the stock allows ample opportunity for the exercise of individual taste and ingenuity. The jabot consists of just one piece laid in plaits on indicated lines. The bows are made in one piece each with little cross over portions and the stock consists of the foundation over which the net and the silk are arranged on indicated lines.

Fancy Blouse Waist.

The pretty, fancy blouse waist is the one most in demand at the moment both for the entire gown and for the odd blouse. This one is adapted to both purposes and would be exceedingly charming made from any of the fashionable thin materials. In the illustration crepe de Chine is combined with chemisette of lace and is trimmed with heavy applique, while the sleeves are finished with dainty little bands and frills of Valenciennes lace. The blouse, however, would be charming in louisine, in voile, in marquisette, in chiffon and all similar materials and also in the fashionable filet and embroidered nets. The soft folds produced by the fulness at the shoulders render

SLEEP BROKEN BY ITCHING.

Eczema Covered Whole Body for a Year—No Relief Until Cuticura Remedies Prove a Success.

"For a year I have had what they call eczema. I had an itching all over my body, and when I would retire for the night it would keep me awake half the night, and the more I would scratch, the more it would itch. I tried all kinds of remedies, but could get no relief.

"I used one cake Cuticura Soap, one box of Cuticura, and two vials of Cuticura Resolvent Pills, which cost me a dollar and twenty-five cents in all, and am very glad I tried them, for I was completely cured. Walter W. Paglusch, 207 N. Robey St., Chicago, Ill., Oct. 8 and 16, 1906."

He Aimed High.

To the uninitiated observer some of the gymnastics performed in a game of football are beyond explanation. The story is told of a half-back who complained to his family about the injustice of allowing football players to wear head protectors.

"I should think it was most necessary," said his mother, who had witnessed one game with many tremors. "Look at the front teeth your poor cousin Frederick lost!"

"That may be," said her son, stubbornly, "but look at me, laid up for two weeks with a lame foot just from kicking a fellow's nose-gear!"

RAISED FROM A SICK BED.

After Being an Invalid with Kidney Disorders for Many Years.

John Armstrong, Cloverport, Ky., says: "I was an invalid with kidney complaints for many years and cannot tell what agony I endured from backache. My limbs were swollen twice natural size and my sight was weakening. The kidney secretions were discolored and had a sediment. When I wished to eat my wife had to raise me up in bed. Physicians were unable to help me and I was going down fast when I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. After a short time I felt a great improvement and am now as strong and healthy as a man could be. I give Doan's Kidney Pills all the credit for it."

Wanted Sport.

Some years ago Jugo's was a noted concert hall in Dublin, and late in the evening the fun was generally fast and furious.

A young Englishman, bent on seeing life, went there one evening, but expressed himself disappointed with the slowness of the place to a Hibernian friend he met there.

"Would you really like to see a row?" said Pat.

"Yes," said the Englishman.

Pat filled a tumbler with cold water and threw it across the table into his face, saying, "Now hit the man next to you, and we'll have some grand sport."

The I. O. O. F. lodge initiated Eugene Hubbard and Fred Armbuster into the mysteries of their order Wednesday night. The ladies of the Rebekah served a fine banquet and the visitors from St. Joe and Edgerton enjoyed a splendid time. The St. Joe team did a degree work in fine style. Over one hundred participated in the banquet.—DeKalb Co. Herald.

Mrs. H. W. Bowman of this place, and Mrs. F. R. Bowman of Spencerville attended an April fool party at Auburn, last Wednesday evening. A large crowd from Garrett were in attendance and all in all a most enjoyable time was had. Luncheon was served. The entertainment was appropriate for the occasion.

Butler has a candidate in the field for the democratic nomination for the office of county recorder in the person of J. M. Norford, whose announcement appears in another column of THE NEWS. Mr. Norford is well known not only in Butler but throughout the country. He is an active and prominent democrat and in former campaigns has been a tireless worker for the success of the democratic ticket in his township and also the county, state and national tickets.

The play of Ben Hur, which was at the Majestic theatre, at Fort Wayne on March 30, 31 and April 1, was well attended by people from this section of the country. Mrs. Wm. Curie, Mrs. Orange Herrick, Hazel Perry, Lora Hull and Fred Leighty were in attendance on Wednesday. One might say that the audience Wednesafternoon, while prepared for all the magnificence of scenery which the art of words could picture before their minds, and having had the chariot race drilled into them by the descriptions in the newspapers, were absolutely unprepared for either the beauty of scenic display or the sweet story which was unfolded during the and which concluded with the healing of the lepers just beyond the crest of Mount Olivet, two of whom were the mother and sister of Judah, Ben-Hur the son of Ithamar.

The scene on the galleys, with the slaves chained by the legs at their posts, rowing until they stumbled and fell from mere exhaustion, while the roar of battle was heard above the din of the rowing master's mallet, was no less thrilling than the chariot race, but the latter appealed more to the audience and brought forth a storm of applause.

The chariot race is beyond description. It must be seen to be appreciated, yet a word might be said as to the mechanism which controls the scene. The four horses in each chariot —Ben-Hur the driver of the one, Messala, the Roman, in the other—are placed upon a treadmill. They go at breakneck speed with drivers lashing them at every jump, the treadmills revolving at lightning speed. Gradually the platform upon which are placed the four brown beauties driven by Ben-Hur, is pulled ahead—the horses never once relaxing their speed —making it appear as though at the end of a long race the browns win. This act has been improved until now it is the most thrilling climax of any play ever produced.

Farewell Surprise.

Rev. J. A. Brown, who for the last four years has been the pastor of the Christian church in this city was given a most pleasant farewell surprise on Monday evening at his home by members of his congregation and other friends. Late in the afternoon he had gone to the home of Mr Joshua Eberly to take supper and returning to his own home at eight o'clock he was surprised to find the rooms filled with friends, about seventy-five in number who gave him a most cordial welcome.

Then Mr. A. N. Wilson acting as spokesman for the party, in an appropriate speech, presented Mr. Brown and wife with a set of silver spoons and a souvenir Auburn spoon, a mark of their esteem for the donees. Rev. Mr. Brown returned his thanks in a few well chosen words. Refreshments were served and the evening passed in a social manner.

Rev. and Mrs. Brown will leave Saturday for their new home, east of St. Joe, where they will reside on the Maxwell farm. Mr. Brown will have pastoral charge of the churches at St. Joe and Coburntown. During his ministry in this city he has made a wide circle of friends. He is a pulpit orator of ability and force and his sermons are always full of good thought and interestingly and eloquently handled.—Courier.

Some Fine Hogs.

S. S. Davis delivered at St. Joe, a few days ago the finest bunch of hogs that has been sent out of this county for many a day. They were Durocs' twenty-seven in number and weighed 8300 pounds an average of over 300 each. They were even in size, color and build. In St. Joe a photograph was taken of the bunch which will be sent to some of the live stock journals to show the world what DeKalb county can produce. Mr. Davis was very proud of this product of his farm and well he may be.—Ex. Mr. Davis received $4.50 per hundred when the market at that time was only 4 or 4.10 owing to the bunch to the bunch being so large and in such good shape.

Obituary.

William Nelson was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, January 17, 1826, and departed this life in his farm home in DeKalb county, Indiana, March 27, 1908, at the age of 82 years, 2 months, 10 days. He was one of a family of eleven children, ten of whom grew to manhood and womanhood.

Mr. Nelson spent his boyhood days with his father on the farm. In 1847 he was united to Malinda Thorpburg in marriage. To this union were born nine children, two of whom died in infancy. Mrs. Grill and Mrs. Hart, of St. Joe, Indiana, John, Allen, Emmet and Mrs. C. A. Rodget of Hicksville, and Elmer D., who resides near the old farm in Newville township, are the remaining children. In 1854 he, with his wife came to Newville township DeKalb county, Indiana, where he resided continuously, with the exception of three years spent in Hicksville. In 1852 he united with the Methodist church, to which faith he was ever loyal in attendance and support. What he gave was given cheerfully. His long life afforded ample opportunity for service to the cause of right. He loved God with heart and hands. Having moved into the woods he was compelled to labor incessantly to clear his farm and provide for his home. His rugged physique enabled him to be always on duty wherever called upon.

Mr. Nelson having lived in the one community more than half a century needs but little said of his career. His life has been written upon the hearts of relatives and friends, and his deeds speak in better language than these broken words. In business scrupulously honest: in the church loyal and true: in his home a loving husband and father, we leave his record with those who know him best.

The widow, a companion of 61 years two sisters, Mrs. Mary Cahill and Mrs. Isaih Davis, seven children and many grandchildren remain. It is hard to say farewell: but do not mourn as those who have no hope. He did not die: he fell asleep to to await the new day when we shall meet him in the glad reunion.

DESCRIPTION. Made in all sizes. It is lively and easy riding, very durable and lined inside with a special quality of rubber, which never becomes porous and which closes up small punctures without allowing the air to escape. We have hundreds of letters from satisfied customers stating that their tires have only been pumped up once or twice in a whole season. They weigh no more than an ordinary tire, the puncture resisting qualities being given by several layers of thin, specially prepared fabric on the tread. The regular price of these tires is $8.50 per pair, but for advertising purposes we are making a special factory price to the rider of only $4.80 per pair. All orders shipped same day letter is received. We ship C. O. D. on approval. You do not pay a cent until you have examined and found them strictly as represented.

Notice the thick rubber tread "A" and puncture strips "B" and "D," also rim strip "E" to prevent rim cutting. This tire will outlast any other make—SOFT, ELASTIC and EASY RIDING.

We will allow a cash discount of 5 per cent (thereby making the price $4.55 per pair) if you send FULL CASH WITH ORDER and enclose this advertisement. We will also send one nickel plated brass hand pump. Tires to be returned at OUR expense if for any reason they are not satisfactory on examination. We are perfectly reliable and money sent to us is as safe as in a bank. If you order a pair of these tires, you will find that they will ride easier, run faster, wear better, last longer and look finer than any tire you have ever used or seen at any price. We know that you will be so well pleased that when you want a bicycle you will give us your order. We want you to send us a trial order at once, hence this remarkable tire offer.

IF YOU NEED TIRES don't buy any kind at any price until you send for a pair of the special introductory price quoted above, or write for our big Tire and Sundry Catalogue which describes and quotes all makes and kinds of tires at about half the usual prices.

DO NOT WAIT but write us a postal today. DO NOT THINK OF BUYING a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone until you know the new and wonderful offers we are making. It only costs a postal to learn everything. Write it NOW.

Rebekahs Entertain

Forty-one Garrett Visitors in a Most Splendid Manner.

The Rebekahs of this place entertained forty-one Rebekahs from Garrett last Friday afternoon and evening in a most royal manner. They were met at the train and taken to the lodge rooms where they passed away the time merrily until four o'clock, when they were escorted to the home of Mrs. Addie Filley, where an elegant three course supper was served. First course: Biscuit, butter jelly, pickles and cheese; second course escalioped potatoes, veal loaf, and egg salad; third course: cake, fruit and coffee. In the evening regular lodge convened after which they all went to the opera house where the Garrett team conferred the degree of the order upon three candidates, Mrs. Rose Johnston, Miss Fanny Milliman and Clifford Milliman. The degree work which was extra fine, was witnessed by nearly one hundred people. After this, all returned to the lodge hall for light refreshments of ice cream, cake and coffee. The visitors left on No. 47, about midnight, thanking the St. Joe people for the splendid entertainment given them.

Local Items.

J. C. Hull and wife and Mrs. Blanch Leighty were at Auburn, Thursday.

A letter remains in the postoffice at this place addressed to Miss Helen Parish.

James Gibford and wife of Auburn, and Dennis Burley and wife took dinner with C. B. Leighty and family, Sunday.

A marked copy of the Sherwood Chronicle was received at this office last week. The article to which our attention was called was "The Good Road and Improvement League". The object of this organization is to have better roads without increasing the township tax. A kind of mutual agreement among farmers to work the roads adjacent their farms. Sub-leagues will organized under the "Big League" The roads will be properly drained, smothed and graveled. They are also to keep grass mowed down along the roadside makin every thing look better. Country roads are being used more and more by city people in the use of automobiles and they would appreciate good roads. It is a good thing every way and would probably be a good thing nearer home.

Mrs. C. R. Price spent several days with her sister, Mrs. Kilpatrick, at Ft. Wayne.

Mrs. Sam Mumaw and Miss Grace Sechler visited over Sunday with relatives in Fort Wayne.

The Chicago White Sox played ball with Fort Wayne Sunday, the game resulting in a score of 8 to 1 in favor of the Sox. Those from this place who witnessed the game were:—C. W. Mutzfeld, Ed Leighty, Frank Baker, Grover Curie, James Smith, Floyd Ridgway, Tom Abel and Henry Hathaway.

The Coburntown Dramatic Club, assisted by the band, gave an entertainment in Widney's opera house on last Saturday evening. The patriotic band concert given in the evening was good. The evening's program consisted of vocal solos, piano solos and pieces by the band together with a 3 act melodrama entitled "Phyllis, the Beggar Girl." The characters in this piece were all young people of Coburntown and they certainly carried out their parts to their credit. The opera house was crowded, over 400 being present. An admission of 10 cts was charged which was within the reach of all. The purpose of the entertainment was to raise money to buy the band uniforms. The band boys are making a success of it and all they need is encouragement. Should they give another entertainment here the people will, no doubt, help them as they were all well pleased.

Fixing of Easter.

It has been over 1,500 years since the rule was adopted which makes Easter the first Sunday after the first full moon after the sun crosses the line. By this arrangement Easter may come the 22nd of March or as late as April 25th, but must oscillate between these days mentioned. The word "Easter" is said to be from the German "oster" (rising) and is the christian passover or festival of the ressurrection of Christ. The English name for the day is probably derived from that of the old Teutonic goddess Ostera, whose festival occurred at about the same time as our celebration of Easter.

The proper time for celebrating the festival was a theme which gave rise to much heated discussion among early christians. The question was fully considered and finally settled at the council Nice, 325, A. D. by adopting the rule which makes it fall upon the first Sunday after the first full moon occuring after March 21. During the century Easter fallen from one to four times on every date between March 22, and on April 25 except March 24, which has been skipped entirely.

$50,000 Fire at Elwood.

Fire destroyed a three-story building owned by the Lederer-Hene Company, on South Anderson street, Elwood, Ind., causing a loss estimated at $50,000. For a time the entire business section of Elwood was threatened and it was not until assistance arrived from Anderson that the fire was brought under control. The business block was one of the best in Elwood. The fire originated from an unknown cause. It was discovered in the rear of the basement, which was stocked with goods. The Kramer Grand Theatre, just across the street, was several times ablaze.

Students Expelled from College.

It was announced at chapel services at Clemson College, in Columbia, S. C., that 257 members of the sophomore and freshmen classes had been dismissed, in addition to the forty-eight juniors expelled on Friday last. This probably is the most wholesale expulsion in the history of the United States. The cause alleged was insubordination in an April fool prank. At the time of the last commencement there was trouble of a similar nature with the senior class, over a nightshirt parade, and Captain C. M. Clay, of the United States army, the commandant, resigned.

King Edward Has Influenza.

A dispatch from London says: The King's absence during the cabinet crisis caused much comment and criticism as well as suspicion that there may be some underlying reason connected with his majesty's health that a semi-official explanation was issued to the effect that his visit to Biarritz was undertaken as a holiday in conformity with the strong opinion of his majesty's medical adviser, owing to repeated attacks of influenza, to which the King has been subject during the spring for a number of years past.

Bad Blaze at Richmond, Ind.

Richmond, Ind., experienced one of the worst fires in its history Wednesday night, the west section of the Colonial building, one of the principal office structures in the city, being gutted. The total loss is estimated at $75,000, including damage to the building, which is a $100,000 structure. It was only by the most severe struggle that the flames were kept from the building of the International Harvester Company, which adjoins the Colonial building on the south.

Mr. Cleveland Has Been Ill.

A dispatch from Lakewood, N. J., says: Mrs. Grover Cleveland, when asked concerning a report that Mr. Cleveland was seriously ill, said: "Mr. Cleveland has been ill during the last week but is much better this week and hopes in a few days to be quite well."

Receiver for Telephone Company.

Vice Chancellor Howell announced the appointment of Frederick T. Johnston, of New York City, as receiver of the United States Independent Telephone Company, which was recently declared insolvent. The company is incorporated for $50,000,000.

Mrs. Sage Gives $250,000 to Princeton.

At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of Princeton University announcement was made of the gift of $250,000 from Mrs. Russell Sage for a dormitory building to be used by members of the freshmen class.

Blake Sentenced for Life.

Judge McClure on Thursday sentenced Grover Blake to imprisonment for life for the murder of his mother, Mrs. Louisa Blake, which occurred March 21, at the Blake home in Anderson, Ind.

Big Price for Trotting Mare.

Col. J. L. Druin, of Bardstown, Ky., sold to George Isbrook, of Denver, the trotting mare Spanish Queen, record 2:09, by Onward Silver, a transylvania winner, for $12,000.

WORK OF CONGRESS

The session of the Senate Thursday was largely consumed by discussion of a bill to reorganize the public school system in the District of Columbia by placing it under the control of a director appointed by the national commissioner of education. The bill relating to the settlement of claims of States on account of the disposition of public lands was again taken up and the Bacon amendment for settling the accounts of owners of cotton seized by the government during the Civil War, amounting to $5,000,000, was considered, but without results, either on the bill or the amendment. The Senate adjourned until Monday. Carrying a total of $11,508,806, the agricultural appropriation bill was passed by the House. During the debate a brief flurry was created by Mr. Harrison of New York, a Democrat, characterising as socialistic the bill of Minority Leader Williams providing for the utilization of the treasury surplus in the construction and improvement of roads in the several States. With the agricultural bill out of the way, the Democrats, under the leadership of Mr. Williams, conducted a successful filibuster against the transaction of any further business. At 10:10 p. m. a motion to adjourn until Friday was forced through by the majority.

The Senate was not in session Friday. The Democratic filibuster in the House was continued all day. The gag rule was finally applied to stop the debate on the district bill.

The Senate was not in session Saturday.— By adopting a sweeping cloture rule in the House the Republicans left to the Democrats only very limited powers. No longer can a filibuster be conducted against sending to conference bills with Senate amendments; no longer can a motion to close debate be amended or discussed, and no longer can a motion to adjourn take precedence over a motion to take a recess. After the adoption of this rule the House resumed its wonted aspect and business proceeded in an orderly manner. One of the few privileges left to the Democrats was to force a roll call on adjournment, and this they did, but to no avail, as the motion carried overwhelmingly.

The army bill, carrying an appropriation of almost $100,000,000, was passed by the Senate Monday, practically as reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. The bill materially increases the pay of officers and enlisted men. A resolution introduced by Mr. Foraker was adopted calling on the Secretary of War for the names of all former soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, discharged without honor on account of the Brownsville affray, who have applied for re-enlistment. Beyond forcing roll calls on the approval of the journal and on adjournment the Democrats of the House offered no obstruction to the orderly transaction of business. Being suspension day, several important bills were put through by practically unanimous vote. Among these was the Sterling employers' liability bill, only one vote being recorded against it, that of Mr. Littlefield of Maine.
